RADIO OPERATOR IS ELECTROCUTED

CHICAGO, July 12 — Lester J. Wolf, 19 years old, said to have been on of the youngest licensed radio broadcast operators in the country, was killed early Saturday morning as he was endeavoring to replace a blown fuse at Station WOK in Homewood.

Vibrations caused by applause of a dance number broadcast through the station, were said to have caused the fuse to blow out.

George W. Allen, studio director for WOK, had announced an instrumental number when the broadcasting apparatus went dead. He then telephoned to Herman Pomy, chief operator, requesting speedy repairs.

Young Wolf went into the battery-room alone, and was replacing the fuse when he was knocked down by the power, which he had failed to shut off. When Pomy entered the room Wolf had regained his feet, and assured Pomy that he had not been hurt. Then he lapsed into unconsciousness, and died within a few seconds.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Wolf, were in Buffalo on a vacation when notified today of their son's death.

Railroad Issues Lead Activities At New York

NEW YORK, July 12. Canadian Press. — Standard railroad issues and high priced industrials shared the leadership of the upward movement in the stock market to-day as buying activities were resumed on a broad scale. Easy money conditions fostered continuance of pool operations which carried a number of influential stocks to new high levels.

This should have read George Street Church orchestra, which, with about twenty-five members, under direction of the leader, Mr. W. H. Cunningham, provided some excellent numbers during the evening.

Eighty-One Lodges March in Procession Celebrating Twelfth

Despite Inclement Weather, Parade Assembled in Lindsay Was the Largest Gathering Ever Organized By Orange Association in Victoria County—Stirring Addresses Outlined Principles of Order.

VIMY RIDGE, PETERBOROUGH WON LADIES' LODGE PRIZE

(By a Staff Reporter.)

LINDSAY, July 13.—Despite a continual downpour of rain which lasted through the forenoon, the parade of the Orange Association held here yesterday proved to be the largest gathering of any kind ever held here.

Many an anxious eye was cast towards the sky, as time went on and the rain showed no signs of abating, but shortly after noon the showers ceased and the sun shone out in all its splendor.

The big programme of sports that had been arranged for the morning had to be cancelled, but otherwise everything went according to the original schedule.

Altogether there were 81 lodges in the parade, which, it is said, constitutes a record for any "Twelfth" celebration ever held in this part of the country.

A number of ladies' lodges featured the parade and their appearance along the line of march was the signal for repeated bursts of applause from the bystanders.

Peterborough lodges annexed two of the prizes that were offered: Vimy Ridge Lodge, Peterborough, took the prize for being the largest ladies' lodge in the parade; The Peterborough Juvenile Lodges, one of boys and one of girls together with their fife and drum band so captured the eyes of the three judges with their steady marching, neat appearance and good playing that, though there were no prizes offered for juvenile lodges, it was recommended to the committee that they be given a special prize.

Other prizes were as follows: Best brass band, Cobourg Kiltie Band; special mention, Oakwood. Best marching, Haliburton. Largest lodge in parade, North Verulam. Best dressed lodge, Hartley. Best dressed ladies' lodge: Royal True Blue, Oshawa. Best fife and drum band, Bowmanville. Lodge coming from the longest distance, Longford.

The three judges for the occasion were Major J. I. Hartt, Orillia; Lieut.-Col. G. A. Weeks, Lorneville, and F. H. Bounsall, Bowmanville.

At the park, where the speeches were delivered, the following gentlemen had seats on the platform: Dr. T. E. Kaiser, M.P.; T. H. Stinson, K.C., M.P., R. J. Patterson, M.P.P.; Major J. I. Hartt; Lieut.-Col. G. A. Weeks; F. H. Bounsall; E. A. Peck, M.P.; His Worship Mayor Wilkinson; J. N. Kennedy; J. R. Mark, M.P.P.; W. H. Bradburn, M.P.P.; E. F. Reid; Roland Denne; S. M. Scott, and W. Magee.

W. Magee

W. Magee, Master of Victoria County, chairman for the occasion, in a brief speech welcomed the brethren of all the lodges and expressed his thanks to them for their assistance in making the celebration such a great success.

Mayor T. Wilkinson

His Worship the Mayor declared that he considered it the greatest honor he had ever had bestowed upon him when it fell to his lot to welcome the largest crowd that had ever been in Lindsay. "We all welcome you," he said. "It's a good town—a real town, and we want you to go home thinking it is one of the best in the province." He extended an official invitation for the association to make their parade at Lindsay next year and concluded with the remark "Not only our latch strings are out but every door will be open."

J. R. Mark, M.P.P.

"I am proud to have this privilege of speaking to you and to be associated with you," said Mr. Mark. The Orange Association originated in Canada not merely as a fraternal society but as a society to perpetuate British ideals and British principles. The Orange Association has given to Canada a century of useful and unselfish service, he said. They have always given service to the Empire in her hour of need. There is yet much for us to do, he declared. New Ontario with its millions of acres of fertile soil and its mighty waterways needs new citizens. It is the duty of every man who calls simself a loyal Canadian to see that it is peopled with good sturdy British stock. In conclusion, he said, "do not let the glorious past become a memory—keep it ever green."

Dr. T. E. Kaiser, M.P.

"Upon this occasion more than any other do I welcome the privilege of being with my fellow Canadians who travel under the banner of the Orange Association," said Dr. Kaiser. This wonderful day, he declared, is not alone for Orangemen—it is a day that should be sacred to every man who is a British subject. You are here today to worship at the shrine of British liberty and freedom, which has sent its message throughout the entire world. The Bible to you is an open book full of faith, science and knowledge. The people of the world have a right to know why this day is celebrated, he declared. No doubt it was a small battle but there was never one more important because it gave freedom and liberty to the British people.

People say Canadians are not a democratic people, but who could be more democratic? he asked. They select their own parliament. The speaker declared that he was not going to talk politics but he said you will hear people say "that our constitution has been violated." "We have none," he said. The only constitution that Canada has is written in your hearts and minds, he said. "We demand our freedom as British subjects and so long as you live as a British subject the Union Jack the flag without any tarnish or frills

COULD COMBAT DEADLY POISON

POWERFUL ANTIDOTE.

PARIS, July 13 (United Press).—One of the secrets of the mysterious monk, Rasputin, which seemed to raise him above other men, which enabled him to control the mind and destiny of the late Czar of Russia, was believed to have been revealed to-day, when Professor Violle communicated to the Academy of Sciences the results of his latest experiments on animals. Violle said, "He had demonstrated that doses of glucose provide an immediate antidate to cyanide of potasium, a quick and deadly poison."

Rasputin, who was finally shot to death by a younger member of the House of Romanoff, frequently was the object of plots and his ability to survive the administration of cyanide had confounded the monk's enemies.

DRINKS POISONED TEA.

WINDSOR, Ont., July 13. — The police are investigating the death of an unidentified man, about 40 years old, found dead from drinking poisoned tea in an alley near Windsor Grove cemetery shortly before noon yesterday.

The theory that he ended his life was discarded by the detectives when they discovered a thermos flask containing tea, with a strong odor of ammonia, beside the body, a cup in the hand and the lips burned. A filled lunch box also was found nearby. The man apparently was a mechanic or an engineer, according to Sergeant Hawkesworth, who took mechanic's tools from his pockets, but no papers. He was 5 feet 9 inches tall; weight about 165 lbs., and wearing a green cap, black shoes and grey working clothes purchased in a windsor store.

BAFFLING MYSTERY.

Mutilated Body of Girl Found Packed in Boxes.

BOSTON, July 13 (Canadian Press).—Police to-day were faced with the most gruesome and baffling murder mystery they have encountered in recent years.

The body of a girl, mutilated, dismembered and unidentified was discovered early to-day by a laborer on a lonely road that runs between two cemeteries in Manhattan District. Police believe the young woman, attractive and apparently refined, had been dead a week, and that her body had been cut up and packed into the two boxes and the burlap bag in which it was found. The only clue left for the police to work on were the knots in the cord which bound the boxes. These were evidently tied by someone familiar with marine knots.

FLAGS OF TRUCE DO DOUBLE DUTY

While France and Spain Prepare Peace Agreement Bombing Continues.

FEZ, Morocco, July 13 (United News).—While France and Spain prepare to sign a so-called Moroccan "peace agreement" in Paris, native Riffians in this section find it necessary to wave white flags at French air plane bombers to make sure their lives will be spared.

French planes have dropped eight tons of bombs in raids near Taza recently. The bombing was directed against the still unfriendly Beni-bourais tribe. Neighboring friendly tribesmen and their families stand on the hills des and wave the white flags at the air planes for the combined purpose of applauding the airmen and assuring them that bombs were not needed in the friendly area.

Ole Swimmin' Hole Stuff Doe sn't Work Here; Astors Like Bathing Parties To Wear Suits

MINOLA, L.I. July 13 (United News).—Even the Vincent Astors, who are so wealthy that they have seen almost everything, are not interested in nude bathing parties in sight of their summer home in the Beacon Hill section.

They are so bored in fact, that Mrs. Astor is said to have declared that she will not go to their summer residence at all if the practice continues.

Other bungalow and wealthy estate owners also have complained to the District Attorney here. An Assistant Prosecutor investigated and found several beach parties in various states of undress, with the result that he is now conferring with town authorities in the hope that police measures may be taken.

MAY ANNOUNCE CABINET TONIGHT SAYS PREMIER ARTHUR MEIGHEN

Keynote Speech Postponed From Friday Due To Organization Work.

QUEBEC MEMBERS.

Calgary Ex-Member Says Duncan Report Is Filthy and Indecent.

OTTAWA, July 13 (Canadian Press) — "Perhaps tonight," said Premier Meighen at noon today when he would announce his cabinet. He spent the morning conferring with those high in the councils of the Conservative party.

Unless there are last minute changes, it is practically certain that R. B. Bennett will be Minister of Finance; S. F. Tolmie, Minister of Agriculture, and H. H. Stevens, Minister of Customs. Also, it is very probable that J. D. Chaplin will be Minister of Trade and Commerce, and Dr. R. J. Manion is a certainty for one portfolio. The name of G. B. Nicholson of East Algoma, is connected with the Labor portfolio.

Quebec Representation

OTTAWA, July 13 (Canadian Perss)—There is little prospect of a cabinet announcement before this evening. It may go over another day.

A number of prominent men from the Province of Quebec are in Ottawa and it is understood that the question of Quebec representation in the cabinet is being actively discussed, inside and outside of the council chamber. It is now regarded as very possible that Hon. E. L. Patenaude will enter the cabinet. One more representative of French speaking Canada also may be sworn in, with or without a portfolio. There are many rumors as to who will be second man but there is nothing definite to go on.

Meeting Postponed.

Premier Meighen's mass meeting here called for next Friday, has been postponed until July 21, officials of the local Conservative Association announced at noon.

It is presumed that the Prime Minister has asked for more time in which to prepare for the meeting. With negotiations for the new Cabinet still going on, he has had little time to prepare his message to the electors.

King's Campaign.

In connection with the report that ex-Premier King would open his campaign in or around Toronto on July 24, Mr. King's office stated to-day that no definite arrangements had been made as to his opening campaign meeting. It is considered likely, however, that he will make his first speech in Ottawa.

'Doctor' Is His Name; He's Not Doctor In Law

TORONTO, July 13. — Canadian Press. — George Rollie Baird, Toronto, has by deed poll filed at Osgoode Hall, adopted the word "Doctor" as his Christian name, and requires all persons to address him as Doctor George Rollie Baird. The Ontario Legislature prevents Chiropractors adopting the title "Doctor."

BUILDING STARTS AT COURT HOUSE

Tenders Were Not Accepted So County Does Work.

J. FINNIE IN CHARGE.

Building operations for the new addition to the court house commenced this morning. The property Committee after considering the tenders submitted, decided that they would build the building by day work and engaged James Finnie to look after the building operations.

This new addition is to be built at the north end of the court house and will extend 40 feet north and 60 feet east. This will be an entirely separate building, and the walls will be of sufficient thickness to be fireproof. The lower story of the building will be occupied by the Registry office, and on the second storey adjacent to the present building will be the offices of the Crown Attorney and the Clerk of the Peace.

The north end of the building will be composed of a vault for the Registry Office.

Could Not Afford Doctor Jewelry Cached In Cellar

JERSEY CITY, July 13 (United News).—Just before she died last Sunday, Mrs. Richard Devaney told neighbors that she was much too poor to afford a doctor.

A search of her basement apartment to-day revealed a cache of $2,580 in twenty-dollar gold pieces, in addition to jewelery worth several hundred dollars.

FORMER DEBTS INCLUDED IN NEW AGREEMENT

Settlement Covers All Former French Debts To Great Britain.

ANNUAL PAYMENTS.

LODON, July 13. Canadian Press—The settlement signed in London yesterday by Finance Minister Caullaux, covers not only the French war debt, but virtually all outstanding accounts between Great Britain and France. Announcement to this effect was made in the House fo Commons to-day by Winston Churchill, the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

French payments he said would be 4,000,000 pounds, 6,000,000 pounds, 8,000,000,000 pounds and 10,000,000 pounds, rising to 12, 0.000 annually, the last named figure being reached in 1930. rom 1930 to 1956, payments would be 12,500,000 annually, rising to 14,000,000 pounds ofr the final 31 years.

There is no safeguarding clause in the agreement itself, but letters between the two governments have mad it clear that in the event of failure ni Germany's eparation payments France may ask for a reconsideration of the arrangement.

COLD RECEPTION SPANISH DICTATOR

Resentment Shown Against Primo De Riveria—Morocco Leader Hailed Enthusiastically.

PARIS, July 13 (Canadian Press) —Resentment flared to-day against the visit of the Spanish dictator, Primo De Rivera for the celebration tomorrow of the birthday of French democracy, while on the other hand Mulai Youssef, Sultan of Morocco, has been acclaimed by the Parisian crowds as a picturesque figure.

The Spanish Premier's presence here is primarily for the purpose of signing the agrement in regard to Morocco and for the consecration of more complete understanding between Spain and France.

While anarchists and Communists took the lead, many radical supporters of the Briand Government resent the presence of General Primo De Rivera on the anniversary of the fall of the famous Bastile prison.

Although Socialist criticized the reception of Sultan Mulai Youssef by the French Government, huge crowds lined the streets to watch him pass upon his arrival yesterday and cheered him enthusiastically.

WILL LAY CHARGES.

Orange Young Britons Involved in Disturbance in Toronto.

TORONTO, July 13. — (Canadian Press.)—Charges will be laid against certain members of the Orange Young Britons Lodge alleged to have been involved in yesterday's parade disturbance with motorcycle officers if they can be located, city police officials stated today.

Indiscreet, Thinks Hostess; 'Give Me More,' Says Prince

LONDON, July 13.—(United News:)—Another London girl has fallen in love with the Prince of Wales.

At a recent ball the Prince, exercising the Royal prerogative of speaking to any one without an introduction, went up to a lonely looking girl sitting in a corner and asked for a dance.

When it was over, the shocked hostess hinted to him that the girl he had been dancing with was her nursery governess.

SECOND EXPLOSION MENACES RESCUERS

But Arsenal Officials Now Believe Danger is Past.

NEW YORK, July 13 (Canadian Press).—Thieves have been plundering the shattered homes in the region of the Lake Denmark explosion, undeterred by danger from flying shell fragments, according to a despatch from Dover, N.J.

DOVER, N.J., July 13.—After 17 bodies had been taken from the ruins of the naval ammunition depot at Lake Denmark yesterday, the fire which has raged since Saturday afternoon reached an unexploded magazine.

Fourteen-inch shells began to fly again. The searching parties were ordered out of the 50-acre arsenal. With a stiff wind fanning the flames, it was feared for a time that the horror of last Saturday afternoon would be renewed, but the fire died down, and it was believed that the danger was past.

The magazine in which the big shells were exploding is one of a group of 16 which escaped from the fire and explosions which destroyed more than 180 others.

Close to Army Depot

Of all the buildings in the navy arsenal, this group is closest to the Picatinny arsenal of the army. The torpedo bomb magazine of the arsenal is only a few hundred yards away. If this group of navy magazines were destroyed, the blast might set off the army magazines in which $35,000,000 worth of explosives and projectiles are stored.

"There has been an unfortunate shift in the wind," said Rear Admiral Charles P. Plunkett, Commandant of the Third Naval District, after a survey of the ruins. "There is danger of another magazine going up."

Yesterday evening, however, General Hugh A. Drumm announced that, in his opinion, the danger of further great explosions had passed. He said officers and men had re-entered the ruins of the naval depot and found the fire was rapidly subsiding. He said he was sure the new danger was over.

Two Identified

Only two of the bodies recovered were identified at the scene. One was that of Pharmacist's Mate Harry Christian Brown, the first to be discoered. The second was that of Maurice R. Hartdacker of Galloway, Fla, a marine. Seven others were identified at the Brooklyn Navy Yard later in the day. Four of the bodies were fragmentary.

The position of the seventeen bodies showed that the men had been wiped out by the first great explosion.

RUMOUR DENIED.

Deposed Spanish Dictator Was Not Liberated By Warship's Crew.

LISBON, July 13 (Canadian Press).—Official denial was made today of the report published in Paris that General Gomes Da Costa, deposed dictator, had been liberated by the crew of the cruiser Carvalhao-Araujo, on which he is being taken to exile in Azores.

FARMERS FROM UNITED STATES ENTER CANADA

Over Three Hundred People Move in June To Agricultural Lands.

MOVEMENT INCREASES.

OTTAWA, Ont., July 13 (Canadian Press).—Marked activity in the movement of settlers from United States to Canada is noted by the Department of Immigration and Colonization. In the month of June the Canadian Government agency at Fargo, North Dakota, was instrumental in moving to Canada 195 settlers who, with their wives and families, represent a population of 312 people, and brought with them cash and effects valued at $495,550 — almost half a million dollars. These settlers were almost entirely from the states of North Dakota and Minnesota, and were destined to Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia and Ontario. They are practically farmers, attracted by the advantages which Canada offers to agriculturists. Forty of these families made the trip to their new Canadian homes by automobile.

The movement from the Fargo territory in June, 1926, was 135 persons greater than June, 1925.

CHURCH ARMY CRUSADERS COME TO PETERBOROUGH NEXT WEEK

DISTRICT AFFAIR.

The programme of services in connection with the visit of the Church Army Crusaders to Peterborough is now practically complete and Peterborough can look forward to a series of evangelistic services both within the Anglican churches and the city parks that will offer an opportunity for much blessing.

On the morning of Friday, July 23, they will leave Trenton, which is in the Diocese of Ontario, and enter upon a crusade in the Diocese of Toronto.

As they leave Trenton they will divide into two groups; one group will visit the parish of Cobourg, the other will visit the parish of Campbellford. In each place they will hold evangelistic services the same day. The following day, Saturday, July 24, both groups will come to Peterborough, remaining here until the morning of Monday, July 26.

Leaving Peterborough, the Crusaders will again divide into two groups. Group number one will proceed to Port Hope, thence to Newcastle, Bowmanville, Scarboro, and Scarboro Junction. Group number two will visit Omemee, Lindsay, Uxbridge, Sutton West, and Markham. In each of the places mentioned they will hold a "one day's campaign," and, uniting forces on the morning of Saturday, July 31, will enter the city of Toronto, where they will be engaged for about ten days.

The Crusaders are expected to arrive here in Peterborough about noon, and their campaign will open with a public service of welcome in St. John's Church at 3 o'clock. The service will be conducted by the Rev. G. J. Bousfield, while the address of welcome to the Crusaders will be given by the Rev. Dr. Blagrave.

In the evening at 7.30 a united service will be held in Central Park, when several of the evangelists and sisters will speak, and there will be plenty of singing.

Sunday, July 25, will be a big day. At 8 a.m. all the Crusaders will attend St. George's Church for the celebration of the Eucharist and Holy Communion. At 10 o'clock children's services will be held in St. Luke's, All Saints' and St. George's Churches. At 11 o'clock Crusaders will assist and preach in the four Anglican churches of the city, also at the services in St. John's, Lakefield, and St. Mark's, Otonabee.

At 3 p.m. two special services, one for men and one for women, will be held, the one in All Saints' Parish Hall, the other in All Saints' Church. Attendance at these services will be well worth while. The evangelists have a strong and vigorous manner of presenting the message that never fails to appeal to men. Women and older girls of Peterborough who take advantage of the opportunity to be presented to them, will undoubtedly realize that the sisters—all of whom are experienced and selected speakers — have a quiet, forceful and sympathetic way of reaching the hearts of their hearers.

At 7 p.m. short mission services will be held in the churches. At the close of these services all the Crusaders, clergy, choirs and members of the congregations of the churches will gather at St. John's Church for a united procession of witness. Leaving the church at 8 o'clock, the procession will pass along portions of streets in the neighborhood to the Victoria Park, and from the band-stand the Crusaders will conduct a great open-air service.

The following day, Monday, July 26, the Crusaders will attend St. Luke's Church at 7.30 a.m. for Holy Communion; at 9.30 a short valedictory service will be conducted by the Rev. J. D. Paterson, and immediately afterwards the Crusaders will leave Peterborough, some for Port Hope, some for Omemee.

And these Crusaders, who are they? Laymen and women of the Anglican Church who are serving Christ and His church in the society known as the Church Army.

They are out from the Old Country conducting a crusade in Eastern Canada until the latter part of August. They preach not "another gospel," but in simplicity of speech they proclaim the Gospel of God's love in Jesus Christ. Frankly, directly and positively, they bear their witness in song and story that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is still the power of God unto salvation to them that believe. Modern controversies in the religious world leave them unmoved. If they were asked whether they be Modernists or Fundamentalists, undoubtedly they would reply, "Sirs, we are Essentialists."

NEW WITNESSES FOR GRAND JURY

Alleged Kidnapping of Aimee McPherson Being Investigated.

LOS ANGELES, July 13.—(Canadian Press.)—With a number of new witnesses subpoenaed since its last session, the County rand Jury to-day is prepared to resume its investigations of the alleged kidnapping of Aimee Semple McPherson, pastor of Aneglus Temple.

While Mrs. Minnie Kennedy, mother of the evangelist, heads the list of those to testify, Assistant Chief of Police Murchison of Douglas, Arizona, who arrived here yesterday, is among those expected to play an important part in the day's proceedings.

Murchison is one of a number of Arizona and Sonora, Mexico officials who have accepted invitations to appear before the Grand Jury and tell of circumstances surrounding the appearance of Mrs. McPherson at the Mexican border town of Agua Prieta after she had been missing for more than a month.

The last witness to be summoned was Clyde De Villiers, Los Angeles aviator. He was served with a subpoena yesterday after he had told the police that he could prove that Mrs. McPherson left Los Angeles in an aerpolane when she disappeared.

Refreshments were served at the courts by Miss H. Jackson, Mrs. W. Jackson, Miss M. Turner and Mrs. H. A. Cranfield.

No report has been received re the Port Hope-Oshawa match.

Peterboro—Won 14, lost 7, to play 21.

Cobourg—Won 11, lost 10, to play 21.

A special feature has been added to the Peterboro-Cobourg match for a valuable trophy.

Mr. Parker of Cobourg will play the secretary of the Peterboro club in a challenge event. This event has been pending for three years, and should be a great game, as both players are going into strict training for this event.

The Cobourg team will probably have Read and Archibald Cochrane in the line-up for the return match on Saturday, July 24, at Cobourg.

Brisk Demand Features High Priced Industrials

NEW YORK, July 13 (Canadian Press).—The brisk demand for several high-priced industrials and specialties infused new strength into today's stock market after it had shown signs of stirring under profit-taking and bear selling of the professional traders.

Although the trading in rails has been restricted of late by uncertainty regarding the Interstate Commerce Commission's decision on application for higher freight rates in the northwest, strong underlying investment demand was apparent in many issues. Nickle Plate Common, however, lost ground on selling inspired by determined opposition to new Nickle Plate mergent plan, but Chesapeake and Ohio issues mounted record highs.

The strength of a number of automotive issues was attributed to buying of a small group of professional operators.

Massey Harris Stronger On Dull Stock Exchange

TORONTO, July 13 (Canadian Press). — Massey-Harris Common featured in a rather dull session of the Toronto Stock Exchange to-day in which offerings were light and prices fairly steady. This stock closed 4 1-4 points higher at 58 1-4 after touching a high of 60. Preferred was up 1-4 at 94 3-.

Page Hersey Preferred led the market in turnover, closing at 102 for a net gain of 1-2. Noranda was strong with an advance of 25 cents per share to 16.10. Consumers Gas was off 1-4 at 170 1-2, while C.P.R. gained 1-8 to 166. Bell Telephone advanced 1 point to 139, but British Columbia Fishing declined 1-2 to 74. Brazilian sales were light, unchanged at 101. Dome and Keely were both weak, the former off 5 cents to 11.65, and the latter 2 cents to 1.62.

Waves Of Buying Hoists Chicago Wheat Market

CHICAGO, July 13. — (Canadian Press.)— Waves of buying hoisted the wheat market in earnest to-day. Prices went up as much as 6 3-4 cents, Sept. touching $1.43 1-4. The principal reason was the Canadian Government report that was taken here as defintely exploding theories of large North American crop this season.

Government Crop Report Features Price Of Wheat

CHICAGO, July 13. — (Canadian Press.)—Sharp upturns in the price of wheat resulted to-day from active buying based largely on the Canadian Government crop report. Unfavorable weather conditions both in the Northwest and Southwest tended also to lift values, starting at 7-8c. to 3c. advance wheat went in some cases to nearly 4c. above yesterday's finish. Corn, oats and provisions were likewise firmer, corn opening 1-4c. to 1c. up, and scoring some additional gain. With 1926 Canadian wheat production officially estimated as showing curtailment of 62,000,000 bushels compared with the 1925 harvest, the rush to buy wheat was made as soon as the market here opened.

Noranda and Keora Stocks Feature On Mining Exchange

TORONTO, July 13 (Canadian Press)—Noranda and Keora were feature stocks on the Standard Mining Exchange today, trading being much lighter than yesterday and market weaker. Noranda gained 23 cents to close at 16.15 while Keora closed 1 1-2 higher at 8 after touching high of 10 cents. Teck Hughes one of the stronger stocks advanced one point to 3.86 but most of the other leaders declined. Lakeshore lost two points at 11.33. Hollinger was off five cents at 19.50. Gold Hill was one point lower at 59, and Dome dropped ten cents to 11.50. McIntyre was unchanged at 25.00 and Crown Reserve at 13 1-2. Castle Tretheway was weaker, four cents lower at 1.54.

Stewart's Statement.

CALGARY, July 13 (Canadian Press). — That the constitutional question would be the issue of the campaign and that there was a possibility of co-operation in constituencies between Liberals and Progressives were two points stressed by Hon. Charles Stewart, former Minister of the Interior, in a statement here last night.

Mr. Stewart left here for Edmonton, where he will remain until after the election.

Report Filthy.

"Part of the Duncan report is so filthy and indecent that it will never be published," Fred Davis, ex-M.P., East Calgary, said to-day. "The scandalous nature of the report will never be brought out on the platform. It reflects upon the character of a former Minister of the Crown, upon several members of Parliament, and upon officials of the Government."

The Examiner truck and another light delivery truck came together this afternoon on Hunter street. The damage was slight to both cars.

FOREST FIRES.

DENVER, July 13 (Canadian Press)—Fires of serious proportions were raging today through the tinder dry forests of Western Montana and Northern Idaho, cutting destructive paths over a wide area. Blazes of less serious proportions were reported in Washington, Oregon and Canada.

One of the most serious conflagrations was being stubbornly fought in the Blackfeet forest in Northern Montana, where 3,000 acres of fine timberland has been destroyed.

POISON IN WELL.

Believed To Be An Attempt To Poison Entire Family.

OTTAWA, July 13. — Canadian Press. — Following the discovery of a substance resembling Paris green, a deadly poison, in the well at the home of Edmond Ethier, a farmer, living on the Bourget Road, between Bourget and McLarens Creek, Ont., the provincial authorities are conducting a rigid investigation into two alleged attempts to murder Ethier, his wife and his sister-in-law, who lives at his farm.

It has been learned that Ethier and his wife and sister-in-law became ill a week ago after drinking water from the well. On Friday morning Mr. Ethier went to the well to draw some drinking water, and he noticed a green substance on the wooden rim of the well.

BUSH FIRES IN B. C.

Raging Over Distance of Seven Miles—Telegraph Wires Destroyed.

VANCOUVER, July 13 Canadian Press).—Bush fires raging over a distance of seven miles in the vicinity of Lton, B.C., 135 miles east of here on the C.P.R., are reported early to-day to have interrupted telegraphic communication between this city and the east.

The fire is said to be serious and to have destroyed the telegraph poles and wires for a considerable distance.

DOGS WORRY SHEEP.

Man Near Petherick's Corners Loses Three Animals in One Night.

PETHERICK'S CORNERS, July 13—Sheep-killing dogs have begun their depredations earlier than usual this year. On Saturday night Ed. Wilson, who lives just a mile from Petherick's Corns had three sheep killed and another badly mangled by dogs. No clue to the identity of the dogs could be found and it is supposed that they are mongrel strays.

The regular meeting of the Zion Young People's League was held in the church on Friday evening in charge of the missionary department led by Miss Hazel Brown. Miss Bessie Meiklejohn was leader for the evening with the topic "The Past and Present as a Prophecy of the Future" taken by Miss Agnes Thompson.

Rev. M. Daniel gave an interesting talk on the work of the summer school to be held at Bobcaygeon next week.

The usual softball game before League gave the Whites a 17 to 13 victory over the Reds. This completes the schedule and gives the Whites the lead with three wins and no losses. The Khaki stand second with two wins and one defeat while the Reds have one victory and two defeats. The Blues failed to win a game but made things mighty interesting for the other teams. All teams were fairly evenly matched and close scores resulted.

Playoffs will be arranged for at the next League meeting.

Church Service

The evening service at Zion church on Sunday was well attended and everyone was benefited by Rev. Daniel's able and inspiring address on the twenty-third psalm. An excellent vocal duet was given by Mr. and Mrs. Fred Barnum.

At a short business meeting it was decided to hold the annual garden party of the Zion United Church on the evening of August 12th. This event is always held in Mr. John Simpson's grove which has long been recognized as one of the leading beauty spots in East Seymour and is always in great demand for events of this kind.

WHERE THE SHOE PINCHES.

Such papers as The Montreal Witness and The Toronto Globe do a useful service in pointing out the desirability of removing the control of the electoral machinery from political influences.

Only the hardened partisans of the various parties will deny the fact that the real issue that was fought out at Ottawa was whether Liberals or Conservatives would go to the country as a Government and thus have the machinery of the election under their control.

"Here is one party," says The Witness, "enraged because the power to manipulate has been taken from them by the ruthless hand of a 'dictator,' and another party showing a most offensive triumph in the success of their manoeuvres to that end."

The one thing that stands out most prominently in the whole history of the last session of Parliament is the insatiable lust for office displayed by both chief parties, and this developed to its fullest degree during the last week of the session.

With the electoral machinery established, as it is in Great Britain, beyond the reach of political control, it is reasonable to think that Canada might have been spared some disagreeable features of the present political tangle, and the election could have been fought out with more consideration for issues that count.

Many Canadians who have followed the developments of the whole fight will agree with The Globe's contention that "the country has tolerated the system too long and is now paying the penalty by spreading its disgraceful political manoeuvres before the world."

SELECTING CABINETS.

A contemporary suggests to Premier Meighen that in selecting his Cabinet he should give young men with fresh vision and zeal for service a chance, and not confine his selection of a Ministry to the older campaigners.

That might be good business—and perhaps good politics, too—but, unfortunately, the political game is very rarely conducted according to business principles, following instead a technique of its own.

The present crisis in political affairs is the best proof possible of the truth of that statement, for it is impossible to think that a crowd of business men really seeking a businesslike course in the best interest of the country could get into such a tangle or give such a pitiable exhibition of silk-seeking as have the political parties during the session just closed.

Like other Prime Ministers, he will have to take care of the lieutenants who have been directing the fighting, and he will also have to take into consideration the effect of his appointments in various sections of the country.

If Cabinets were chosen for their business ability and vision and Parliaments were elected according to the same test, many of our problems would disappear.

Unfortunately, the science of politics as it is exemplified in Canada does not contain any hope of a reform along those lines—so it will be useless to hope that Mr. Meighen will depart from the customary routine.

PROTECT THE FORESTS.

Visitors to Ontario summer resorts are likely to run across a striking bulletin headed "Fire! Fire!" that has been issued by the Canadian National Safety League in an effort to protect Canada's forests against damage by fire.

These bulletins are being posted up at points where they are most likely to be seen by visitors, and it is to be hoped that the advice that they give will be acted upon generally.

Many Peterboro people holiday in sections of the country where they should be careful about their matches, smoke and camp-fires.

They should remember that the woods are theirs and should be preserved, not only for the sake of the timber, but because of the wild life they contain.

There are a few points that should receive special attention.

In making camp, for example, care should be taken to choose, if possible, a solid bottom for the camp-fire, and it should be located away from brush and inflammable material. There is usually no need of a big fire for cooking purposes, although most "tenderfeet" in the woods seem to think so.

Then again when breaking camp the fire should be soaked with water and the ground all around wet. If water is not obtainable, dirt may be packed over and around the fire.

Matches should be kept in fire-proof boxes, and smokers should be careful to see that matches, cigar and cigarette stumps contain no fire when thrown away.

Compliance with these simple rules will prevent the start of forest fires, for it must not be forgotten that all fires have a small beginning.

THE NATIONAL GAME.

At a local park today a lacrosse game between St. Catharines and Hamilton will be played, which is arousing considerable interest. Lacrosse, as our young readers know, is Canada's national game and is one, therefore, which deserves all the support and encouragement possible. For some reason or other, sports which we have received from other countries have ousted lacrosse from its rightful place in the affections of the Canadian people, and an effort is being made to revive interest in the game and try to put it in the position it ought to occupy, at the head of all Canadian pastimes. Whether that effort succeeds or not largely depends upon the attitude of our younger citizenry. So much is made of baseball and football—both of them fine games, it is admitted, and both deserving of support—that there seems to be little enthusiasm left for lacrosse, which is identified with the sports of the country in a way no other game can be.

Lacrosse is as old as Canada. It was invented and played by the Indian aborigines long before the advent of Europeans. So many things which are native to Canada have passed out of our possession that there is a danger that even our national game, through our indifference, may be lost to us. It is said that lacrosse is being most enthusiastically taken up in the United States and other countries, while in Canada it is making but slow progress towards reinstatement. Let the young sport-lovers see to it that our national game shall not be allowed to suffer further neglect. There is no more energetic or skilled game than lacrosse; when properly played it brings out the finest qualities of sportsmanship, developing the body physically and promoting those characteristics of true sport—loyal team work and clean play—which are the most admired features of any game. There is a feeling that lacrosse is a rough game, but that need not be; it was when it began to degenerate that it declined in popular favor. Those who are responsible for its revival are giving particular attention to this phase, and the kind of play which is being seen under the new conditions is of a high order. We trust the youth of this district will be boosters for the game and so ensure its success.—Hamilton Spectator.

ALREADY THE PREDICTIONS.

The time already has arrived when spokesmen for both political parties are indulging in the great, time-honored pre-election recreation of predicting "sweeps" and "landslides," claiming so many seats in this Province and so many in another, and, generally, making unwarranted and fanciful speculation concerning the outcome of the general election now pending. On the one hand, we have supporters of the Government assuring the people that it will have a clear majority over all; on the other hand, Liberals are equally sanguine and equally forceful in declaring that the next House will see the return of a sufficient number of Liberals to warrant the formation of an administration which will be able to carry on independent of third-party assistance. And even in the case of the Progressives, predictions are being freely made that the West will remain true to that group and that, far from declining in strength, it will enter the next Parliament in even a more favorable position than was the case in that recently dissolved. This in face of another prediction that when the returns are complete the Progressive group will be as extinct as the dodo or the great auk.

When it comes to Provincial and sectional returns, the same tendency is to be observed. By the Liberals it is claimed that not one seat in Quebec will go to the Conservatives; by the latter, that they will carry 25 ridings. Neither Liberal nor Progressive will be returned in any Ontario riding, claim the Conservatives; Conservative members from that Province will be fewer in number than at the close of the last contest, retort the Liberals. The West will go solidly for the Liberals and Progressives, one side claims; Liberal and Progressive strength from the Prairies will experience a decline, is the Conservative reply. As in the cases of Ontario, Quebec and the West, so in the Maritime Provinces and in British Columbia, even in the Yukon Territory, are the same conflicting predictions being made. And they mean nothing at all.

It is quite clear that not all of these statements can prove true. They are made chiefly for the purpose of inspiring party confidence and attempting to influence public opinion, and for that reason should be disregarded by the elector who is studying the situation with a view to determining the manner in which he will mark his ballot. No matter by whom they may be made, they are to be taken with about a ton of salt. The campaign has yet to begin. In only a very few instances have candidates been nominated. The issues are not yet well defined. They have to be presented to the people, together with statements of public policy from the rival parties, and until they are presented and well discussed it is impossible accurately to interpret the state of public feeling and, therefore, to predict the result when the ballots have been counted.

Any predictions which may be made at this moment by any side are patently rash and premature and to be gauged by such a measure. Much may happen during a campaign to cause them to undergo radical revision; the entire course of an election has been known to change through one incident or one declaration of policy. It will be time enough to indulge in predictions when the party alignments have been completed and the public issues defined. Until that time has arrived, no stock at all is to be taken in what may be said in such a regard, for any and all of the statements being credited to party managers are simply opinions.—Brockville Recorder and Times.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

One trouble about the present summer is that about the time the mosquitoes stop buzzing the politicians will start.

The Ontario Safety League should get out a special bulletin for the political parties warning them about the danger in campaign cigars.

Among the other things that are just around the corner is the Peterboro Industrial Exhibition.

The election issue as laid down by Liberal leaders will be a big boon to the temperance cause. Any orator who wants to talk about "constitutionality" will have to remain on the water wagon.

Appeals for a stable government fall on deaf ears among the Progressives of South-east Grey. They have re-nominated Miss Agnes MacPhail.

According to The Toronto Star, there is trouble among Toronto Conservatives over candidates. There generally is in ridings where the real fight lies in getting the nomination and where the election itself is what the boxing editor would call a set-up.

DR. FRANK CRANE'S DAILY EDITORIAL.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO HENRY FORD.

By Dr. Frank Crane.

Henry Ford's contributions to charity have not been much exploited.

All he has done has been for profit, and he is reported to be remarkably successful. For all that, and in spite of his many eccentric views, he has not received a tithe of the condemnation that has been given to men like Mr. Rockefeller.

By many Mr. Ford is held to be a philanthropist, yet his methods of assisting humanity are apparently directly contrary to those commonly supposed to be helpful.

He does not give doles nor distribute charity. He does not run his business and devote the enormous profits of it to helping the poor.

On the contrary he manages his business so that very many people have employment. He gives them work and lets them attend to their own charities.

Throughout the country roundabout he has established factories for making parts of his machines in which the farm people labor part of the time. Many women are employed.

One woman is reported to travel about fifteen miles a day to her work and rarely misses a day. She supports a sick husband and four children, and still has time for her housekeeping.

It is Mr. Ford's theory that it is much better to give this woman suitable employment and enable her to look after her affairs in a self-respecting way than to give her charity.

This challenges the common opinion of mankind, which is that a rich man ought to give away his substance. In fact the Savior exhorted men of money to give all they had to feed the poor.

The gospel, according to Mr. Ford seems to be quite the contrary. It is that a man should so use his possessions as to enable the poor by co-operating with him to support themselves. Instead of giving the poor money or other goods, he gives them work.

There is much to be said for Mr. Ford's point of view, and perhaps this is his most important contribution to the economic situation.

What people want, after all, is work, and an opportunity to support themselves It should be the business of a financial giant to arrange to give them this employment which they could not secure for themselves, and not give them charity when they are unable to secure employment.

HOW DO YOU SAY IT?

(By C. N. Lurie.)

Common Errors in English and How To Avoid Them.

"WITCH," NOT WIZARD."

(The McClure Syndicate, Inc.)

Several times, in referring to Mlle. Suzanne Lenglen, the famous French lawn tennis player, the newspapers referred to her as "the feminine wizard of the courts." One sporting writer in New York said: "It was Mrs. Mallory, not Mlle. Lenglen, who stood out as the wizard of the tennis courts."

This use of "wizard" in referring to a woman is incorrect. The proper term is "witch," of which the Standard Dictionary says: "The terms was formerly applied to both men and women, but it is now generally restricted to women, as opposed to 'wizard'." And of "wizard" the same authority writes: "One supposed to be in league with the devil; a male witch; sorcerer."

It will be seen that one refers to a woman as a "witch," and the term "wizard" should be restricted to a man.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

Letters to be printed in the Voice of the People column must be received at The Examiner office on the day before it is desired to have them published.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir:

I notice at a meeting of the City Council that Alderman Greene is reported as having said that Monaghan was dictating to the City Council as to excessive rate on fire protection.

Now, sir, I am at a loss to know where he got his education, if that is what he calls dictating. He should know, if he does not, that Monaghan is a municipality of its own with properly elected officials to do the business of the ratepayers in the best interest of all. Then he states that those wanting fire protection should become citizens. Now, Mr. Greene, those wanting protection are not all of Monaghan no more than you are the whole city.

NORTH MONAGHAN.

NO ACCIDENT.

Rotary-Y.M.C.A. Camp
July 8, 1926.

The Editor of Examiner:

Dear sir:

We on the camp grounds were much suprised to learn from one of our visitors tonight that a rumor had been circulating in the city to the effect that one of our boys had been drowned. May we thank you for your prominently displayed denial of this?

We are at loss to understand how such a story could have originated. Certainly we have not had anything resembling an accident either in connection with swimming or boating periods.

Years of experience in camp program building, coupled with a constant careful supervision, discounts as far as is humanly possible the probability of any accident. A visit to the camp will, we are sure, confirm this in the minds of our citizens.

Yours very truly,
F. G. McNEELY,
Camp Director.

FROM A POLITICIAN.

To the Editor of Examiner:

In reference to the Canadian political situation much criticism is hurled at Lord Byng in refusing the request for dissolution of parliament to ex-Premier King. Mr. King and Progressive members say that the situation is without precedent and unconstitutional, but the people who made the situation without precedent and thus unconstitutional and to the thoughtful now partizan politician, the answer comes that it is the Hon. Mackenzie King who has created such an unparallel state of affairs. This man, as Premier of Canada in 1925 with a majority of one or two over all, asked for, and was granted, a dissolution of Parliament, on the ground that he had not sufficient working majority to pass his desired legislation in Parliament but instead of procuring his desired majority he came back to Parliament, defeated in his own constituency as well as having about seven cabinet ministers in the same position, and still he assumed that he was Prime Minister, while being about 15 in the minority of the Conservative party, who were not in sufficient majority to carry on with independent labor and Progressive Liberals to oppose even in the uncertain divided strength. Yet Mackenzie King with the same groups to approve or disapprove of his legislation, backed by his own most rabid partizans, with the additional handicap of being in a minority decided to carry on, evidently assuming that he was King of Canada instead of the Mackenzie King, former premier, who with seven cabinet ministers had been voted out of parliament in an election granted on request for dissolution. The Toronto Globe and The Peterboro Examiner at the time saw what the outcome would be and advised another appeal to the people, but Mackenzie King was not to be dictated to or advised by leading papers even of his own party. He was king of Canada and led men as such until a week ago when in the House a division was called. His party was defeated twice in session and he suddenly realized and stated on the floor of the House that he was no longer Premier of Canada and only a very humble member of Parliament and asked for dissolution from the Governor General which was refused and for which refusal Lord Byng has been subject to criticism from himself and followers in the different groups in parliament. British precedent in parliament is questioned as a parallel case cannot be quoted, but Lord Byng's decision, it is hoped, will be gratifying to the intelligent electorate of Canada. The customs investigation was at the bottom of the division on which his government was defeated.

His party fought to overthrow motions of censure of the government for irregularities revealed in commissioners' report on customs probe, but to many parties spoiled his plans and he suffered defeat by ballot in parliamentary session, surely some spiritual quickening must have moved him, when he said, I am no longer Prime Minister of Canada when he was not made to realize it when the last election returns did not, and we as loyal Canadians cannot but admire the wisdom coming from God to Lord Byng directing him in his refusal for dissolution of parliament and to him necessitating the handing over of the reigns of power to Sir Arthur Meighen as constitutional and with British precedent should have been done by the same Mackenzie King last November.

Thanking you Mr. Editor,
A POLITICIAN.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

THERE IS A WAY.

To die before the age of retirement is reached, and while earning an income, is premature death.

To pass on following the age of retirement, and at a time of no earning capacity, is economic death.

You probably would like to have a choice as to which death you must take, but you will never have a chance to exercise your choice.

There is a way to protect yourself against this great gamble—and that is life insurance.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

MONTREAL, Que., July 13.—(Canadian Press).—With the absence of any firm bids from the United Kingdom and the continent, the export trade in Canadian grain on the Montreal market yesterday was inactive. The only sales reported were odd lots of wheat and barley. The local trade was also quiet but prices were unchanged.

There was little demand from foreign sources for spring wheat grades of flour but the local trade was fair and prices were well maintained. The undertone to the winter wheat situation was firm with a small trade passing.

The movement of millfeed to the United States continued fair and prices were steady. The market for standard grades of rolled oats was quiet and prices were unchanged.

Owing to the curtailed movement of cattle for export account, the demand for baled hay was quieter in this respect, but the inquiry from the United States was fair and there was also a fair local trade. The tone of the market was firm.

A feature of the local egg situation was the stronger feeling that developed for extra eggs and prices were advanced one cent per dozen. The tone of the market for lower grades, however, was weaker. The receipts were 1,150 cases.

There were no new developments in the market for potatoes. Prices for old crop stock being steady, but prices for United States new crop were easier on account of the liberal supplies coming forward. A moderate amount of business was done with sales of car lots of new crop No. 1 grade at $6.00 per barrel, No. 2 grade at $3.75 per barrel, and No. 3 grade at $2.75 per barrel, while odd cars of old crop New Brunswick green mountain white sold at $2.25 per bag of 90 pounds.

The weakness that has characterized the butter market for some time continued to be the principal feature of the trade and prices scored a further decline of 3-4c to one cent per pound. The receipts were 806 packages.

Extreme dullness marked the export and local trade in cheese and prices on spot were easier. The receipts were 7,946 boxes.

There was no change in the condition of the market for beans, the demand being limited for car lots of choice white hand-picked at $2.25 per bushel, and smaller quantities at $2.35 to $2.45 per bushel.

OTTAWA, Ont., July 13.—(Canadian Press).—Lower prices are reported from some western points yesterday while another partial price advance has taken place in Vancouver.

Toronto—Extras are firm with firsts and seconds easy country shippers report light receipts. They are paying producers extras 27-28, firsts 25, seconds 20-22 and making sales extras 30-31, firsts 27-28, seconds 24 f.o.b. cases returned, Toronto.

Toronto dealers are quoting for ungraded eggs cases returned: 30-31, firsts 26-27, seconds 20-22. Prices to retailers: extras 36, firsts 32-33, seconds 28-30.

Montreal—Dealers are paying delivered for ungraded eggs: extras 31-33, firsts 26-30, seconds 21-25. Prices to retailers: extras 36-38, firsts 32-34, seconds 28-30. Market is fairly active.

Winnipeg—Market is lower and dealers report sales slow. Receipts show a further decrease with quality grading heavy to seconds. Dealers are quoting country shippers extras 25, firsts 23, seconds 18 delivered, cases returned. Prices to retailers: extras 37, firsts 32.

CHICAGO GRAINS.

CHICAGO, July 13.—(Canadian Press).—Wheat and corn, affected differently by the government crop report, took opposite paths yesterday, wheat values going backward whereas corn advanced. With the total domestic yield of wheat expected to be about 100,000,000 bush. more than in 1925, the wheat market tended to sag closing unsettled at the same as Saturday's finish to 1 1-8 lower. Corn finished with 1 to 1¼ gain; oats 1-8 off to ¼ up, and provisions varying from 15 decline to a rise of 5 cents.

Heavy receipts southwest today did a good deal to emphasize bearish aspects of the government crop regarding wheat. The Liberal arrivals of winter wheat at the various southwestern terminals were taken as affording immediate evidence that official figures on winter wheat production although unexpectedly large, would be fully borne out later. Slowness of export demand today, together with announcement of 1,838,000 bushels increase of the United States visible supply total, counted also as a weight on the market.

Word that black rust is present over a wide section of the wheat crop in Canada received considerable notice, but failed to counteract the downward trend of the market. Whether much damage to the Canadian crop would result was said to depend on prevalence of hot humid conditions not now apparent. Unfavorable crop comments from spring wheat territory south of the Canadian boundary were likewise at hand. For the time being, though, such advices seemed to have lost influence as being already discounted in full.

With official figures showing a decidedly smaller probable yield of corn, this season than last, the corn market went upward right from the outset. A falling off of 1,813,000 bushels in the visible supply was an additional stimulus to buyers. Lib stocks of old oats made the oats market easy.

Provisions were without aggressive support.

PRINCIPALS OF SHOOTING TRAGEDY

Principals in the shocking tragedy in Toronto, wherein, fearing that he was losing his mind and that his family would be left in financial difficulty, Patrick Fogarty, member of a pioneer family, a greenhouse man, about dawn on Friday of last week shot his wife, his four children in their beds and then took his own life. From left to right in the picture they are: Patrick Fogarty, holding 5-year-old Geraldine; Gertrude, age 8; Cline, aged 12; Mrs. Dora Fogarty and 10-year-old Mary. This picture, which is the most recent of the family, was taken a little over two years ago. Geraldine Fogarty, aged 5 years, the youngest child, is shown below. Police officials and the coroner, who later investigated the scene, said it was the most harrowing case that ever met their eyes. Below is shown the home and greenhouse.

M. CAILLAUX FLIES TO LONDON AND SIGNS NEW DEBT AGREEMENT AFTER ONE HOUR OF CONFERENCE

French Franc Sinks To Lowest Point as Announcement is Made.

MINISTER PLEASED.

With London's Reception and Churchill's Amicability—Increasing Yearly Payments.

LONDON, July 13 (Canadian Press).—An agreement was signed yesterday for the funding of the French war debt to Great Britain, after a conference of a single hour between Winston Churchill, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Joseph Caillaux, French Minister of Finance, and a subsequent discussion with treasury officials to draft the terms of the agreement. These will be divulged to-day.

M. Caillaux came to London by airplane from Paris accompanied by Jacques Duboin, Under-Secretary of the Treasury, and lost no time in proceeding to the House of Commons, where he was closeted with the British Chancellor.

Apparently the agreement was reached quickly, because the ground had been thoroughly prepared beforehand by discussions between London and Paris. It was probably only a coincidence that almost simultaneously with the issue of the official announcement of the signing of the agreement that the French franc touched its lowest record of about 195 to the pound.

Questioned after the signature, M. Caillaux said he hoped this would prevent any further fall of the franc, but, shrugging his shoulders, he remarked:

"I am not master of even this."

M. Caillaux expressed himself as Major Belford Denounces Communistic Attacks on British Institutions.

TOLERATION.

Hon. W. H. Price Lauds the Freedom of Thought and Equality of Opportunity.

(Examiner Staff Correspondence)

WARKWORTH, July 13. — The principles and purposes of the Loyal Orange Association were enunciated with fresh emphasis in the celebration here yesterday of the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne by lodges of Northumberland County. At the Fair Grounds after the customary parade through the main streets of the village, the principal speakers were the Honorable W. H. Price, Provincial Treasurer; Senator Rufus Pope of Quebec; M. E. Maybee, M.P. for Northumberland, and Major Belford, M.P.P. Other speakers were ex-Warden Harry Phillips and Robert Ross of Brighton, and the local and district ministers. County Master W. A. Goodfellow of Codrington fulfilled the duties of chairman in a bright and capable manner.

Behind Fred Grills, the Grand Marshal, riding a white horse, the parade extended with bands and banners and the various lodgemen in their sashes and uniforms. The Alderville Indian band, followed by Alderville L.O.L. No. 1069, a conspicuous unit was accorded the honor of marching in the van, the band being the outstanding musicians in the procession, with Campbellford No. 36, of which Reeve C. H. Davidson was the bass drummer, ranking second.

The lodges noted were as follows:
Alderville L.O.L. No. 1069.
Roseneath L.O.L. No. 261.
Brighton L.O.L. No. 186, with piper and drummers.
Codrington L.O.L. No. 1363.
Campbellford L.O.L. No. 36.
Coldsprings L.O.L.
Campbellford L.O.L. No. 526.
Percy L.O.L. No. 108.

The main street section of the route was lined on either side with automobiles, and the crowd which Orangemen estimated at approximately three thousand. At the Exhibition Park the programme of oratory was the central feature, the only distraction being a refreshment booth.

Major Belford.

Although not heralded as the head-liner, Major Belford delivered a thoughtful admonition to Orangemen to be on their guard against Communistic activities, which he declared to be on the increase in Canada.

"Of course we stand for Canadian Protestantism," said Rev. Mr. Belford, in opening his address, "but we believe in toleration. We haven't the least desire to impose our will on other people. We hold that every man in this Canada should have the right to pursue life, liberty and happiness."

But, Major Belford continued, there were certain insidious attacks being made in Canada which every loyal citizen should guard against. "Don't mistake me. I am not talking about Catholicism, but I refer to the wretched doctrine of Communism that is being preached in this country. There are schools in Toronto and in Western Canada, especially in Winnipeg, that teach children Communistic ideas. They teach atheism, that there is no God, that the British Empire is a tyranny and they seek to bring about the same upheaval that has made a chaos of Russia."

Major Belford asserted that those Canadians who were opposing cadet training and the maintenance of the militia were unwittingly playing the game of the anarchists. "We don't want war; but there is

JULY 12TH.

(By a Staff Reporter.)

MARMORA, July 13.—In this village yesterday the 236th anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne was celebrated by the Loyal Orange Association of the surrounding district Lodges were here from Campbellford and Sulphide. The speakers were Hon. J. R. Cook, M.L.A.; Dr. Embury, ex-M.P. for Hastings-Peterborough; John Sexsmith, ex-M.P. for East Peterborough, and local men. At night a community band concert and play entitled "Bashful Mr. Bobbs" were given in the Town Hall.

The crowd and parade was not so large as was anticipated, as some lodges promised to come and did not turn up; there also were several other celebrations in nearby centres. The parade was formed up at the Fair Grounds at 1.30 and proceeded through the main section of the town and back to the standing point where a very interesting programme of speeches was given.

The parade was headed by H. McGarvey and W. Smith, on white chargers, and consisted of the Campbellford Ladies' True Blue Lodge, Campbellford Duke of Clarence True Blue Lodge; Duke of Clarence Band; Sulphide Ladies' True Blue; Sulphide Band; Marmora L.O.L. No. 317; Marmora Band; Marmora Ladies' True Blue, No. 177.

Warden G. B. Airhart of Hastings County acted as chairman and in his few opening remarks he said, "He considered the Battle of the Boyne the greatest victory in the world except the victory after the Great War. What are we doing today to carry on the work of the men who fought the Battle of the Boyne?"

Although not an Orangeman, the fact that most impressed him in the Orange Order was the open Bible and that the Bible was the foremost word and thought in Orange societies.

Hon. J. R. Cook

Hon. J. R. Cook, in his address, spoke of the meaning of the Orange Order. "The lodges this afternoon are assembled either as Orange lodges or True Blue lodges, and it is not in a spirit of boastfulness of the past, but so as the past will not be forgotten," said Mr. Cook.

"The Orange Order is essentially religious in character and it does not need to make any apologies for its Christianity, for it is as religious as ever. There is no other organization today either secular or religious that can gather the crowds in Canada and other English speaking countries on any set day as the Orange Order can on the 12th of July. The reason of this is that today the different denominations of the Protestant faith find in the

M. CAILLAUX FLIES TO LONDON

Terms To-Day.

Although the full terms of the agreement are withheld until to-day, it is understood that France will pay in the current financial year £4,000,000 with gradually increasing payments until the sixth year, when the full £12,500,000, as previously arranged, will be reached.

The full payment terms are £12,500,000 for sixty-two years, and France will not be required to pay the deficience of these five years of partial moratorium until after a long period, probably 25 or 30 years. The £50,000,000 of French gold now held in the Bank of England as a pledge will henceforth be regarded as part of the reserve of the Bank of France.

There is also a safeguarding clause to protect France's interests should Germany default in her reparations payments. In this the British settlement differs from the Washington agreement, which omitted such a clause.

Transfer Clause.

France is also granted a transfer clause, whereby, in the event of her large payment to Britain endangering the stability of the franc, the annual payment will be postponed.

Another point which the French experts consider more advantageous than the Franco-American settlement is that under the new agreement there is no possibility in any circumstances of the Anglo-French funding settlement becoming commercialized. The agreement provides that none of the French bonds may be placed in the open market or negotiated, as authorized by the American settlement.

Should France's incapacity to pay make any future revision necessary, it is understood that the principle will be maintained that the amounts paid to Great Britain must be proportionate to those paid to the United States.

ORANGE ASSOCIATION

Hon. W. H. Price.

"The 12th of July ushered in a great new era of change from the tremendous dictation of the Roman Church of that day," said the Minister of Finance in Hon. G. Howard Ferguson's Cabinet. "It was a change that was necessary, and it was a religious change, a change of freedom for all the world. And for that reason the Orange Order is essentially religious. It stands for things for which centuries ago your forefathers and mine shed their blood in the Battle of the Boyne; and while I don't glory in war, yet there is a feeling of pride in the hearts of all of us that we had ancestors courageous enough to shed their blood for what they regarded as the right.

"But, we can't live in the past. We must have something strong and living in our Order to keep it going. The Orange Order must not only maintain freedom, it must give freedom to everyone. We must preach tolerance. I know I am not intolerant. Let us say to all Canadians our country must be built on the foundations of freedom and tolerance. We want you to enjoy all the great privileges that are to be had under the British flag."

Hon. Mr. Price closed with a plea for greater unity among Protestants.

Hon. Rufus Pope's address was an eloquent presentation of the British ideals of justice, liberty and equality of opportunity. He said he wished to avoid politics, but "no party has a right to dominate this country that doesn't give the Canadian-born the first and best right to make good and develop here in Canada. I'm tired of seeing babies born in Canada to make Yankees of them. We want them to grow up and live in Canada. Therefore I say give us a policy that will keep them at home."

Rev. Mr. Everson spoke of the Orange Order's influence in building Christian character. Rev. Mr. Jones dwelt upon its patriotic phase, and Rev. Mr. Beckel of Castleton said it was a fighting force for righteousness. Mr. Maybee centred his address on Canada's position in the Empire and her links with the Crown.

Yesterday's demonstration was graced with splendid weather, the dark clouds of the morning disappearing at noon before a warm July sun, tempered with a cool breeze that added much to the afternoon's success and enjoyment.

that has served your forefathers will serve you," he said.

"You are free people, living under the freest flag—the flag that was given to you by your ancestors and for this freedom you will have to fight, but if you stand fast in the faith there is no doubt that in the end you will win out."

E. A. Peck, M.P.

Mr. Peck congratulated those in charge of the organization. He stated that the procession was the largest he had ever witnessed. The country will shortly be facing another election, he said, so a few words, entirely non partisan, on the political situation of the country will not come amiss. There has been a most shameful and disgraceful attack made upon the Governor-General, he said, but it has been made by people who do not understand the situation. He has had a difficult position to fill and he filled it like a man, he said.

Mr. Peck declared that no particular party was to blame for the present situation—the people are to be blamed for not sending a sufficient majority of any one party to carry out its own platform.

R. J. Patterson, M.P.

Mr. Patterson stated that he would be unable to speak owing to a severe cold, but he would leave with the people the message "Let us carry on—the Orange Order has never asked for favors that could not also be granted to other people.

F. Bowen, M.P.

Mr. Bowen said that he appreciated the privilege of being in Lindsay on this occasion. He congratulated the people of the town on the fine decorations they had throughout the entire town.

The Orange Order, he said, stands for patriotism—loyalty to the King. "We have a great country," he declared, "and all we need is the artisan to make the finished product." He expressed the hope that whatever party went into power as a result of the coming election would see that only people who would assimilate would be brought into the country. In conclusion, he said, "Let us be true to Orangeism, Our God, Our King, and Our Country."

T. H. Stinson, K.C., M.P.

"This is my county, and I am proud to be able to be here to-day on this great occasion," declared Mr. Stinson. Orangeism, he said, will always stand upon the rock of equal rights for all and special privileges for none. The watchword of every true Canadian should be true citizenship, he said. He expressed the opinion that it was never required more than it was to-day. Citizenship, he declared, was a wonderful word, as it implied all that people should be in the country in which they lived. Loyalty, he said, should be the common principle of every citizen, irrespective of religion or politics. The principal thing in life was the building of character. The Orange Order has always been constructive, never destructive; it has always been evolutionary, not revolutionary; it has always taught that there is something more in life than mere materialism, he declared.

Major J. R. Hartt.

"I can claim each one of you as a sister or a brother," said Mr. Hartt. He complimented the ladies on the showing they had made, and expressed his keen appreciation of the steadiness of their marching.

The women are going to outdo the men in the very near future, he said.

The greatest thought about this day is the principles that you stand for, he said. The history of the Orange Order was good, he said, and will last as long as time itself, but you cannot live on the history of the past—you must go out and make new history. The Orange Order has been used for all kinds of purposes and it is up to every one of you to see that it is used only for the purpose that God ordained for you, he declared. He issued a word of warning, not as a politician, but as one of the order, he said. "You are going into a fight such as never was before—everything is at stake—you stand for everything British and for British connections. Some people are trying to change the Union Jack as the National Flag of Canada," he said, "and whether that flag will be yours or some other take its place, is entirely up to you." Remember, he said, the principles for which you stand are the open Bible, one Flag, one Empire, and one Throne."

The Bible is the foundation of it all, he declared. "The secret of Englands greatness is the Bible—it is the constitution of the Empire; it is your constitution, and as long as the open Bible remains so the Orange Order will never pass away."

At the conclusion of the speeches the prizes were presented to the different lodges by Lieut.-Colonel G. A. Weeks.

Upon the arrival of the special train at Peterborough the local district marched along Water street to Dublin, and then down George street to the Orange Hall, where they dispersed with the usual formalities.

WEDDING BELLS.

KNOX—McGEE.

ASPHODEL, July 13.—A quiet wedding was solemnized at the United church parsonage, Emmiskillen, Ont., on Wednesday last, when Miss Martha Clarice McGee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel McGee of Asphodel and Mr. Matthew Knox, son of the late Robert Knox and Mrs. Knox, were united in marriage.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. E. M. Cooke, brother-in-law of the groom, and later the young couple left on a honeymoon trip to Toronto and thence by boat to the Thousand Islands.

WHITRED—GORDON.

ASPHODEL, July 13.—On Wednesday last at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gordon, of Asphodel, the wedding took place of their youngest daughter, Miss Jean Gordon, and Mr. Wm. C. Whitred, only son of Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Whitred of Hastings. Rev. D. A. Thompson of Hastings performed the ceremony assisted by Mr. George Bennette, pastor of the Norwood Presbyterian church.

The bride, who was dressed in peach georgette trimmed with gold lace, was given away by her father. The wedding march was played by her sister, Miss Flora. The young couple were attended by Miss Edith Buck and Mr. William Robert Gordon, brother of the bride.

After a bountiful wedding luncheon had been served to about fifty guests, the young couple left Norwood on the afternoon C.P.R. train to spend their honeymoon in Hamilton and other Western Ontario points. On their return they will reside in Hastings.

PAKENHAM—ROBB.

NORWOOD, July 13.—At "Uplands", the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Robb, Norwood, a very pretty wedding was solemnized on Wednesday evening at 7 o'clock, when their daughter, Reta Ellen, was united in mariage to Frances Roderick Pakenham, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Pakenham of Norwood.

The ceremony, which was witnessed by a few friends of the contracting parties, was conducted by Rev. T. M. Wesley, assisted by Rev. R. F. Stillman.

The bride, who was given away by her father, was attired in an imported white georgette frock and wore a veil and coronet of orange blossoms. Her bouquet was sunset roses, lilies of the valley and fern. Miss Ruth Thompson of Guelph, niece of the bride, and Miss Ruth Pakenham, niece of the groom, dressed in blue and pink frocks, made dainty little flower girls. The wedding march was played by Mrs. John Thompson of Guelph, sister of the bride.

After the wedding luncheon was served the young couple left on a trip through the Eastern states. After their return they will spend a short time at Stoney Lake before going to Toronto, where they will reside.

CRISP—BEST.

COBOURG, July 13.—A pretty marriage took place on Wednesday, July 7, at the home of the brides parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Best, formerly of Campbellford, when their daughter, Helen Frances, was united in marriage to Norman Douglas Crisp, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Crisp, Toronto. Only the immediate relatives were present, owing to the illness of the bride's father. The rooms were charmingly decorated with peonies and other summer flowers and the ceremony took place beneath an arch and wedding bell of daisies, with the columns of peonies, and banked with ferns. The bride looked very pretty in her wedding frock of white georgette with an embroidered veil becomingly arranged, and she carried a bouquet of Ophelia roses and lilies of the valley. She was unattended.

Rev. H. B. Kenny, Beleville, performed the ceremony. Miss Laura Freman, Toronto, played the wedding march. Mrs. McCarty sang, "Beloved it is Morn". Mr. and Mrs. Crisp left later for a trip to Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, before going to Toronto, where they will reside. The bride travelled in a rosewood ensemble suit with hat to match.

MORROW—HILL.

Grace United Church, Toronto decorated with palms and peonies, was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Wednesday afternoon, June 30, when Dorothy Dixon Hill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond B. Gravlin, was united in marriage to Clifford Roy, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Morrow, of Peterboro. The nuptial knot was tied by Rev. George W. Barker, pastor of the church.

The bride, who entered the church on the arm of her father, to the strains of Mendelssohn's "Wedding March," played by Mrs. W. L. Linton, looked lovely in a gown of white georgette, trimmed with seed pearls. Her tulle veil was made in cap effect with Honiton lace and held in place by a wreath of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of white Ophelia roses and lily of teh valley, and wore the groom's the valley, and wore the groom's

The bridesmaids were Miss Marjorie Gravlin, of Montreal. and Miss Edythe Kittermaster, of Toronto. They were gowned in dresses of mauve and pink georgette respectively with large picture hats, and carried pink Ophelia roses and mauve sweet peas.

The groom was attended by Mr. George Baird as best man. Mr. T. A. Morrow, brother of the groom, and Mr. H. R. Hill, brother of the bride, were ushers.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents. Mrs. Gravlin received in a gown of black georgette over black and white, large black picture hat, and wore a corsage bouquet of mauve sweet peas and lily of the valley. She was assisted by Mrs. W. G. Morrow, mother of the groom, who wore black satin faced crepe, trimmed with white georgette, small black hat and a corsage bouquet of pansies and ferns.

Amid a shower of confetti and good wishes the happy couple left to spend their honeymoon in the Georgian Bay district. The bride travelled in a blonde ensemble costume of flat crepe with hat and shoes to match. Upon their return Mr. and Mrs. Morrow will reside in Toronto.

MILLBROOK CHURCH HOLDS GARDEN FETE

Citizens' Band Provides Music—Held at H. A. Fallis' Residence.

MILLBROOK, July 13.—Fine weather favored the annual garden party, which this year took the form of a strawberry festival, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of the United church, held on the large grounds of H. A. Fallis' residence, Fallis Line, on Thursday evening.

Cars were provided for the convenience of those from the village who wished to attend the gathering, and speakers during the evening commented favorably on the choice of location for the enjoyable event.

The Citizens' Band, under the leadership of C. Thorndyke, provided music while the supper was being served before the formal programme began, adding materially to the success of the social occasion and the entertainment of the people in attendance.

Three long tables, laden with tempting viands, were laid on the lawn east of the house, and were repeatedly filled before all comers were served and satisfied.

Streamers of red, white and blue bunting, flags, and Japanese lanterns decorated the verandah, the booth, and the grounds, and Mr. and Mrs. Fallis, with their well-known spirit of hospitality, welcomed the guests and did all in their power for their enjoyment. Aubrey Fallis assisted his parents in this agreeable task.

Rev. F. H. Howard was chairman, and the Misses Ella Elson and Estelle Hetherington were the accompanists of the evening. The verandah was utilised for the programme, the items being as follows:

Selection by the Band.

Song, "I'm Henry the Eighth, I am," by Mr. Gallagher; encore, "She does not care for me."

Song, "I come from Alabama," by the M.C.S. Sextette: Walter Sayles, Kenneth Skitch, Piercy Pitt, Jack Byam, Lawrence Rowland, and R. Larmer.

Encore, "Carry me back to old Virginny."

Selection, "The Wooden Soldiers," by the M.C.S. Glee Club.

Address by Rev. Joseph Wilks.

Address by A. J. Fallis, M.P.P.

Duet, "The Milkmaid's Song," by Jean Stinson and Lawrence Rowland; encore, "I'm so shy."

Song, "Hang out the front door key," by Mr. Gallagher.

Selection by the Band.

Selection, "No Sir", by the Sextette.

Encore, "Good Night, Ladies."

National Anthem.

A sale of berries, cakes, pies, etc., was held at the conclusion of the programme, the ladies having provided so generously that a quantity of supplies were still untouched when appetites had been abundantly satisfied.

Much of the success of the garden party was due to the careful planning of the two vice-presidents, Mrs. A. J. Brown and Mrs. J. McKnight, who had the chief responsibility in the absence of the president, Miss M. E. Needham, the latter, however, being home for the final arrangements. Others who gave willing assistance were: Mrs. G. Locke Mrs. R. H. and Mrs. Ross Edmunds, Mrs. H. W. Johnston, Mrs. W H. Ball, Mrs. W. Mullen, Mrs. F. H. Howard, Mrs. S. Fallis, Mrs. W Fred Fallis, Mrs. O. Williamson, Mrs. G. E. Burnham, Mrs. A. J. Henderson, Mrs. Arthur Fallis, Mrs. F. W. Smith, Mrs. G. Freelove; Messrs W. E. Ball, A. J. Brown, W. F. Fallis, Dr. A Jemison H W. Johnston, W. G Hetherington and several others.

Communion Service.

The quarterly communion service was observed in the United church last Sunday morning, Rev. Mr. Howard completing his series of sermons on the three attributes of Jehovah, "God is light", "God is love", and "God is life." Rev. Joseph Wilks assisted the pastor with the sacrament, the elders officiating being: Messrs. Dr. D. Avison, G. E. Burnham, Dr. A. Jemison, S. Hamilton, H. A. Earl and W. E. Ball.

The communion trays were used for the first time, the gifts of Mr. J. Edgar Burnham, of St. Petersburg, Florida, and his mother, in loving memory of the late Dr. E. L. Burnham who was for some time choir leader in the former Methodist church. Holders on the back or alternate pews to receive the communion glasses were also in use for the first time donated by a member of the church whose identity has not been disclosed. The pastor, in announcing the gifts, commented on the fine spirit which has prevailed ever since the United church came into being, a number of donations having been received which facilitate the worship services.

New plates for receiving the offering will be in use for next Sunday's services.

To Give Your Gums a Healthy Coral Tint

and restore "off-color" teeth to clearness

Accept full 10-day tube of this new way, widely urged by dental authorities. Note the change in the color of your teeth and gum firmness as dingy film goes.

* * *

There is now a way to quickly lighten and polish cloudy teeth; a way world's dental authorities advise. Your teeth are not naturally off color . . . simply clouded by a film coat. Run your tongue across your teeth and you'll feel it . . . a slippery sort of coating.

It absorbs discolorations from food, smoking, etc. Germs breed in it and invite tooth decay, pyorrhea and gum troubles. It is known that ordinary dentifrices don't fight film successfully.

Remove it and you'll be amazed

Today get the film-removing dentifrice called Pepsodent. Send the coupon for a 10-day supply free. Or . . . purchase full size for a few cents at your druggist's.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite Shawnee Okla.

Joseph M. Stephenson, publisher of the South Bend (Indiana) News Times says—

THAT spending money IN your own community helps to make more money FOR your community.

Every sale, theoretically, creates a profit. The profit goes into a bank or is used in further purchases and sales.

If the money you spend goes into your local banks, your local banks lend it to a local investor—to expand his business to employ more men and women, to increase his service.

Or your bank may lend it to a home builder, establishing him as a good citizen, and an asset to the community, and immediately increasing the value of his neighbor's real estate.

Thus every profit made in the community through our purchases returns dividends to you and to your city.

When you spend money away from home, neither your neighbors nor your townspeople benefit. Such money goes to build up other cities and other communities at YOUR expense.

Can you imagine a city without shops, without stores, without banks? If everybody spent money out of town, there would be no trade in town. If there were no trade in town, there wouldn't be any town.

Your money is a builder, whether it builds for you at home, or whether it builds for somebody else out of town, whom you neither know nor care anything about.

Daily Short Story

THE BOLT FROM THE BLUE

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

The proverbial "bolt from the blue" was simply not in it when it came to the surprise which the six lucky girls had when they were informed that they had inherited something like fifty thousand dollars. Hometown, where the girls hailed from was instantly put on the map.

None of the girls had ever, in their most vivid dreams, even thought fleetingly of possessing something in the neighborhood of eight thousand dollars, but that is exactly what happened.

An eccentric old lady, supposedly not well off, had become much attached to the girls, who had done all sorts of little friendly things for her when she had tried to regain her lost health the year before in the quiet little town. When she died, she left them her money.

"I'm strong for keeping the money all together and going to New York and starting a tea-room or interior decorating shop," proposed Ella and there was an almost unanimous agreement. "Hometown certainly is a bit dull."

It was Joan alone who differed from the rest.

"Why not start something in Hometown? All country girls seem to think New York is the one and only place in the world and half of them go there and take the wrong turning and that sort of thing and then—well there are millions of tea-rooms and decorating shops in New York—heaps of competition and all that. Right, here in Hometown we have the start of everyone, the advantage of knowing everyone and we could do a lot more with our money here than in any New York."

"Hear! Hear!" shouted the other five.

"It's all right," went on Joan and her very blue eyes had taken on a keener blue, "but most girls think they're going to find something grand in the way of a man or a stage career if they go East, but, believe me, there's just as much real joy and interest to be had right here if we take the trouble to make it. Now, I say that if we can get that corner opposite Wester's movie and open a spiffy little tea and coffee-room and have one big room for dancing and start some kind of a dramatic club and build a tiny library we'll have a lot more fun out of it than going among a bunch of perfect strangers."

Fifty thousand would go a long way toward building up Hometown, but New York would gobble it as a hen a choice worm.

"We could put summer houses and benches along the river bank and add another little wing to the church and ——" it was Margy now who was spouting plans and before anyone knew it the six girls had in their mind's eye made a Hometown into one of those perfect towns that occasionally beautify the country.

"Yes, but to come down to business. Who is going to do the dickering for property? Which one of us is the best bargain driver?"

Five pair of eyes rested upon Joan.

"Joan dear," said Margy, "we are no judge of bargain drivers but we do know a pair of useful eyes when we see them. Your long lashes above the blue of your eyes will go a thousand miles further in striking a bargain than all the words in the world."

Joan swept her five friends with a laughing glance. "I believe you're all afraid of the new real estate man, but I am not and shall brave the lion in his den this very day.

And true to her promise Joan donned the new costume which exactly matched the blue of her eyes and approached the office of the newly-established real estate man whose sign bore the name Henry Vale.

Vale was distinctly pleased with his client for two reasons. First, because she embodied all that his dreams had ever pictured as the perfect woman and secondly because Joan was propounding the scheme which not only met but merged straight into the heart of his own pet hobby.

"Miss Varney, I left a big city to come here and be a factor in the building up and beautifying of Hometown. I want to grow right up with it and be a real part of it and know everyone in the town. I shall rent your syndicate the corner for one hundred dollars less than I would to anyone else."

The flash of joy in Joan's eyes was certainly the real bolt from the blue into Vale's life. It quite sent his rather steady head spinning, and he knew then and there that Joan was one day going to occupy a second chair at his dinner table, and in fact his breakfast and supper table as well, but he refrained from telling her so just at the moment.

And when Joan returned to the eager girls awaiting news, with contracts and things in her hands there was such a dreamy look in her very blue eyes that instant suspicion leaped up among them.

"I believe," she said shyly, "that if we wanted to rent even a pet cow in Hometown and Mr. Vale had anything to do with it we could get it at a most nominal rent—he's exceedingly—nice."

"Oh-h!" came from all five. "Are you sure you didn't get into a matrimonial agency by mistake?" one questioned.

"You never can tell," laughed Joan. "But let's talk of our money before we discuss matrimony." And then she ran away.

Lyrics Of Life

(By Douglas Malloch.)

WITHOUT A HORN.

The tooter on the car won't toot:
There's something wrong about the wires.
The car's all there, from top to tires,
In good repair, in good repute.
And yet, although I push and jerk
And pull the thing, the horn won't work.

I'm helpless, nearly scared to death
Each minute in the driver's seat.
At every crossing in the street
I clench my teeth, I hold my breath.
To drive without it is a sin,
In fact they ought to run me in.

I never knew before how much
I used that horn, depended on
That horn until that horn was gone;
But now it seems each block I touch
That button all along the route,
And find the tooter will not toot.

I wonder if it isn't so
With friends, with money, lots of things?
The time misfortune often brings
When friends are far, or business slow,
And things we hardly knew we had
We want, and want almighty bad.

We waste our money, hurt our friends,
Hold blessings lightly when they're here,
And never know how really dear
They are until some blessing ends;
And then, perhaps too late, recall
How much we need them, after all.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

(By Mildred Marshall.)

Facts about your name, its history; its meaning; whence it was derived; its significance; your lucky day, and lucky jewel.

MARTHA.

The names of the sisters of Bethany, Mary and Martha, are closely allied. While Mary signifies bitter, Martha means becoming bitter. Since the sister of the Blessed Virgin bore the same name as her own, both are said to come from Mara (bitter), though some believe that Martha comes from Aramean mar (a lord), which was often heard as the title of Syrian bishops.

Martha of Bethany, according to legend, demolished a terrible dragon by holding up a cross one time when her family was making a journey through wild country. The Marfa of Rusia is, of course, like the English Martha, Matty and Patty (though by rights, the last named is a diminutive of Patricia and not connected with Martha at all). Indeed in Russia, Martha is considered the true housewifely woman of the Bible, independent of the legend of the dragon.

Martha's equivalent has been a royal name there for many centuries, occurring frequently among the daughters of the earlier czars. The Martha used in Ireland is only an equivalent for the native Erse Meabhdh, Meave or Mab, once a great Irish princess, who has since become Queen of the Fairies, and is universally known as Queen Mab. Martha was used for Mor in Scotland. Marthe and Marthon of the south of France and the rarer Marta of Italy and Spain were all from the Provencal dragon-slayer. The name has always had a quaint old-fashioned ring and its popularity will never cease, due no doubt to its Biblical reference.

The pearl is most appropriately Martha's jewel, representing, as it does, purity of thought. Its heritage of tears would seem a fitting attribute for Martha. Monday is said to be her lucky day and 7 her lucky number.

LOVE LETTERS THAT MADE HISTORY

(By Joseph Kaye.)

RICHARD BRINSLEY SHERIDAN AND BETTY LINLEY

The romance between Sheridan and Betty Linley would do credit to the imagination of a writer of fiction. Betty was a beauty of Bath, the famous English resort. She was the daughter of a musician and gifted with both a lovely voice and beauty. Sheridan also lived in Bath and fell in love with the belle. But Betty had a mob of admirers, and among them was a certain Captain Mathews, who, despite being a married man, paid persistent court to her.

Here we have the heroine, the hero and the villian. And before long the villian became so vile that complications of the plot ensued. To save Betty from the villian's unpleasant attentions, Sheridan arranged to elope with her to France, just for convenience sake. The young couple eloped and secretly married. Then father Linley appeared on the scene and hastily took Betty away to Bath, ignorant that she was married.

The man and wife in name only lived apart, of course, and the villianous captain, alleging evil intentions to Sheridan, publicly insulted him. They fought two duels. Sheridan was injured, and besides this physical injury he suffered mental tortures from the effects of Betty's teasing flirtations with other men.

At length the course of their love grew smoother and they were formally united in a second marriage and lived very happily.

"Twelve o'clock! You unconscionable creature, to make me sit up to this time of night to scribble nonsense to you when you will not let me hear from you for one week to come. O, my dear, you are the tyrant indeed. You do not fancy I would do this if it was not equally aggreeable to myself. Indeed, my dearest love, I am never happy except when I am with you. Why did you go away so soon tonight? It was a consolation to me that you was so near me. I gave up my cards the moment you left me as I could not play with any patience. My mother and me called on Miss Roscoe this evening when we talked a great deal about you. Miss R. said she was sure you and I would make a match of it. Nay, she said the whole world was of the opinion that we should be married in less than a month. Only think of it, bright Hev'ns! God bless you, my dear, dear love. Am so weary I must go to bed. There is but one thing that could keep me awake and that is your company.

"Upon my knees, half nacked, once more I am going to tire you with nonsense. I could not bear to see this blank little space without filling it up, tho I do not know with what as I have almost exhausted my budget of news which I collected since our long absence.

"ELIZABETH."

Sheridan is the author of the famous comedies, "The Rivals" and "The School for Scandal." He was one of the most brilliant men that England produced, and through this brilliancy of intellect, a popular guest at every salon of note. Besides his work as a playwright, he engaged in politics and was elected to the Commons, where he developed into a great statesman. His eloquence as an orator has become a matter of history. In the celebrated impeachment of Warren Hastings he made a speech lasting five and a half hours and held his listeners spellbound during the entire period.

Betty was an ideal partner in life for him, combining beauty and grace with a practical mind.

IS IT BLACKMAIL?

"Judy, Judy. I don't understand you," said Mamie Riley. "I never knew a girl to say such things before."

"Perhaps not. But even you, my dear, have thought them, except you were tempted to give everything you had for love. You told me yourself that you were sorry that you had ever left Buddy Tremaine."

"Yes, I know," said Mamie, "but I have found out that I didn't mean it after all. I could not accept anything, even from Buddy, except in the way in which he has just given it to me. I couldn't even borrow all that money from him if he were going to stay in Toronto."

"It's a terrible thing for men to have so much money, Mamie, to do with as they please. I'll wager Mr. Robinson does not think he is a wicked man, notwithstanding he is really a menace to society with his wealth and power."

"Don't you love that last sentence, Mamie?" I could n't help exclaiming.

"What a reformer people would call me with my 'menace to society' and 'wealth and power' nonsense? Golly, I am afraid I am getting too good: I know I am getting too serious, and because of that I am going to have some fun and a few perfectly natural thrills. Incidentally I think, also, I am going to even up a few things for Martha Cleaver."

"Dear Judy, you scare me out of my next year's growth when you talk this way," exclaimed Mamie. "What are you going to do, and how are you going to do it?"

"Well, I'll tell you what I am going to do. I am going to get that fifty thousand dollars for Joan. Just how I am going to get it I don't know at the present moment. But I know it is lying around loose in some bank and I know it belongs to Joan and she has got to have it. I've got to get it out for her before the bank closes this afternoon."

Mamie looked at me blankly. "Fifty thousand dollars," she murmured. "You speak of it as though it were fifty cents. Do you know, Judy, that when Buddy deposited twenty-five thousand in the bank for me and brought me the bank book and I saw it written at the top of the page, I was so scared that my knees trembled, and that is only half of what you are expecting to get from someone within the next few hours.'

"'Twenty-five thousand dollars,' I read it over in the little book with my name on it and thought, 'Why that is a fortune. More than my father and my mother earned in all their lives.' Judy, for a little while it didn't seem possible that there was so much money in the world. I almost had an irresistible desire to go down to the bank and have the cashier pass it out to me in yellow-backed bills.

"I am not yet used to it. I open that little book many times a day and look at those two words at the top of the page 'May 7, 1926—25,000.00' and I wonder if those are really magic words and if I can write a check and have all that money turned over to me."

YOUR JEWEL COLOR FLOWER

By Mildred Marshall

The diamond is both the talismanic and natal gem for this day. It attracts good fortune to all who seek it with honest endeavor and endows them with courage and strength to meet all difficulties. To those born on an anniversary of this date it brings power to attract sincere, and constant love, if it is set in gold and worn on the left hand or arm.

Rose color is the hue prescribed for wear today. Especially fortunate will it prove for those who are seeking social preferment, since it attracts to them those whom they would know.

The purple violet is the lucky flower for this day. It is supposed to bring happiness to those who wear it.

HOROSCOPE

"The Stars Incline, but do not Compel"

TUESDAY JULY 13 1926.
(Copyright, 1926, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Astrologers read this as rather an uncertain day. Although a benefic aspect dominates during business hours, there are many adverse influences.

There is a good sign for newspapers, their publishers and editors. Advertising and publicity will be much in demand owing to extraordinary events, it is foretold.

Financial matters are well directed today and banks are subject to favorable conditions making for great increase in territory and scope of business.

Opportunities to lend large amounts of money to foreign nations will cause much discussion of international affairs, the seers foretell.

This is held to be a most fortunate planetary direction for merchants and manufacturers who will have many demands upon their resources.

New leaders are to continue to appear, for the world will welcome those who are able dictators, whether they are labeled or not.

The death of a world-famous American is presaged and his loss will be of serious significance to important business interests.

In the financial world there may be an attempt at a gigantic swindle, but it may be unsuccessful.

Many crimes which have money as their incentive will be reported. Embezzlements and forgeries may be more numerous than they have been recently.

Municipal improvements on a big scale will be pushed far into the winter, it is prognosticated, and many cities will be beautified.

Persons whose birthdate it is should be extremely cautious in the coming year when legal papers should be carefully watched.

Children born on this day may be high-tempered and self-willed. These subjects of Cancer often have superlative gifts and should be most carefully trained.

Let any man speak long enough, he will get believers.

Bosom Fronts Recognize Neither Age Nor Sex

SHIRTS, "smokings," and trouser plaits perpetuate the garçonne type of dress in a season somewhat addicted to frills and furbelows. The bosom-shirt front with the type of turnback collar that the French boy wears on his sports shirt is smart for all ages and both sexes. It makes a daytime frock very correct in style for those exacting and suspicious years between eight and fifteen when a youngster insists that nothing sissylike or small-girlish be put over on her. The newest Summer materials are rayon alpaca, rayon-and-cotton crêpe, chints, cotton foulard and cotton prints. Gingham and the pongees are also smart.

The Examiner does not sell these patterns.

TRENCH MOUTH.

From its name—we may suppose that this disease was one of the 'minor horrors of war.' Because of its prevalence among the troops during the recent great war, this mouth lesion known more properly as Vincent's disease, or Vincent's Angina, has been popularly called 'Trench Mouth.'

Its symptoms are well described as follows—sudden onset, rapid destruction of the gingivae, the interdental, papillae disappearing. It gives the gum the appearance of almost a straight line covered with a greyish white membrane which bleeds at the slightest provocation. Associated with it is a characteristic offensive odor, a slight fever, loss of appetite, sleeplessness and general listlessness or malaise.

It is, too, a true contagion, its source being chiefly from contamination, such as from drinking out of common cups, or through eating from common dishes, or from using common utensils.

With the appearance of the first symptoms, the family dentist should be consulted forthwith since home remedies are useless.

Happily, through prompt and proper treatment, the disease can be quickly brought under control and speedily terminated.

Unfortunately, however, where it has progressed to the stage of tissue destruction, it is not to be expected that following treatment there will be a restoration of the tissues to their original normal form. There will be a measure of failure in tissue regeneration, its consequences are more or less unpitying and the condition induced will ever afterward demand an exacting regime of mouth toilet for hygienic purposes.

While fortunately, this disease is not of wide occurrence, yet, because of its ever present meance, there should be no laxity in the matter of taking precautionary measures as safeguards against this contagion.

Sanitary public drinking fountains are most essential as a preventive measure, whilst personal habits of eating and drinking should be fastidiously correct.

Peasants and servants of Haiti who formerly went barefoot, are adopting the custom of wearing shoes to such an extent that nearly three times the number of new shoes were sent there from America in the last year as in the previous twelve month.

ENGLISH HOPE OF WIN SINKS LOW AS AUSTRALIAN SCORE MOUNTS UP

FORTUNE'S WHEEL.

Brilliant Trio of Batsmen Place Visitors in Fine Position.

LEEDS, England, July 13 (Canadian Press) — The barometer of England's cricket hopes sank with astounding rapidity yesterday. From the buoyant expectations of a comforting match in which it was anticipated that England would again exhibit perfect form against the visiting Australians, the feeling among followers of the game has degenerated to a point where they figure that England will be fortunate indeed if she emerges from the third test match with a draw. The question last night was: Will England save the follow-on?

Australias score stands at 494 in the first innings, and England's totai is 203 for eight wickets. With the citadel of only two batsmen to fall, England is faced with the task of getting 142 runs in order to Stave off the order to continue for a second innings. What this might mean for the home country is too serious to contemplate. At the best it means an inglorious draw; at the worst, an overwhelming defeat.

"Laws of Cricket"

Clause 53 of the "Laws of Cricket" says:

"The side which bats first and leads by 150 runs in a three days match x x x shall have the option of requiring the other side to follow their innings."

The Australians, whose chances are now at the zenith, are elated over the turn in fortune's wheel which revolved entirely to their favor. The praises of three batsmen are being sung widely—Charles G. Macartney, W. M. Woodfull and A. Richardson. Each one knocked out a cenutry in the Antipodeans first innings, Macartney with 151, Woodfull 141, and Richardson 100. J. S. Ryder came next with 42 and J. M. Gregory with 26. The fact that the other six players could get only 24 runs among them was unimportant. The fate of England hangs in the balance, with the scales tipped ominously in the direction of the southern cross.

The resumption of play yesterday forenoon, which was witnessed by between 35,000 and 40,000 spectators, found the Australians with a score of 366 for three wickets. Warren Dardsley had been ousted at zero; Macartney was down for 151, and T. J. E. Andews had terminated his innings with 4. Woodful with 134 and Richardson with 70 were at bat.

Weak Spots

The game opened with the batsmen feeling out the weak spots in England's armour, but the first surprise came when, having added seven runs to his total, Woodfull had his stumps crashed by Maurice Tate. J. M. Taylor came in to keep company with Richardson, but he lasted only for four runs, Strudwick getting him behind the wicket off Geary.

The hard-hitting J. M. Gregory was next man up, and his robust batting delighted the crowd. He stayed for half an hour and had got 26 when Geary caught him off Roy Kilner. Meanwhile Richardson was doing manful work, scoring steadily despite his worries over Tate's bowling. He was joined by Ryder, but at the same time Carr changed his bowlers, putting on Macaulay of Yorkshire. This completely discomfited Richardson, who, in his anxiety was snapped up by Macaulay and run out by a throw down the pitch.

The Australian "tail-enders" were not particularly impressive. W. H. Oldfield assisted Ryder to accumulate several groups of fours, but when Ryder's wicket fell before Tate's onslaught, the scoring practically ended, and the Antipodeans retired at only six runs short of the 500.

England Opens

England opened with the usual pairing, Jack Hobbs of Surrey and Sutcliffe of Yorkshire. At Lord's in the second test match they had had a damaging innings, and fully as much was expected of them yesterday. Against them, Warren Bardsley had set Gregory and Macartney. The runs came slowly. The Englishmen lacked the ease with which they had accumulated their previous score and it was after fully seventy minutes of play that the half century was hoisted. At 26 Sutcliffe succumbed to Grimmett, and Fred E. Woolley joined Hobbs.

The batting continued featureless and runs came with painful slowness. Bardsley changed his bowlers, relieving Grimmett with Arthur Mailey and off Mailey's fourth delivery England's premier batsman was dismissed, to a catch by Andrews. The score was 104 for two wickets.

Unsubdued by this reverse, Hendren of Middlesex went to the wicket and began playing with confidence. But this was rudely disturbed when for a second time Andrews did the honors for Mailey, and Hendren retired with a duck-egg.

Woolley Run Out

The "players" gave way to the "gentlemen" and A. W. Carr, the captain, went in to pair with Woolley. No sooner had he got set when he had the mortification of seeing Woolley run himself out in trying to get two runs where one was the only possible. The score with four wickets down was 110, A.P.F. Chapman joined Carr.

The batting was determined, but little headway could be made against Macartney, whose bowling was deadly. Carr withdrew at 13 and Roy Kilner partnered Chapman. An encouraging stand was made at this stage with Kilner hitting freely off Grimmett. It did not last, however, for Chapman went the way of his confreres at 15 when Macartney scattered his stumps. From then on, England's innings was not inspiring. Maurice Tate was stumped and Kilner was eventually caught out.

When the play closed for the second day Geary and Macaulay were at bat, with Strudwick to go in.

Millbrook journeyed to Mt. Pleasant on Thursday evening for the second game of the season with the latter team, resulting in Mount Pleasant being the victors by the score of 10 to 4. Mount Pleasant, behind the smart pitching of Art Bryons, played their best fielding game of the season.

Harry Jemison, playing second base for the winners, was the star of the game, taking care of several hard grounders. Russell, pitching his first game of the year for Millbrook, was very wild.

Batteries for the game: Mount Pleasant, A. Bryons and B. Bryons. Millbrook, Russell and Gilmour. Umpires, Boyd, Mt. Pleasant, behind the plate; McCorry, of Millbrook, on the bases.

ORIOLES ON TOP IN BOTH GAMES

Leafs Lose First After Overcoming Three Run Lead.

SHEEDY INJURED.

TORONTO, July 13 (Canadian Press).—Baltimore opened an important series with Toronto here yesterday by winning both games of the double header. Owen Carroll was wild in the first contest, passing no less than ten, while he hit two more and was beaten by 6 to 5 in ten innings, after the Leafs had overcome a three run lead, and gone to the front 5 to 3.

Clayton Sheedy, Baltimore outfielder, was hit in the head by a pitched ball in the fifth innings, a cut requiring three stitches being inflicted. It was thought at first that he had suffered a fracture and was rushed to the hospital, where it was found that he was not seriously injured. He will be back in the game in a day or two.

The injury to Sheedy appeared to have unnerved Carroll, and he was not so effective during the balance of the game.

George Earnshaw was unhittable in the second game, yielding but three hits and winning 4 to 0. He struck out ten.

Quellich, Rochester outfielder, who has been loaned to Baltimore while Pitt is unable to play owing to injuries, hit a home run with one on base in the first inning of the second game.

The Leafs played ragged baseball in the both contests.

Syracuse walloped Reading 16 to 2, in the only other game played, rain causing the postponement of the Newark at Buffalo encounter, and the contest between Jersey City and Rochester at the latter city. At Syracuse, the Stars got off to a good start with five runs in the initial inning and from them on, steadily accumulated their margin. Beard, Ellis and Marquis were the luckless Reading twirlers.

ROBINS TRIM CHICAGO CUBS

Manager Robinson Reads the Riot Act To Players.

LEADERS WIN.

NEW YORK, July 13 (Canadian Press)—Manager Robinson read the riot act to his team yesterday, telling the players to get out and play ball as he had waivers on ten of them in his pocket. The Robins immediately went out, launched a vicious attack on Milstead in the fourth inning and shut out the Chicago Cubs in the latter's own back yard by a 5 to 0 count. Dazzy Vance was forced to retire in the fifth when a line drive hit him on the arm, but he was in long enough to be credited with the victory.

By the win Brooklyn clambered to within one percentage point of the Cubs, in fourth place.

The two National leaders won their games, the Reds breaking a bad spell of Gianitis, when they earned a 7 to 5 verdict over the Phillies. The game was a heavy hitting affair with Cincinnati getting off to a flying start with six runs in the first three innings. The second-place Pirates kept pace by halting the New York Giants' midseason rush with a 6 to 3 victory in the opening of the series at Pittsburgh. Four runs on four hits in the sixth put the game away for the homesters.

Boston broke a six-all tie in the ninth at St. Louis when they scored two runs without reply from the Cards, the Braves winning eight to six.

PRACTICE GAMES

The Kiwanis Midgets and Juveniles will practice at King Edward school grounds on Wednesday at 6 o'clock sharp. Every player is expected to turn out.

The Kiwanis Bantams will practice on Wednesday and Friday, at 5 o'clock.

A PAIR OF BIRDS

SAMMY BOHNE (LEFT) AND ANDY COHEN

Jewish ball players in the majors are conspicuous by their absence. Here are the only two in the National League. Oddly enough, both are infielders, Bohne playing shortstop for Cincinnati, while Cohen cavorts at short and second base for the Giants. In the American League Buddie Meyer is the lone representative of the Jewish race. He, too, is an infielder, playing third and short on the Washington club.

HOME FANS SEE SENATORS WIN

Beat St. Louis in Ten Innings After Being in Arrears.

CHANCE MISSED.

NEW YORK, July 13.—(Canadian Press).—Home teams fared badly today in American League games, the Washington Senators being the only host that presented the loyal home fans with a victory. The Senators came from behind to down the St. Louis Browns 7 to 6, in ten innings. Washington used four twirlers.

At Philadelphia the Athletics lost a chance to gain on the Yankees, who lost a 6 to 2 verdict to Cleveland, by bowing before Eddie Collins' White Sox by an 8 to 6 count. Sensational fielding by Mostil and homers by Collins and Falk did much to send the Mackmen to defeat. The Yanks were limited to four hits by George Uhle, while his mates used up three opposition pitchers in garnering thirteen hits. Home runs by Burns and Joe Sewell in the first aided materially in the Indian victory.

At Boston Ty Cobb's Detroit Tigers aided by Blue's fielding and the hitting of Fothergill and Manush took a 5 to 2 win from the Red Sox.

MEMORIES OF PAST

Order a union of their faith, for ever since the inception of the Order there has been no difference made between the different denominations."

"The Order has one object in view, that of protecting the Protestant faith. It is not necessary to be a good citizen to be an Orangeman, but a man who lives up to the principles of the Orange Order will be a good citizen. Members of the Order cannot take up a ritual against the belief of any indivdual, for the first duty of an Orangeman is to his Creator," said Mr. Cook.

"In the early pioneer days," continued the speaker, whenever a lodge room was built, a little church would soon follow, for in a great many of cases the church came into existence through the hearty co-operation of the Orange Society. The activities of the Church are the most efficient safeguard for life and property, so the Order has a duty to the Church.

"Second, is its duty to its country. For it makes good citizens who can earn their own living, lead a good life, and obey the laws and, doing these, the citizen has a right to demand a voice in the government of his country. For we have a wonderful land in which we all should be proud of," concluded the speaker.

Liberty

Rev. Norwood, minister of the United Church in Marmora stressed three things which the Order stands for: Liberty or freedom as liberty of poltics, liberty of speech and liberty in religion; equality in so far as religion, politics and nationality is concerned and fraternity, that all men are brothers.

John Sexsmith

"The 12th of July is a day which is very dear to the hearts of the people of Canada and the British Empire. The Orange institution stands for civil and religious liberty for no organization has done so much to maintain these principles as the Orange Order. We have men today in Canada who have been carrying on a government who would separate tomorrow and join Uncle Sam," said Mr. Sexsmith.

"In closing let me say to you that if you live up to the principles and constitution of the Order you will be looked up to as a model citizen and above all attend your church and stand for the Union Jack for there will be no changing of flags while the Orange Order has anything to say in Canada."

J. R. Cottrell the chairman of the committee who had charge of the celebration also spoke a few words about the famous Orphanage at Richmond Hill and of the great work that was being carried on there by the Loyal True Blue and the L.O.L. societies. In that institution the children were being brought up 100 per cent Protestant which could not be said of our present homes and churches. The Orange Order stated Mr. Cottrell has been trying for years to have our Protestant churches have a special Sunday in which Protestant principles would be taught but have been unsuccessful for there is not a 100 per cent Protestant atmosphere in our churches so the only place that true Protestantism is taught today is in the lodge rooms of the Orange Order and the Loyal True Blues.

Evening Program

In the evening the town hall was crowded to see the play and to hear Dr. Embury the late member for Hastings-Peterborough speak. The Citizens' band made their first appearance in Marmora and received a huge ovation. The play, which was being repeated was a three act comedy and the players took their parts like real artists. The Misses Hart gave several solos and dance numbers between the acts.

Dr. Embury made a very short speech as the hour was getting late when he was called upon. He said he did not look upon the 12th of July as a sectional affair as really the Roman Catholics and the Orangemen are fighting to a large extent for the same principle, namely freedom of religion and thought and it was every loyal citizen's duty to create a feeling of co-operation for Canada was a big country and was inhabited by two different races, the French and English. Our interests differ from theirs but we must create a spirit of goodwill and co-operation towards the French Canadians as they are as much the citizens of Canada as we are.

Those who took part in the play were: Katherine Henderson, a young wife, Myrtle Nayler; Frederick Henderson, her husband, Douglas Sanderson; Mrs. Wiggins, the landlady, Gertie Potts; Obadiah Stump, a fresh country product, Jack Grant; Francis Whittaker, an athletic girl, Jennie Sweet; Rosaline Otis, a society bud, Marjorie Colster; Robert D. Botts, the bashful one, Norman Norrie; Jean Graham, an Ontario peach, Jennie Connor; Marston Bobbs, anything but bashful, Gerald Potts; Celesta Vanderpool, of the movies, Lorraine Bell; Julie, her French maid, Bernice Bonter.

ORANGEMEN ATTEND MILLBROOK CHURCH

Rev. F. H. Howard Preaches Inspiring Sermon at Annual Parade.

MILLBROOK, July 13.—Headed by the Citizen's Band, under the leadership of Mr. C. Thorndyke, the annual parade of the district Orange lodges took place to the United Church on Sunday evening, over one hundred of the brethren being in attendance.

The church was well filled for the service, and the special musical numbers by the choir included a duet, "Come to Me," by Mrs. G. W. Sayles and her daughter, Miss Marjorie Sayles; an anthem, "O Lord, How Excellent is Thy Name," and a quartette, "The Day is Done," by Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Johnston, Miss May Byam, and Mr. M. McDowell.

Rev. F. H. Howard preached from the text Exodus 18:20, "And thou shalt teach them orinances and laws, and shalt show them the way wherein they must walk, and the work that the must do."

"I propose doing the Orange Order the compliment of taking them seriousl this evening, and I believe the more you think of it the more you will appreciate the fact," was the speaker's opening statement, going on to say, "You will recognize in my text the opening words of your Constitution; I am speaking to men who acknowledge their obedience to the Word of God, and who have voluntarily obligated themselves to wall and work in harmony with its instruction; men who are self-condemned if they fail to practice to the utmost of their powers the principles of the Christian religion."

"A member of the Orange Order affairms, under oath, a sincere love and veneration for his Almighty Maker; a full and steadfast faith in the Saviour of the world; he is a lover and improver of mankind, sworn to defend the Protestant religion, pledged to a hatred of cursing and swearing, and that temperance, sobriety and honesty will characterize his conduct. These principles it is no shame, but a credit, to announce to the public in general."

"What of an Orangeman who is not loyal to his vows? What of a husband who is not true to his wife, or a father to his family? What standing has such an one in the community? So an Orangeman should take his vows seriously or not take them at all; the man who merely bluffs is accorded no respect, and though the vows and priciples of the Order are in the nature of ideals honestly trying to reach the standard we can respect ourselves, others will respect us, too, and God accepts us. Be true, is my message to you, gentlemen, to-night."

"One who is zealous only in Lodge, or on the Twelfth of July, isn't much of an Orangeman; but the true member of the Order will always be a student of the laws of God, and the laws of his Order, living in harmony with what he learns in secret instruction and study, and socially a 'giver,' as well as a 'getter'."

"You are a company organized for service; all cannot lead in the van but all can be true, and if you are faithful to these noble, Christian principles, the world will be the better, and you will be entering into the labors and spirit of William, Prince of Orange, which you can only receive by drinking from the fountain of living waters from which he drank."

"As I read your constitution, your success as an Order depends upon your success as a Christian, and it is up to each man to make his best endeavor to reach this ideal. In Jesus Christ provision has been made for your past, and in His Spirit and His truth, provision is made for your present and your future."

The new offering plates were used for the first time on Sunday, the ushers for the evening service including Messrs. J. Larmer, J. Byam, A. J. Brown, C. Ball, W. G. Hetherington and G. E. Burnham.

The band gave a concert down town after the service, and the usual votes of thanks were passed upon the return to the Lodge room.

Mr. Haig was up and about as usual in the early morning, but feeling distress about the heart thought he would come to Campbellford and consult the doctor. His daughter, Miss Annie Haig and he were on the way to Campbellford and when driving by the English Line school house, Mr. Haig was taken suddenly with an attack of acute indigestion and died almost instantly. Annie stopped the car as quickly as possible and immediately called and obtained help. The deceased was removed to his home.

He is survived by his wife, formerly Miss Mary Gunning, one son Karl, a student of Medical Faculty of Queen's University, Kingston and one daughter, Miss Annie, at home. One brother, Dr. Andrew Haig, of town, and two sisters, Mrs. Ellen Rainie, of Toronto, and Mrs. George Hoard, of Hoard's also survive.

The late Mr. Haig was well known and highly respected. He was a member of the United church.

"Landscaping," Subject of Notable Lecture at Dominion Chautauqua

Edward A. Marshall, nationally known authority on landscape gardening, will be heard at the coming Dominion Chautauqua in a highly illuminating and helpful discussion on "Landscaping."

Mr. Marshall has made a lifelong study of landscape gardening in its relation to more attractive home surroundings. For the prospective buyer of property he gives important information regarding the selection of a home site; while for the renter, the home owner of average means, or the possessor of a large estate, his plans for making the grounds more attractive are thoroughly practical, and at the same time productive of highly artistic results.

To illustrate the various points of his lecture, Mr. Marshall arranges on a huge screen before his audience realistically painted pictures of a house, the grounds, trees, shrubs, walks, etc., until a well-landscaped ensemble is clearly depicted.

His talk on landscape gardening is one which everyone interested in home or civic beautification will thoroughly enjoy and from which they will derive immeasurable benefit.

BILLY EVANS Says

Who are responsible for the ground rules when an overflow crowd makes them necessary?

* * *

The managers or captains of the rival teams are supposed to agree on special rules necessary to take care of unusual situations that may arise because of having spectators on the field.

In most cases amicable agreements are reached. Occasionally there is a difference of opinion on some disputed point.

At such times it is up to the umpire to step into the breach and make a ruling which he believes eminently fair to both teams.

SOFTBALL GAME RESULTS IN TIE

C. G. E. and Firemen Tie in First Game of Taylor Cup Finals.

SCORE 4-4.

The first game of the Taylor Cup finals between the C.G.E. and Firemen resulted in a tie, the score being 4-4. Ten innings were played and then the game had to be called on account of darkness. Dunkerley shut the C.G.E. out in eight of the ten innings, in the fourth he walked four men, allowing three runs, which was the only bad innings he had.

The Firemen had only scored one up to the sixth, when they scored one more and got two in the eighth, which tied the game. Powell pitched for the C.G.E. up until the tenth innings, when Nicholls was put in the box.

Dunkerley walked six men and Powell four. The fielders gave wonderful support to their pitchers or the result would have been different, for at times the winning runs was on the bases.

The next game will be played at James Stevenson Park on Wednesday night at 6.30. Last night's game was played before a big crowd and to-morrow night's should be a real thriller. The line-up:

Firemen—Weese, 2b.; Carr, s.s.; Delahaye, c.; Lewis, 3b.; Crary, l.f.; Gimblett, 1b.; Manelley, r.f.; Hall, c.f.; Dunkerley, p.; Chief Gimblett and Astels spares.

SECRETS OF STARS ON INSIDE BASEBALL with Billy Evans

BY GEORGE SISLER.
Greatest of First Basemen.

Not only should he be a sure catch on thrown balls that he is able to handle with both hands, but he must become equally proficient with the gloved hand.

It has been figured that at least 30 per cent of the men retired die at first base. This makes it very apparent why it is so necessary that the first-sacker be well nigh perfect in handling thrown balls.

Every first-sacker can make his task far less difficult if he makes a careful study of the opposing batters. Then, after learning the strength and weakness of the rival team he should seek to put into execution the knowledge thus gained.

Knowing where a batter is most likely to hit the ball enables a first baseman to move a step or two or even more to his right or left in order to get that much of a jump on the ball, should the batter's effort run true to form.

In the major leagues, there are certain players known as "line-hitters." By that, I mean players who are notorious right field hitters and are more likely to pull the ball down the line rather than between the first and second basemen.

On such players it is well to hug the line closely.

The first baseman should always make an effort to get to the bag as quickly as possible, so as to offer a set target to the infielder about to make the throw. Incidentally, one is usually more sure while waiting for the ball than handling it on the run.

On fast hit balls it is often necessary for the infielder handling the ball to hold back his throw until the first baseman gets into a proper position to take it.

HELPFUL HINTS BY GOLFING STARS

By Special Arrangement With Colliers' Magazine.

JOHN ANDERSON — FEWER CLUBS — MORE PRACTICE.

The wise golfer will not spend his time practicing on any but those clubs which he uses the most and many a stroke can be saved by the average player if he will but study out his own clubs in the light of his game. For instance, why should a man who plays from the 12 to 15-handicap figure waste time trying to play a cleek, or a driving iron, a driving mashie or jigger when his drive leaves him, 12 of the 18 holes, within a midiron shot of the green.

Why clutter up a bag with many clubs when there can be found for their use no real excuse? Buy 10 mashies if you must or 10 midirons or a dozen drivers or brassies until the right ones with the correct feel are secured, but first of all analyze your own game in relation to the length of the holes of the course where you play the most.

Soon you will find that what you need is not more clubs but more practice with a certain club to help you once in a while to paralyze par.

DIES WHILE BOWLING.

Prominent Toronto Man Collapses During Game—Had Been Alderman.

TORONTO, July 13.—Collapsing while engaged in a game of bowling on the Kew Beach bowling green, 154 Lake Front, last evening at 9.30 o'clock, George W. Cruise was carried to his home, at 24 Waverley Road, where he passed away at 10 o'clock, having suffered, it is said, from a hemorrhage of the brain. Dr. R. E. Davidson and Dr. Donald Kilgour, who were called at the moment of Mr. Cruse's collapse, were with him when he died. The late Mr. Cruise was well known throughout the East End, being president of Ward 8 Liberal-Conservative Association, and president of the Kew Beach Bowling Club. He served as Alderman during the years 1922 and 1923. The deceased had been a resident of the East End for 30 years. In his fifty-sixth year, he was born in St. Mary's, Ont.

RACING DOGS IS NEWEST THRILL

Whippet Has Been Developed Into Fastest Thing on Legs.

GAME TO DEATH.

Pound for pound, the fastest thing that goes on two legs, or four. Game to death! Such is the whippet dog, which, trained as a racer, is giving the world a sport a new thrill in gratifying its mania for speed.

Although whippet racing has become largely an amusement of the very wealthy, it originated among the poorly-paid miners and cotton mill workers of the north of England, and was brought to America by workers in the textile mills of New England.

For a thousand years or so, the greyhound was the favorite dog of the English aristocracy, and coursing one of the popular amusements of the wealthy. The English workingman is as much a sport lover and as much a dog lover as is his more fortunate countryman, but the big greyhound was "too much dog" for the miner, who often had to keep himself, his family and his dog in a single room. So the little whippet, which weighs anywhere from five to twenty-five pounds—the favored weights being seventeen to twenty-five pounds—was obtained by crossing the Italian greyhound (the same dog as the English greyhound, but smaller) with the wire-coated fox terrier. Careful breeding has resulted in a dog that has the speed of the greyhound combined with the alert aggressiveness of the terrier.

Whippet racing, in the opinion of Arthur Grahame, who describes this sport in Popular Science Monthly, is a game that should make a strong appeal to any man who likes to train and handle animals—to the kind of man who would like to own a racing stable if he could only afford it. Breeding whippets may be combined with racing them. Fast whippets bring good prices.

Though whippets are bred almost exclusively for racing, they make good trick dogs, and also affectionate pets and companions. But it is as a racing dog that the whippet is most interesting—a miniature racing machine as perfect in its way as the thoroughbred racehorse.

Reliable records of the speeds of wild animals in their native state at present are lacking, but probably if tests could be held they would bear out the whippet enthusiast's contention that, size considered, the whippet is the fastest animal that runs—provided the running is done over a course of 200 yards. It has been proved in many coursing matches that a wild rabbit, given thirty yards start on one of these dogs, is doomed to certain destruction.

A good whippet, well trained, can run 200 yards in twelve seconds," says Mr. Grahame. "This means that the little race dog travels at an average speed of slightly more than sixteen and one-half yards a second. The racing greyhound, the whippet's big brother in dogdom, runs faster than that, but if handicapped according to size—which would give the whippet a start of ninety yards in a 200-yard race—the whippet would prove faster. But whippets and greyhounds never are run together, for if the greyhound should overtake his smaller brother he would be likely to mistake it for a rabbit, and someone would be short a valuable whippet.

"Comparison of the whippet with the human runner makes the world's fastest sprinter seem slow. Charley Paddock's record for 200 yards is nineteen seconds—an average speed of about ten and one-half yards a second. A good whippet could give Paddock a handicap of sixty yards in a 200-yard race and beat him so easily that the finish wouldn't be exciting! The highest speed ever attained by a human runner—about eleven and one-half yards a second, in the second fifty yards of a record-equaling 100-yard race—doesn't compare favorably with the pace of these little dogs that are bred for running and nothing but running.

"Even where he is supplied with mechanical aids, the human athlete would have but little chance against a whippet over the dog's favorite distance. The 200-yard record for ice skating is more than five seconds slower than the standard time for whippets. Frank Kramer set a world record by riding a bicycle a quarter of a mile in twenty-eight and two-fifth seconds. If a whippet had been running against the cyclist on that occasion, the dog would have passed the 200-yard mark with a lead of at least ten yards."

Whether the racing whippet is brought up in a millionaire sportsman's kennels or in a workingman's home, its training starts when it is a small puppy. First, it is encouraged to take hold of and drag on a soft rag. After a few weeks of this, the "runner-up" goes a little way off and waves a handkerchief to excite the puppy, while another person holds it in leash, then slips the leash and lets the race-to-be make a dash for the handkerchief. A cap pistol is used to accustom the dog to the sound of the starter's gun.

After a few months of this preliminary training, the youngster is taken to a track and allowed to run against an older dog, the beginner given sufficient handicap to make certain that he will start his racing career with a victory. All through the early training care is taken to keep his spirit from being broken by defeat. After each training race, the towel or handkerchief for which the dog has run is given him as a reward, to chew and worry to his heart's content.

Good whippet trainers take the greatest pains to make sure that their charges get proper food, proper exercise and proper grooming. Beef is the basis of the racing dog's diet—beef well boiled or well roasted. Vegetables, such as onions and parsnips, are given once a week by some trainers and when a dog is lacking in "pep," a new-laid egg is beaten in with his other food.

Whippet races usually are handicap affairs, the dogs being handicapped according to weights and past performances. The dog on the scratch aways wears a red collar, and in order of their handicaps, the other dogs have white, blue, yellow, green and black collars. It is unusual for more than five dogs to be started in a single heat.

As the dogs are held on their marks by their "slippers," their runners-up go down the track, waving towels or cloths and calling and whistling to the dogs, finally taking up positions ten yards behind the finish line, so as to make sure that the dogs will run the full course at top speed.

The "slipper" plays an important part in whippet racing. As the dogs, being thrown into their strides, go off to a flying start, and travel sixteen yards a second, the slightest slowness on the part of the slipper is fatal. So is the sort of nervousness that leads to a false start, for that is an offense punished by disqualification.

The start stands behind the slippers, where he is out of their sight, but many of the men and women who follow the game seem to have developed the knack of knowing when the 'gun' is going off, and of always getting their dogs into action on the instant of the report.

One of the best known of all slippers is Mrs. Chris. Shuttleworth, of Santa Anita, Calif. Slow-motion and ordinary motion pictures taken at the starting line have proved that her slips were synchronous with the smoke puff of the starter's pistol.

Mr. Grahame thinks that it is possible that this human element will be taken from whippet racing by a mechanical starting box invented by F. S. Jack Davies of Westfield, N.J. an experienced whippet trainer and racer. These boxes or traps are placed on the various handicap marks, the dogs watching their runners-up through apertures until the starter pulls the strings, or, in an electrified device, throws the switch that opens all the doors simultaneously.

The judge at the finish line has a difficult task when three or four dogs cross the line well bunched. All he has to go by is the color of their collars. When his decision is made, the judge waves a flag of the winning color; or, on more elaborately equipped fields, an electrically controlled device gives the result of the heat to the spectators.

UNCLE WIGGILY

Today's Bedtime Story

By Howard R. Garis

UNCLE WIGGILY'S SEASHORE.

Copyright, 1926, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

(By Howard R. Garis.)

Very hot it was in Woodland, where Uncle Wiggily had built his hollow stump bungalow. Even though it was near the Orange Ice Mountains there seemed to be no cool breezes.

Charlie and Arabella Chick, the little rooster boy and hen girl, stood in the shade, their wings drooping and their mouths open. And when a chicken holds its mouth open you may know it is hot—or when a bird does, either. Of course dogs always hold their mouths open and breathe fast, even on cold days, after they have been running. So you needn't think it is a hot day just because a dog opens his mouth.

But when chickens and birds do this, why, that's different. And, really, it was very hot in Woodland. Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy said to Mrs. Longears:

"Well, I suppose you and Uncle Wiggily will soon be going to the seashore for your vacation."

"Well, I don't know," answered the rabbit lady slowly. "Wig talks of staying home this summer."

"What, stay here in hot weather when you can go to the cool seashore!" squeaked the muskrat lady housekeeper. "Why, the idea!"

"I'm going to have the seashore right here near my hollow stump bungalow!" said Uncle Wiggily, who hopped along just then.

"Have the seashore here! I never heard of such a thing!" cried Nurse Jane.

"I'm going to make an ocean out of the duck pond," said Uncle Wiggily, "Just you wait!"

Nurse Jane looked at the rabbit gentleman as if she did not know whether or not to believe him, and Uncle Wiggily solemnly twinkled his pink nose at her as he went on to say:

"So many of the poor animal children here in Woodland cannot go to the cool seashore for the hot summer, that I do not believe it is right for me to enjoy myself there. So I am going to stay home and make a little ocean out of the duck pond."

"You can't!" said Nurse Jane. "The duck pond is fresh water and the seashore ocean is salty."

"I can buy a lot of salt at the six and seven cent store, pour it in the duck pond and then it will be as salty as the sea," said the kind rabbit gentleman. "You wait: we'll soon have our own private seashore!"

And that's just what he did. He poured bag after bag of salt into the duck pond, and when the animal boys heard about it they came rushing along and jumped in. They splashed about, making the salt mix with the water until the duck pond was just like the ocean.

"Except that it hasn't any waves," said Bully NoTail, the frog boy. "An ocean ought to have big waves, Uncle Wiggily!"

"That's so," barked Pectie Bow Wow. "It isn't like the seashore, even if it is salty, unless it has waves."

"Hum! I never thought of that," said the bunny gentleman. "But it is true—there ought to be splashing waves at the seashore." He was wondering how this could be brought about when, all of a sudden, old Mr. Mucker, the big mud turtle, rose up out of the pond where he had been crawling around on the bottom. And as he rose up his big shell pushed the waters this way and that so they rolled up in waves on the sandy shore.

"Oh ho, Mr. Mucker! You are making seashore waves!" cried Uncle Wiggily. "That's just what I want. Will you bob up and down in the duck pond for a while, to make believe it is the ocean?"

"Why, of course I will," croaked the turtle gentleman. So he bobbed up and down in the salty water and made quite good sized waves which splashed on shore and made the girl animals squeal in delight as they felt their toes getting wet.

"Everything is all right now!" said Uncle Wiggily. "I have my seashore right here at home, salt water, waves and all!" Then, though it was still very hot in Woodland, everyone seemed cool on account of wading in the pond and seeing the waves splash on shore. This teaches us that make believe, or imagination, goes a great way, and if the mosquito doesn't bite a hole in the molasses jug so all the sweet stuff runs out, I'll tell you next about Uncle Wiggily's taffy drops.

High on the Housetops.

The Twilight Boomer was in no mood to be in the pictures. She gave us to understand that, for she at first ignored us very completely, and then she snapped at us.

Who is this Twilight Boomer?

Some folks call these birds Mosquito Hawk: then again, some folks call them Goat-suckers. It is easy enough to understand why they are called Mosquito Hawks, because they devour vast quantities of these little insect enemies of man, but the goatsucker name is another matter. Now, such a queer name could come from nowhere but the dim past when people knew nothing and were frightened of everything.

Years and years ago, the superstitious people heard the Twilight Boomer and believed it was a bad omen. "Surely," said they, "any thing that can make such a "Zoom!" sound must be bad." And they declared that it must be the spirit of some witch living in the skies, for how else could it do such things? Every time it dipped and boomed in search of mosquitos, they thought it was falling through space, dashing to its destruction, and that it suddenly exerted its witchcraft and overcame gravity.

Then again, they thought that this witch-like bird of the gloaming robbed them of their milk supply by secretly coming down and sucking milk from the goats on the hillside and they proved it to their own satisfaction by saying, "How else could it get that delicate baby-pink lining in its mouth?"

Folks are not so foolish now, and we know what a fine insect destroyer the Twilight Boomer really is, and just a few days ago a friend of mine went with me and we discovered two of these birds away high up on a gravel roof.

Someone or something had broken their eggs, (which, by the way, are laid on the gravel without the formality of a nest) and the old birds were both confused and stupid. They let us approach very closely, and when that big mouth was opened to snap at us, we could see how pink it was, and how wide it was, for upon my word, it opened from ear to ear, and the face of a nighthawk is all mouth.

THEATRE

AT THE REGENT

"PLEASURE BUYERS," A MYSTERY DRAMA

Irene Rich Star of New Warner Bros. Screen Thriller.

"The Pleasure Buyers," the Warner Bros. Classic of the Screen, which comes to the Regent Theatre to-morrow for a run of two days, is announced as a mystery thriller that is guaranteed to baffle anyone.

Founded upon the novel by Arthur Somers Roche that ran in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, its denouement has been changed so that even those who have read the original story will have a surprise waiting for th when the name of the real murderer of Eugene Cassenas is disclosed.

The novel itself affords about as good screen material as any high-speed mystery story in a generation and the Warner screen production is said to have intensified the suspense.

Irene Rich is the star, appearing as Joan Wiswell, the charming society woman whose relations with the gay debauchee just before he was killed cast suspicion upon her. Clive Brook, who is featured, appears as Tad Workman, the former New York Police Commissioner who undertakes to solve the mystery.

By SHIRLEY RODMAN WILLIAMS

HOW often I hear grown-ups say to children, "Now when I was a boy I never had—", or "When we were girls we never went," etc., and then go right on indulging them. It's a fact that there is a very great deal to be had and many places to go now-a-days. It all fills us with concern to know what is best to do and to give, but I fail to see the wisdom in constantly recalling how things used to be, and then keep right on indulging the present. The very fact that things are different for young folks now-a-days makes new problems, with new solutions. We can't give a boy a car, for instance, and then expect him to go no faster than old Dobbin used to travel.

Comfort at last after years of corns

You know the persistent pain of an old corn. It aches, and you cut it, and for a few days or a week there is relief. Then the pain comes shooting back again. Cutting and plasters don't get rid of corns: they are nearly as much of a nuisance as the corn itself!

But a Radox Bath, so softens corns that they may be lifted out bodily with the fingers.

How Radox Bath Salts Remove Corns.

When you dip your foot into a foot-bath containing Radox Bath Salts, the dead skin (which forms the corn) combines with the Radox Bath Salts to form a protein salt of the actual corn itself. This protein salt dissolves in the water like ordinary salt does, and so it is literally true to say that Radox Bath Salts actually dissolve your corn.

The Radox Bath Salt does not attack the living skin: it softens and refreshes this it cannot dissolve it—it is only the dead skin—the corn—which it dissolves.

The corn is gone! It can't ache because it isn't there. Your shoes are comfortable again. You can walk cheerily, actively once more.

Get rid of that corn of yours: buy a package of Radox from any druggist on your way home tonight. 60c. (Half pound Pink package)

IN MEMORIAM

HARRIS.—In loving memory of Ferden Harris, who was drowned on July 12, 1920.
In Heaven there was a vacant seat,
An empty Crown was there;
The angels' eyes were turned to earth,
In search of one of the Crown to wear.
They fell on our Dear Ferden,
On one we loved so dear;
They took him to his home above,
—Lovingly remembered, by Father, Mother, Sisters and Brothers.

IN MEMORIAM.

NEWALL.—In loving memory of our dear father, John Newall, who departed this life one year ago to-day, July 13, 1925.
"When alone in our sorrows the bitter tears flow,
There cometh a dream of one year ago.
And, unknown to the world, he stands by our side,
And whispers these words, 'Death cannot divide.'
Peacefully sleeping, resting at last,
The world's weary troubles and sorrows are past.
In silence he suffered, in patience he bore,
Till God called him home to suffer no more."
—Sadly missed by Family and George.

IN MEMORIAM.

NEWALL.—In loving memory of our dear grandpa, John Newall, who died July 13, 1925.
"We miss you dear grandpa,
Yes, more each day.
We wish you could come home again and stay,
But you have gone to Heaven,
Where there is no pain.
To dwell with grandma,
And be happy again."
— Sadly missed by Phyrn and Thelma Butler.

Seven Representatives From Ontario Are Included in Conservative Ministry Sworn Into Office Last Night at Ottawa

Sir Henry Drayton Forecasted Repeatedly as Minister of Railways is Appointed Minister without Portfolio but will Act as Premier during Meighen's Absence Electioneering.

DATE OF GENERAL ELECTION ANNOUNCED IN A FEW DAYS .NEW CABINET HELD MEETING

Four Portfolios and Office of Solicitor-General are Still Unfilled. Three will be Allotted to Quebec and Minister Of Interior Will be Chosen From Saskatchewan.

OTTAWA, July 14 (Canadian Press).—Ministers of the Government of Right Hon. Arthur Meighen were sworn in to office at Government House last evening. While the ceremony of swearing in the ministers was taking place at Government House, an official statement giving the personnel and portfolios of the new ministry was handed out from the office of the Prime Minister.

The outstanding surprise in the official announcement is that Sir Henry Drayton, forecasted repeatedly as the new Minister of Railways, enters the Government without portfolio. In the absence of Premier Arthur Meighen, on his campaign tour, Sir Henry assumes the acting Premiership.

The following ministers attended on His Excellency the Governor-General and accepted office in the new Government:

Hon. Sir George Perley, Secretary of State;

Hon. R. B. Bennett, Minister of Finance.

Hon. E. L. Patenaude, Minister of Justice;

Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Minister of National Defence;

Hon. H. H. Stevens, Minister of Customs;

Hon. S. F. Tolmie, Minister of Agriculture;

Hon. W. A. Black, Minister of Railways;

Hon. R. J. Manion, Postmaster general;

Hon. J. D. Chaplin, Minister of Trade and Commerce;

Hon. George B. Jones, Minister of Labor;

Hon. E. B. Ryckman, Minister of Public Works.

Without Portfolio

Hon. Sir Henry Drayton;

Hon. Donald Sutherland;

Hon. R. D. Morand;

Hon. John A. MacDonald.

Portfolios Unfilled

The portfolios of Marine and Fisheries, the Interior, Immigration and Colonization, Health and Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment and the post of Solicitor-General are left unfilled for the present. Three of these will be allotted to the province of Quebec of which it is expected two will very shortly be filled. It is intended that the portfolio of the Interior shall go to the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Patenaude will be acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries; Hon. R. B. Bennett will be acting Minister of the Interior; Dr. Morland of Health and Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, and Sir Henry Drayton of Immigration and Colonization.

Dr. J. L. Chabot of Ottawa will be made a privy councillor.

In the absence of Mr Meighen during the course of the campaign, Sir Henry Drayton will be acting Prime Minister.

The date of the election will be announced in a few days.

The official slate follows, for the most part, along lines already indicated in forecasts. The fact that Sir Henry Drayton is not assuming a portfolio, causes a change in the line-up as forecasted. Hon. W. A. Black, who, it was expected, would be Minister of Marine and Fisheries, becomes Minister of Railways. The portfolio of Marine and Fisheries is not filled, while those of the Interior, Immigration and Colonization, Health and Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment and the post of Solicitor-General are also unfilled, for the present.

Two From Quebec

The province of Quebec is represented in the new government by two ministers. Hon. Sir George Perley becomes Secretary of State, while the portfolio of Justice goes to Hon. E. L. Patenaude. It is stated, however, that three of the vacant portfolios will also be filled from Quebec, two of them very shortly.

One From New Brunswick

The Province of New Brunswick is represented in the new ministry by Hon. George B. Jones, who assumes the portfolio of Labor. Prince Edward Island is represented by Hon. John A. MacDonald, without portfolio. British Columbia has two representatives, in the Hon. H. H. Stevens, Minister of Customs, and Hon. S. F. Tolmie, Minister of Agriculture. Hon. R. B. Bennett, Minister of Finance, is the representative from Alberta, and Manitoba is represented by the Prime Minister. It is officially announced that the portfolio of the Interior will go to the province of Saskatchewan.

Seven From Ontario

Seven ministers, three of them without portfolio, have been elected from the province of Ontario. They are: Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Minister of National Defence; Hon. R. J. Manion, Postmaster General; Hon. J. D. Chaplin, Minister of Trade and Commerce; Hon. E. B. Ryckman, Minister of Public Works, and Sir Henry Drayton, Hon. Donald Sutherland and Hon. Raymond D. Morand, without portfolio.

The ceremony of swearing in the new ministers occupied something over an hour. At the conclusion, the new ministry assembled for a brief cabinet meeting.

Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen

Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen has been twice Prime Minister of Canada. He was first elected to the House of Commons in 1908 and was appointed Solicitor-General in the Borden administration in 1913. He has also filled the posts of Secretary of State, Minister of Mines, Minister of the Interior and Superintendent General of Indian affairs. On Sir Robert Borden's resignation in July, 1920, Mr. Meighen succeeded him as Premier. He was defeated at a general election in the following year, and his Government went out of office.

Following defeat in Portage La Prairie in 1921, he was re-elected to the House for Grenville, Ont., in January, 1922, and became leader of the Opposition. He was called on to form a Government on June 29 last, after the Liberal administration had resigned.

Hon. Sir G. Perley

Sir George Perley, the new Secretary of State, was High Commissioner for Canada in London from October 12, 1917, until February,

HE HEARS MUSIC FROM HEAVEN IN ANSWER TO SILENT PRAYER

SIGN FROM GOD.

Wife and Companion Also Listen to Strains, He Says.

TAMARAC, Minn., July 14 (United News). — Vernon Ewing, the prophet of the Minnesota wilds, says that his second silent prayer has been successful in evoking a sign from God.

"Heavenly music," came to the ears of two of the devout petitioners while they stood under the shade of the tall poplars in Ewing's shrine of faith near here, the prophet said.

Ewing's last demonstration was on June 11th, but it was attended chiefly by skeptics. After an hour of wordless prayer the expected failed to come. This time, however, Ewing says his wife and another woman heard the strains of sweet music in the clouds overheard that they are certain it came straight from heaven.

Ewing is an itinerant optometrist. He became imbued with the "sign from God" idea several months ago and his silent prayers have been attracting wide attention in the north-

[illegible] of Nature and the music from heaven brought the realities of God closer than ever before," he said.

About twenty-five of the optometrist's followers stood in the prayer circle in to-day's demonstration.

A similar test is to be made on Sunday, July 25th.

ATLANTIC, N. J., July 14. — (United Press), —The kid with the "penny", remains, the great American candy buyer and is the one to be catered to, Herbert A. Dodge of Chicago, told the National Confectionery Salesmen's Association Convention here on Tuesday.

"When a youngster walks blocks to obtain the particular kind of candy he likes, it's evident who is the discriminating buyer," Dodge told the delegates. The child is our big purchaser."

Candy making and selling is the sixth largest industry in the United States, the speaker asserted. One American chain store system made $2,000,000 profit from candy sales alone in 1925, he added.

OTTAWA, July 14 (Canadian Press).—Following the announcement made last night of the new Federal Ministry, the spot light of political interest now moves to the opening speech of Premier Arthur Meighen in Ottawa next Tuesday evening. This speech is awaited with peculiar interest, as it will probably strike the pitch of the Government's campaign for the following eight weeks.

During these next few days, the new cabinet will meet for the purpose of setting its house in order and making general preparations for an appeal to the electorate.

The official plans of the Liberal party are being carefully withheld until the tactics of the Conservatives are disclosed in the Premier's speech. Ex-Premier King has returned to the Capital after several days' vacation, and it is expected that his itinerary will be made public within a few days.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN BURNED IN FOREST BLAZE IN ALBERTA WHEN FIRE SWEEPS MOTOR ROAD

Trapped in Automobile on Banff-Windermere Highway Yesterday.

HONEYMOON TRIP.

One of Victims Was Bride. Two Men Seriously Burned.

CALGARY, July 14. (Canadian Press.) — Trapped in an automobile on the fire ringed section of the Banff-Windermere road, east of Kootenay crossing, 2 women and 2 children from Dysart, Sask., were burned to death late yesterday when their car burst into flames. The husbands of the two women were seriously burned in an attempted rescue.

Injured: Mr. Watt, Dysart; Mr. Nesbitt, Dysart.

It was reported at Lake Windermere, where the injured were taken, that Mrs. Nesbitt was a bride, on her honeymoon tour with her husband.

An inquest will be held, Lake Windemee despatches said, on Wednesday morning. Watt and Nesbitt were in hospital and their condition was serious.

A thick pall of smoke in Calgary last night and to-day indicated that the Windermere blaze was a big one, but its exact extent was unknown. It was believed that it only drew near isolated sections, but it was reported the Banff-Windermere highway in ed that the blaze on the Vermilion river stretch was working north in the direction of Marble Canyon.

This morning broke hot and dry again with no immediate prospect of rain, which would help to quench the flames. The wind was freshening also, which added to the danger.

Twelve Bodies Recovered From Debris of Hotel Fire.

TANNERSVILLE, N.Y., July 14 (Canadian Press).—Twelve bodies had been recovered this afternoon from the ruins of Twilight Inn, the Catskill Mountain summer resort, which was burned to the ground shortly after 1 a.m. to-day. The bodies were so badly burned that identification was impossible. Sixteen guests and seven employees of the hotel have not yet been accounted for.

POLITICAL NEWS.

OTTAWA, July 14. Canadian Press. — The date of the election will not be announced for a few days, it was stated by Premier Meighen to-day before the cabinet. It is suggested the premier may reserve the announcement until he speaks here next Tuesday night, but there is no confirmation of this.

ALDERMEN MEET TO CONSIDER TENDERS FOR PAVING CONTRACT BUT LEARN BY-LAW NOT PASSED

Unexpected Obstacle Encountered by Board of Works Committee.

ACTION DELAYED.

Alderman Greene Wants Sewer Question to Have Prior Consideration.

When the Board of Works Committee met last night to consider the tenders for the proposed paving of Rubidge Street, from Charlotte to Rink Streets, an unexpected snag was encountered. The members of the board were pondering on the different prices quoted when it was discovered that the necessary construction by-law had not been passed so that the work could be proceeded with.

The tenders from the different companies were opened.

The prices quoted were as follows: Ashphaltic Concrete Company, Toronto, concrete pavement complete, $1.97 a square yard; ashphaltic pavement, including concrete base and grading, $2.78 a square yard; concrete curb complete, 45 cents a lineal foot; concrete gutter, 50 cents a lineal foot; concrete sidewalk, 24 cents a square foot.

The Ontario Amiesite Limited prices were: Amiesite pavement with concrete base complete, $2.40 a square yard; concrete curb, 55 cents a lineal foot; concrete gutter, 30 cents a square foot; concrete sidewalk, 22 cents a square foot.

V. C. Hayes quoted concrete pavement complete at $2.24 a square yard; concrete curb, 30 cents a lineal foot; concrete sidewalk, 25 cents a square foot.

John Carroll quoted concrete pavement complete at $2 a square yard; concrete curb, 25 cents a lineal foot; concrete sidewalk, 25 cents a square foot, with a rider that the above prices were on condition that he obtain the city's steam roller as before.

The Warren Bithulithic quoted concrete pavement complete at $1.84 a square yard; Warrenite bithulithic with concrete base and grading complete at $2.80 a square yard; asphaltic pavement with concrete base and grading complete at $2.60 a square yard; concrete curb, 40 cents a lineal foot; concrete gutter, 33 cents a square foot; concrete sidewalk, 22 cents a square foot.

Immediately the chairman had finished reading the tenders the discussion opened, and it was found that it was impossible to go ahead with the paving work as the construction by-law had not been passed.

It was moved and seconded by Aldermen Denne and Greene that the marked cheques and bonds that had been furnished with the tenders be returned to the firms who had been invited to tender.

Some more discussion ensued, bringing forth the remark from Alderman Greene that he would vote against every paving proposition until the sewer situation was properly fixed up.

Finally Aldermen Turner and McDonald moved and seconded that the City Engineer extend the prices and report on the totals of the tenders received.

Motion Carried.

On being put to the meeting, the second motion carried.

A letter from the trustees of Trinity Church was read regarding trees adjoining their property.

It was moved by Alderman Cotton and Alderman McDonald that the City Engineer see the trustees of the church regarding the sidewalks and the trees and co-operate with them if possible.

A petition containing thirteen names was read from residents on Otonabee Road, asking for better

MANUFACTURERS HURT BY CLOSE OF POWER LINE

Temporary Shut-Down Causes Loss. G. A. Gillespie Tells Utilities.

AUBURN FAULT.

Faulty Switch Causes Trouble. Headquarters to be Notified.

At the regular meeting of the Utilities Commission this morning G. A. Gillespie and James Dutton appeared before the commission to complain about the recent cut offs in the electric power. Mr. Gillespie said that there were a lot more shut downs lately than usual and he would like the members of the commission to find out the reason why. He stated that a shut down like the one on Friday night meant considerable to his plant as they have the milk at a certain high temperature and if they are not able to go on with its manufacture in a very short time it sours. The ice making plant is affected also; on Friday night they had hundreds of gallons of ice cream made but the ice making

WOULD RATHER HANG.

CHICAGO, July 14. — Robert Scott, who pleaded guilty to murder, yesterday declared he would rather hang than testify in his own behalf, and against his brother Russell, sentenced to death for the same crime.

Robert pleaded guilty of the murder of Joseph Maurer for which his brother Russell is under sentence to hang October 15. Attorney William Scott Stewart informed Judge William N. Gemmill yesterday that Robert would not take the witness stand in his own behalf in a hearing to decide punishment.

The attorney's announcement threw the court and prosecutors into an uproar; the state's attorneys charging that a plot to save both Russell and Robert from the gallows was behind Stewart's procedure.

Judge Gemmill declared that unless he could call Scott to the stand even as a court witness, he would probably refuse to pass on the case, allow Stewart to withdraw the plea of guilty and then present it to a jury in his court if Stewart did not obtain a change of venue.

WOMAN BREAKS JAIL.

Broke Down Door by Sheer Force. She Weighed 200 Pounds.

RIMOUSKI, Que., July 14 (Canadian Press). — Breaking down the door of her cell by sheer force of her two hundred pounds of weight, Mrs. Philomene Dube, made her escape from the jail here, it is revealed following her re-capture. She was taken while living quietly with her brother in the centre of the town all the while a Sheriff and party hunted her through woods outside. Her reputation as a woodswoman made the officers think she would take refuge there. Mrs. Dube has three months to serve on a sentence received for selling liquor without a license.

PILOT SAVES CREW.

Swan Half a Mile Through Heavy Sea To Summon Help.

DETROIT, July 14—Saved by the act of the pilot, Steve De Orlow, in swimming half a mile through a heavy sea to shore to summon help after the boat had overturned, the Detroit Yach Club catboat, CK-23 made port at Put In Bay yesterday. With De Orlow in the boat were Dr. A. A. Gilhooley of Lansing and William McLean of Walkerville.

With two other small craft, the catboat left Amherstburg Sunday night for the interlake yachting regatta in Put In Bay. At Middle Island the CK-23 made direct for Put In Bay, while the others laid a southeasterly course. It was late that night that the CK-23, buffeted by high winds and heavy seas, overturned about a half mile off West Sister Island. The island is about 20 miles northwest of Put In Bay. The boat had blown off its course.

While his two companions clung to the overturned craft, De Orlow swam ashore and summoned aid. The craft was towed in, righted and a temporary sail rigged.

BIG CROWD IN ORANGE WALK AT HAVELOCK

Every Lodge in County Represented in Biggest Demonstration.

BROTHERHOOD

HAVELOCK, July 14. — Despite the heavy rain during the forenoon the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne was celebrated in fitting style by one of the largest crowds which has ever attended a like celebration in Havelock, and although the sky cleared before the parade was staged the weather was unseasonably chilly. Every lodge in the county was represented. Special mention should be made of the Havelock Ladies Lodge, McGill L.O.B.A., No. 471, which presented a very fine appearance in the procession, and is the largest in this district. The ladies were dressed in white with orange hats and ties. The parade was formed in the park and returned there for a programme of speeches and sports.

Rev. W. . Archer.

Rev. W. R. Archer of the United Church was the first speaker. "I am going to ask you to do something unusual first, and that is to travel a distance with your imaginations and traverse the distance our boys traversed when they went across to Flanders Fields.

Forty per cent of the first twenty thousand who fell in the great war belonged to the Orange Order."

"I am proud," he continued, "to be called upon to address you today. I revere the work you are doing and I bring to you the greetings of the United Church. In making a plea for worship," he said, "It is a sad thing for a man to belong to an Order which stands for freedom of religious worship and not utilize the privilege of worshipping God."

S. S. Joyce

S. S. Joyce was next called and on behalf of the Havelock L.O.L. No. 326 and the McGill L.O.B.A. No. 471 welcomed the visitors who had met to commemmorate the battle fought long ago and said, "I hope that the next 12th of July celebration held here will attract as magnificent a crowd as is in attendance today. We stand for Brotherhood and there is no word in the English language like Brotherhood. Let us be true to the principles for which we stand and thus be true to our King, our Country and our God."

Rev. T. H. Stanley

Rev. T. H. Stanley of St. John's Anglican Church expressed pleasure at being called upon to address the crowd and made a strong appeal for the spirit of Brotherhood. "I am in a unique position today," he said, "in standing on an Orange platform. If the principle of the Orange order is as I understand it 'equal rights and special privileges to none.' I have always stood on an Orange platform. You stand for high ideals and our church stands for high ideals. As Christians we ought to be brothers. The underlying principle of our lives is brotherhood. Any institution that has for object the making of lives like Christ should be sympathized with. I read an article a few days ago that the United church was not opposing any Christian organization. I am a representative of the Anglican church but hold out my hand to anyone who upholds Christ to stand here today with you for Protestantism."

Col. Johnston.

A short address was given by Col. Johnston, M.P.P. for East Peterboro, who, in speaking of freedom of worship, said: "Since the beginning of British history, Britain's institutions have stood for freedom. He congratulated the committee in charge for the arrangements that had made possible the splendid celebration. He thought the celebrations in the smaller centres were much more useful than those in the larger centres, and that the Twelfth should stand for a visit among the brethren."

Mrs. S. McGill.

Mrs. S. McGill, Worthy Mistress of McGill L.O.B.A., No. 471, gave a short address of welcome, and stated that the Order had completed a very prosperous year, and they were looking forward to a great increase in membership in the coming year.

Addresses were also given by Mr. and Mrs. J. Kinnaird.

Baseball.

The baseball game between Hastings and Havelock resulted in a win for Havelock by a score of 12-2.

The proceeds from the L. O. L. booths in the park amounted to $416. In the evening the play, "Aunt Jerushy on the War Path," was preesnted for the second time by the members of the McGill L.O.B.A., under the auspices of the L.O.L. No. 326. The hall was filled to capacity, and the proceeds were about $165.

OTTAWA, Ont., July 14 (Canadian Press). — "Return to D.R.A., Ottawa." R. J. Birdwhistle, secretary of the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association, who made the inscription, yesterday received a cable from Major C. R. Crowe, commandant of the team, as follows:

HASTINGS NEWS

(Examiner Staff Correspondence)

HASTINGS, July 13 — The contract for the re-oiling of the streets in the business section of the town was let yesterday by Reeve Hess upon the instructions of the Council which were approved at the special meeting last Friday night. A heavy grade of oil will be used by Frank King of Lindsay at a cost to the municipality of $655, and it is fully expected that there will be further repetition this summer of the dust nuisance which was at its worst last week. The oiling of the streets early this season did not have the durable effect of laying and binding the dust, and with the excessive heat and heavy traffic recently the Council, on representations from merchants, decided that some action must be taken at once.

New Bowling Club

The lawn bowlers go into action on their new greens Wednesday evening. Organied under the auspices of the Pastime Club, the bowlers have two fine greens near the tannery and begin with five skips and a total membership of about twenty-five. The skips are: Neil McDonald, L. E. Kelley, George Stevenson, T. Coughlin and Ed. Braightwaite. Most of the bowlers are novices, but are keen for the game and have been showing surprising aptitude in the preliminary games that have been played.

Liberal Executive Meeting

The executive of the Liberal Association of Northumberland will meet at Warkworth on Wednesday afternoon presumably to consider the calling of a convention for the federal elections. Notices have been received from the secretary of the association, Mr. A. J. Meyers of Campbellford. Local opinion regards Milton E. Maybee of Brighton as the Conservative candidate. He is the present member, and has already two victories to his credit. Speculation as to the Liberal nominee includes the names of Sam Clark, M.P.P., Dr. Hayden of Cobourg, Dr. Robertson of Colborne and Mr. Meyers of Campbellford.

EAST EMILY PERSONALS

EAST EMILY, July 14.—On Thursday evening, July 8, the members of Bethel Union Sunday School gathered at the home of Mrs. Evans Storey, whose house is always open for visitors, who are always made welcome, to give her a presentation to show how the whole Sunday School have appreciated her great work in the past years during which she has taught in the school from the small boys' class up to the Ladies' Bible Class.

A very pleasant evening was spent in playing games on the lawn, after which the following address was read by Mrs. John McCarrell, and the presentation made by Mrs. Milton Sherin:

"Mrs. Evans Storey:

Our Dear Friend,—We, the members of the Ladies' Adult Bible Class and others of the Bethel Sunday School, have gathered here this evening to let you know in some slight way our appreciation of your efforts among us as teacher of our class and in our school for so many years. We were sorry that you could not see fit to withdraw your resignation when urged to do so by the class. However, we are glad to still have you with us, and that we have the pleasure of hearing your voice in the discussion of our lessons from Sunday to Sunday.

"We know that it was not always easy for you to be so faithful as you have been during the years you have been teaching. We, therefore, ask you to accept this Coleman lamp as a very small token of our goodwill and in appreciation of the words of encouragement and inspiration you have imparted through the teaching of the many lessons of the past.

"As this lamp sheds its bright beams around you in your home let it remind you of the 'Great Light' which shines on unfailing through the sunshine and shadow, through the joys and sorrows of our lives, in this world and through eternity.

"Signed on behalf of the class—Mrs. H. Deyell, Mrs. H. Lowes, Mrs. M. Sherin, Mrs. R. James."

Mrs. Storey thanked her many friends present in her usual and very pleasing manner with a few well chosen words of appreciation towards the school.

Lunch was then served to about sixty people, young and old, after which they all departed to their respective homes.

Personals.

Mrs. Harry Deyell has been appointed teacher for Mrs. Storey's class for the coming year.

The many friends and neighbors of Mr. Andrew McCarrell are very sorry to learn that he happened with a very painful accident while doing the chores at the barn on Thursday morning. WEDNESDAY, JULY 14, 1926.

OUR CRACK SHOTS.

The capture by the Canadian team at Bisley Camp, England, yesterday of the coveted Imperial Kolapore Cup is an achievement which should give the people of this country a thrill of pride.

This competition is one of the greatest service rifle matches at Bisley, and the Canadians leading at every stage proved that their winning of the Kolapore Cup last year was not a fluke.

The shooting of the Canadian team at last year's matches was uniformly good, and although the King's prize did not come to Canada, the average scored by the whole team from this country in the various competitions deserved much greater commendation than it received from the people at home.

From the returns so far received this year's team is making an even more creditable showing, and it should be a matter for general congratulation that in competitions where the best shots of the whole British Empire are entered the Maple Leaf team should stand so high.

The winning of the Kolapore Cup, it is hoped, will be followed by the capture of other famous competitions by the splendid Canadian team.

THE MEIGHEN CABINET.

The personnel of the Meighen Cabinet as announced last night varies very little from the newspaper predictions.

The chief surprise was perhaps furnished by the fact that Sir Henry Drayton, who was generally expected to be placed in charge of the Department of Railways or the Finance Department, appears as a Minister without Portfolio.

As was expected, Saskatchewan is without representation in the Cabinet, while the Quebec Ministers number two, Sir Geo. Perley and Hon. Mr. Patenaude.

The inclusion of such party stalwarts as Hon. H. H. Stevens, Hon. Dr. Manion, Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Hon. S. F. Tolmie and Hon. R. B. Bennett was according to general expectation, and the entrance into the Cabinet of Donald Sutherland, J. D. Chaplin and R. D. Morand had been foreshadowed by press reports.

Whether or not the Canadian people give the new Cabinet thorough approval, there are undoubtedly elements of much strength in its ranks, for the Ministry includes men who are admirably fitted to give good service to the public.

Others, of course, are geographical rather than efficiency choices, for, as The Examiner pointed out the other day, the question of representation to all parts of the country has to be considered when Cabinets are being formed.

GOOD CITIZENS.

The acceleration noted in the movement of farmers from the Western States into the Western Provinces of Canada should be greeted with satisfaction by Canadians generally, who realize the importance to the whole country of settling the vacant lands in the West with the right kind of people.

The newcomers from over the border are experienced farmers, most of them well endowed with this world's goods—it is stated that 40 families made the trip over in their own cars—and they start in their new homes without the handicap of lack of experience or of sufficient capital.

During June alone the Canadian Government agency at Fargo, North Dakota, succeeded, it is reported, in moving to Canada 195 farmers, who with their wives and families represent a total of 312 people, and who brought with them cash and effects amounting to $494,550.

The successful location of these families—and there is every reason to expect that they will succeed—means the coming of many others, who will follow their example and take advantage of the attractive offers made by Canada to agricultural settlers.

A TIMELY WARNING.

The address of Major Belford to the Orangemen at Warkworth on Monday in which he warned his hearers against the spread of Communism in this country, touched upon a danger that is by no means to be lightly treated.

It is true that there are schools in sections of Ontario and in the West where children are being taught the Communistic doctrine, and at the same time are being educated to the belief that there is no God.

While it is impossible to think that this insidious movement could make any great headway in this loyal country, there is always danger of trouble if such seditious training is allowed to continue, and Major Belford's warning that all loyal citizens should be on their guard against this condition of affairs was timely.

His vigorous defence of cadet training and the maintenance of the militia will also be approved by many Canadians who believe as he does that those who oppose these things are unwittingly playing the game of the Communists.

THE ROD IN SCHOOLS?

Vassar College's first Summer Institute of Euthenics opened on the 7th instant, and will continue to function until the end of the first week in August. As the name implies, although somewhat unfamiliar, problems of child development and race improvement will be discussed by a considerable number of specialists, says the Ottawa Journal. Among the topics are: Family relationships, including husband and wife and motherhood; nutrition, recreation, and hygiene for children; child psychology, with papers on behavior problems, and individual adjustments; household technology, cookery, home nursing and horticulture; and lastly, family finances. Altogether, these subjects make a formidable array, and time alone will tell whether or not any real good will be achieved.

In the meantime, another national group has been considering child welfare from a vastly different angle, and in terms that every one of us can understand. The Educational Committee of the Prussian Diet has solemnly decided that the most essential accompaniment of sound teaching is the liberal and effective use of the rod. As differences of judgment arose there was quite a row over the matter. Those of us who were in contact with educational methods anterior to say the nineties will know what the rod means. Whether or not it was effective is a point for debate; but its application was unquestionably liberal. The smart has gone; yet the recollection remains.

The prevailing idea today is that corporal punishment brutalizes. Perhaps it does. Our grandparents thought otherwise. Its efficacy as an aid to education is, at all events, exceedingly doubtful. But let us take care that in swinging away from the severe methods of a bygone period we do not commit ourselves to ways that will breed a race of flabby and supersensitive boys and girls, lacking in that hardihood and responsiveness to discipline which are after all fundamental to strength of character and all round usefulness.

UNNECESSARY NOISES.

"The purpose of a motor car horn is to sound a warning, without causing consternation."
—Hamilton Spectator.

This little hint from one of our contemporaries is passed on by The Examiner because Peterboro suffers, as does Hamilton, from an over-abundance of noisy motor horns and from an over-abundance of people who seem to think they are musical instruments and should be played at all times.

Every neighborhood knows the young fellow who drives up to the curb in front of the abiding place of the girl of his heart and announces his presence by a loud and enthusiastic obligato on his motor horn.

And while she powders her noise and performs all the final moves in donning her war paint, the musician outside continues his klaxon solo until the lady arrives on the scene about the time the neighbors are threatening to take the law in their own hands.

Then there is the motorist whose warning signal is suggestive of a circus calliope and loud enough to be heard a mile away, who blows a blast at you that is startling enough to frighten a weak-hearted individual out of this life altogether.

We have to stand for the fire and police signals, but why in the name of common sense should we be asked to put up with weird and unnecessary noises from the motoring fraternity.

TELL THEM!

Canada is to have some more free advertising. A film company has just completed filming James Oliver Curwood's story, "The Country Beyond," using the magnificent resources of Jasper Park for the background and general scenery. The director believes the scenic beauty unrivalled in America. Other motion picture men plan to use the Canadian Rockies in the near future.

All this is excellent for drawing tourists. Complacent Canadians will mentally lick their chops at the prospect. They need not. Canada is overwhelmed with that sort of publicity. Its ice and snow and wilds have been proclaimed to the world in abundance and in the most bizarre manner possible. Its summer and cities have been practically ignored. The average novel or play or moving picture or even song describes us as a land of freak wild men, with scattered communities and woods aplenty. Tomahawks and totem poles are picturesque, but we have something more vital than those. We need to publish our latent and producing wealth. We cannot rely on imaginative sources to do that for us. So long as we are content to be known as a country of medicine men and mounted police, we can rely on the entertainers. When we talk of serious business and accurate impressions, we must look after it ourselves. No one else will.

We sometimes think it strange when Americans and other visitors come here and express surprise at the completeness of our civilization. There isn't anything strange about it, however. The outside world has been so lavishly fed on a Canadian "raw meat" diet that people cannot be blamed for picturing us as anything else but a handful of people living on the fringe of civilization.

Two or three years ago a member of The Border Cities Star's staff met a New York business man on a train en route from New York to Chicago. This visitor, on leaving home, had not known that he would be routed through Ontario in order to reach his Illinois destination. He was surprised when Canadian customs and immigration officers approached him after the train left Buffalo and more surprised on finding the scenery of Southern Ontario to be approximately the same as that of New York State. Gazing from the train windows he saw green grass, green trees, "American-looking" cattle browsing in the fields, well-known commodities advertised on the billboards, people in the same type of clothing he was accustomed to at home, and so on. He had never been in Canada before and only by an accident was he in Canada then. He engaged the newspaperman in conversation and during their brief talk it developed that the New Yorker did not even known that Canada had a money system of her own. He took it for granted that the Dominion did business in terms of pounds, shillings and pence. Indeed it was only after he had been shown several coins and bank bills that he really grasped the difference.

The man referred to was obviously of the upper business class. Yet his knowledge of Canada was so limited as to be almost ridiculous. There are millions more like him, not only in Europe, but only a few miles beyond the American border. They've heard of Canada, most of them, but they have the motion picture-dime novel vision of our country—the vision in which Indians, girls on snowshoes and all the other winter paraphernalia play the leading roles.

American tourists, now coming in by the thousands weekly, are getting information concerning our country that was not possible before the development of the automobile. Nevertheless there is still much to be done in the way of intelligent publicity in order to bring the real facts of our situation, our resources, our attractins to the millions across the line and elsewhere throughout the world.—Border Cities Star.

HOW DO YOU SAY IT?

Common Errors in English and How To Avoid Them.

"INSISTED TO."

(The McClure Syndicate, Inc.)

"It is reported that as soon as the president of the corporation learned that the directors insisted or even wanted to include his resignation in the terms of settlement, he became very indignant."

In the foregoing extract from a recent newspaper article there is an example of the incorrect use of a preposition, or, rather, of the omission of a preposition that should have been used. The sentence should have read

"It is reported that as soon as the president of the corporation learned that the directors insisted upon wanting his resignation, or even wanted to include it in the terms of settlement, he became very indignant."

"The errors made in the use of the prepositions are very numerous," says Alfred Ayres. "Very often the preposition is not repeated in a sentence, when it should be. We say properly, 'He comes from Ohio or from Indiana'."

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

To the Editor of The Examiner:
Sir:

Do our people realize what a terrible state of affairs is represented in the following appeal made by "The Humane Pleader", the official publication of the Toronto Humane Society?:

"Is there a pact among young men of the day to degrade and demoralize the women who are the future wives and mothers of the race? x x A horror stricken mother discovered recently that at the dances patronized by her young daughters the morals of the barnyard apparently prevailed. x x Still another girl when remonstrated with by her mother for the scantiness of her attire replied that if she wore any more she would get no partners."

And throughout a long and terrible indictment of the morals of the present time in Ontario the foul and fatal story runs. But why quote? It is well known everywhere. What is the cause? 1. The degradation of the word of God by the sneers and cavilling of its critics. The young no longer hold it or God in awe. 2. The substitution of compulsion or prohibition for the appeal of the conscience of the young. Conscience and a use of refinement and purity have departed as a consequence along with the former reverence for the word of God, driven out by force. Do not argue. Just look at the results. Of course these references to the young apply only to those to whom they apply but it is useless to blame the mothers, who have given up in despair. How could a mother who has helped bring on bare, bold conscienceless force in moral questions expect her daughter to listen to anything but force? Force has no soul and its victims learn the lesson of it only too soon. Are we determined to send these poor young people to hell altogether? If there be a God, as there surely is, there will be a day of terrible retribution for those who have substituted their ways for His.

The ghastly horror of excessive drinking is but childs play in comparison with what force is bringing about.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

THE REWARD JUSTIFIES THE EFFORT.

Study to be quiet; the agitated mind does not register; it cannot absorb or retain; it is like a cracked pitcher. Would you have a mind like a kitchen sieve or an ash sifter?

Scientists tell us the unquiet mind breeds disease. Emerson says: "Coolness and absence of heat and haste indicate fine qualities."

The successful human is he who can maintain composure and calm mid the hustle and bustle of business; the happy individual is he who can shut out strife, control temper, and eliminate unrest.

Study to be quiet; strive to be calm.

Steadiness of mind, quietude, permits of reasoning; with reason comes resolution, the ability of exercise decision. The restless, impatient, unquiet mind is always vacillating, always in a turmoil; neither health nor happiness can generate from such a condition.

We may not all be brilliant nor conspicuously successful; but we can be well and happy and useful if we cultivate the quiet mind; and surely the reward justifies the effort.

He is only a well-made man who has a good determination.
—Emerson.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, July 14 (Canadian Press).—The foreign trade in Canadian grain on the Montreal market yesterday was practically at a standstill owing to the majority of the bids being out of line with exporters' views. The only trading of importance in the domestic market was a sale of a few loads of No. 3 Canadian Western barley at 9 3-4 cents per bushel over the Winnipeg July option, and an odd load or two of tough No. 3 Canadian Western oats at a c.i.f. price Montreal. The car lot market was firm and prices were unchanged.

The export trade in spring wheat flour was moderate but the local and country demand was quiet. Prices were steady. The tone of the winter wheat market was firm with a moderate amount of business passing.

A fairly active business was transacted in millfeed with United States buyers. The local trade was also better and prices were firm. The movement of standard grades of rolled oats was slow and the undertone was steady.

Prices for all grades of eggs were well maintained at the recent changes noted. The demand was steady. The receipts were 785 cases.

The tone of the butter market was again weak and prices showed a further decline. Early in the day sales of No. 1 pasteurized creamery were made at 31 3-4c per pound, but the best bid at the close was 31 cents per pound with no sellers. The receipts were 3,432 packages.

The cheese trade was inactive and prices were steady. The receipts were 16,312 boxes.

The trade in old and new crop potatoes was moderate and the feeling was firm. American new crop No. 1 grades sold at $6 per barrel, while old crop New Brunswick Green Mountain white sold at $2.25 per bag of 90 pounds.

EGG MARKETS

OTTAWA, July 14 (Canadian Press).—Canadian storage holdings of eggs on July 1st, 1926, were 11,866,912 dozens as compared with 13,227,218 dozens on July 1st, 1925, according to preliminary statement issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

CHICAGO GRAINS

CHICAGO, July 14 (Canadian Press).—Excited buying carried the wheat market suddenly upward yesterday by 6 3-4 a bushel. Sensational reduction of Canadian government crop estimates took most wheat traders by surprise and brought about wild soaring of values, especially toward the last. Closing quotations on wheat were unsettled at 4 1-4 to 6 1-8 net advance, with corn 2 1-2 to 3 up; oats at 7-8 to 1 1-8 gain and provisions showing a rise of 10 to 32 cents.

Late reports that a good deal of the Canadian wheat crop had suffered severe damage from heat that followed dearth of moisture gave additional impetus to the upward swings of the market. Predictions of a renewal of higher temperatures and lack of rain both north and south of the Canadian boundary tended further to arouse anxiety as to the spring crop outlook. Wet weather southwest interfering with the harvest of domestic winter wheat was likewise a disturbing factor, and there was also announcement of 4,331,000 bushels decrease in the world's available wheat supply, as well as advices that Australia had over-exported and would have to buy wheat back.

Corn and oats owed their gains to wheat strength and to unseasonably cool weather in the corn belt.

BUTTER MARKETS

MONTREAL, July 14 (Canadian Press).—On the local curb market yesterday there were 2,000 packages creamery butter, and 4,500 boxes cheese offered. The butter was settled for [illegible]c per lb. for No. 2 pasteurized, at 29c for No. 1 unpasteurized, and at 28c per lb. for No. 2. The cheese brought 16c per lb.

Thinking In

By Bruce Bairnsfather

DR. FRANK CRANE'S DAILY EDITORIAL.

A WIFE'S WORST PUNISHMENT.

By Dr. Frank Crane.

A woman out West has sued a man for divorce upon the grounds of neglect. She says she cannot stand his indifference. So long as he beat her up occasionally it was not so bad. But coldness was more than she could endure.

This is a peculiar trait of womankind. The wife of a cabman loves him all the more when he bashes her over the head occasionally and she does not mind being dragged along the floor by her hair.

But studied neglect is more than any woman can stand. The greatest offense against love is not violence and cruelty, but it is indifference. Love is warmth, and its greatest enemy is not some other kind of warmth, like anger, but it is coldness.

A woman lives in her affections, and so long as those affections awaken a response, she can endure almost anything. When the response ceases the case becomes unendurable.

The lesson from this is not that a man should abuse his wife, but that she should remember that the greatest cruelty he can practice upon her is neglect, more than abuse.

A spurt of anger and the violence that accompanies it may be condoned, but the studied, icy winds of neglect are unendurable.

A man cannot expect to retain the affections of his mate unless he repays them in kind. Everything in the world has to be paid for. Even love has its price, and the price of love is love in return. No other price will suffice. A woman can overlook almost anything if she is sure her man loves her. Women have clung to drunkards and ne'er-do-wells through all kinds of ill weather, but it is rare indeed to find a woman who will continue to endure the indifference or neglect of her mate.

The moral of this to all male mankind is Verb sap.

Hon. H. H. Stevens Sworn In As Minister of Customs While Patient In Hospital Suffering from Overstrain

OTTAWA, July 14 (Canadian Press).—It is not often that a minister of the Crown is sworn into office while a patient in the hospital. This happened last night in the case of Hon. H. H. Stevens, Minister of Customs. Mr. Stevens, who made the charges of maladministration of the customs department in the House of Commons, and who was one of the most active members of the customs investigating committee, has been forced to go to the hospital owing to a slight illness. The strain of the session and the work of actively administering his department since the recess has reacted against him, and he has been ordered to take a brief rest.

After the swearing in of the other ministers at Government House, E. J. Lemaire, Clerk of the Privy Council, proceeded to the hospital where Mr. Stevens is a patient, and swore him in as Minister of Customs.

Workman Meets Death while Working in Sewer In Toronto.

TORONTO, July 14. — While working in a sewer, 14 feet below the ground yesterday, James Jones, 14 years of age, of 12 Tyburn Ave., was instantly killed when the plank props gave away and the sewer caved in.

The fatality occurred at Weatherill Avenue about 12 o'clock, the body of the unfortunate man being recovered about 2 o'clock, following strenuous digging operations. James McNab of 173 Aileen Avenue, who was working with Jones when the cave in occurred, escaped injury. Dr. T. H. McConnell will hold an inquest.

The inquest will be held on Thursday evening at the funeral undertaking parlors of William Speers, 1926 Dundas street west.

BUSINESS PREMISES DAMAGED BY BLAZE

HAMILTON, July 14.—Fire last night did damage of $20,000 to the carriage works and garage of Andrew Ross, 284-6-8 King Street East. The fire started in a paint shop on the third floor and is believed to have been due to spontaneous combustion. A night watchman is said to have punched a clock there five minutes before a raging fire was discovered.

The upper part of the building was doomed when the firemen arrived, but they soon had the fire under control. Three children were injured by flying glass, caused when powerful streams of water were played on the blaze from the rear of the building. Scores of citizens on King Street were drenched before they could run to cover.

EVERY PUPIL OF CAMPBELLFORD ENTRANCE CLASS SUCCESSFUL

Thirty-Six Candidates From Public School and All Passed.

25 WITH HONORS.

(Examiner Staff Correspondence)

CAMPBELLFORD, July 14. — Of the thirty-six pupils of the Campbellford Public School, who recently tried the High School entrance examinations, every one passed, and twenty-five of the thirty-six, or approximately 70 per cent., won honors. This splendid result of this year's work is another striking achievement for Mr. C. S. Haig, principal of the local Public school. A year ago all but one of his candidates were successful. That really excellent accomplishment, improved by this year's perfect score, constitutes a record that reflects the fullest credit upon Mr. Haig and his class. To the members of the Board of Education, and to the citizens generally, it is a most gratifying proof of the school's efficiency, positive evidence of sustained effort and progress, and especially is it a comforting assurance to parents that the primary education of their children is in competent hands. Campbellford is prouder than ever to-day of its Public school. Mr. Haig's prize in history was carried off by Ruby Townsend.

There were 81 candidates from the entire Campbellford centre, or district, of whom 65 were successful. They are as follows:

FIRES BREAK OUT IN B. C. FORESTS

Lumber and Logging Equipment Destroyed on Vancouver Island.

WEATHER HOT.

VANCOUVER, B.C., July 14. — (Canadian Press). — Serious fires have broken out at Stillwater, 135 miles north of Vancouver, and at other points on the mainland, according to word received here yesterday.

Camp Number Four of the Brooks Scanlon Lumber Company at Louis Lake, 20 miles inland from Stillwater, was entirely wiped out when fire swept over a large area on Monday.

Latest reports state that none of the men at the camp was injured, but that considerable equipment was destroyed.

Another fire covering 450 acres broke out at Drury Inlet, on the Mainland, 200 miles north of Vancouver, on Monday afternoon, but was reported under control yesterday morning.

Fire on a two-mile front at Deep Bay, Comox district, on Vancouver Island, is reported out of control, and two logging engines and other equipment was destroyed with many thousands of feet of cut timber. At nine o'clock the fire was still burning and threatening still larger areas.

Large crews of fire-fighters have been sent from Vancouver in an effort to check the flames.

McGillivury Lodge, sixty miles north of Vancouver, on the Pacific Great Eastern Railway, a summer resort, was said to have been destroyed yesterday.

The Merritt sub-division of the Kettle Valley Railway, a fire is reported to have assumed large proportions, but the railway company has sixty men fighting the fire and expect to keep it in check.

During the last week the weather has been extremely hot, but weather officials say that a break is in sight.

LATE MINISTER HAS NO CENSURE FOR BARON BYNG

Dr. J. H. King Declares Meighen Bungled Since He Took Office.

PROPER PROCEDURE.

Should Have Had Prorogation With Dissolution and Election Following.

WINNIPEG, Man., July 14 (Canadian Press). — The Liberal campaign in the Province of British Columbia will be launched July 26, Dr. J. H. King, former member for East Kootenay and late Minister of Public Works, stated yesterday in an interview. Liberals will have candidates in thirteen constituencies with an Independent who supported the King Government in the House of Commons again contesting Comox Alberni, the only other riding, he said.

Referring to events since dissolution, Dr. King declared that "Meighen bungled terribly from the time he took office." Continuing, he said: "He failed to constitute a Government in the first place, and after his defeat in the House he should have, through Dr. Tolmie or some other member of his party, met Parliament the following day and advised prorogation, dissolution and election. Such a procedure would have been better for his own party and would have certainly been better for the country, as it would have provided the necessary supplies instead of having to carry on through the Governor-General."

In discussing the acceptance of these interim supplies by the next Government, if a Liberal one, Dr. King intimated that assent would, to a large extent, depend on their warrant. He made it clear that he had no criticism of the Governor-General to make.

OAKVILLE, July 14.—A preliminary inquest before Coroner W. M. Wilkinson, held at S. S. Russell's Undertaking Parlors here last evening, when the death of Willie Pratt, 11 years of age, of 69 Tecumseh Street, Toronto, was investigated, was adjourned until next week, to permit the evidence of a portmortem examination to be heard. The unfortunate lad was struck and instantly killed by a motor car on the Toronto-Hamilton Highway shortly after 10 o'clock yesterday morning, the driver of the car being William Porter, 242 Rose Avenue, East Toronto.

According to eye-witnesses, the young boy had been playing at the side of a stalled truck with George and Mary Grass, 168 Shaw Street, Toronto. In the car were Mrs. Margaret Bradshaw and her daughter, Miss Ruby Bradshaw, of 413 Wellesley Street. None were injured, but the car was damaged.

No charge was laid against Porter.

REV. DAVID WREN GIVEN FAREWELL

(From the Midland Free Press.)

Rev. David Wren concluded his ministry in St. Paul's Church on Sunday, with two stirring and timely sermons, upon themes which, especially within recent years, have claimed a good deal of attention. Both of the subjects dealt with were in answer to a question asked of the Christian church of to-day. It is fitting that they should receive an answer and the minister of St. Paul's made a clear, sober-minded and emphatic pronouncement.

Both addresses were eloquent pleas that Christians should get their feet upon solid ground and put their trust in God while working for the coming of His kingdom.

At the close of the service, Mr. George Dudley speaking for the congregation, gave expression to the feeling of regret in the loss of Mr. Wren's Ministry. His service to St. Paul's has been conspicuously successful, and he had a warm place in the hearts of her membership. His sterling qualities of character, his warm interest in all that concerned his people, and his genial tactfulness had made all work through the many organizations of the church a happy memory. The three years of his ministry have been marked by the finest harmony, and he has earned the deep and sincere affection of all. The congregation has, most important of all, received a pulpit ministry which was always marked by deep thoughtfulness, careful study, and a deeply spiritual exposition and interpretation. He had at all times sought to give his people a "world-citizenship." His loss would be keenly felt, and his ministry would remain as a constant force in St. Paul's church.

Mr. Dudley also felt that the loss of St. Paul's would be a loss felt by the community; Mr. Wren had always lent his support to every good cause.

The congregation released him the more willingly knowing that the new call is a step higher in the service of the church to which he had dedicated his life.

Many of the things said of Mr. Wren's services were due also to Mrs. Wren, who had earned the affection of all, and the congregation knew quite well that Mr. Wren's success was her success. She was asked to appropriate those expressed appreciations as belonging to herself as well.

In his words of farewell, Mr. Wren paid high tribute to the different organizations of the church. They had all loyally stood with him. He expressed his appreciation for the fine spirit which had always been shown in every department of the church's work, making everything run so smoothly. He also took occasion to pay a warm tribute to the local Young Men's Christian Association, and its secretary, for a work which has been since its inception a splendid influence and an inestimable aid to the church in its work in the town. He expressed the hope that soon its influence would be widened through a local building being erected.

Altogether his three years' ministry in Midland were full of the happiest memories, and he asked for the same fine co-operation and splendid congregational spirit for his successor who would enter upon his duties next Sunday.

Mr. Wren has been called to Trinity Church, Peterboro, and will be succeeded by Rev. E. S. Sinclair, B. A., B.D., who comes to Midland from the city of Brantford.

On the eve of their farewell Mr. and Mrs. Wren were presented with a cabinet of silver, the ladies of the congregation at the same time, presenting Mrs. Wren with a bouquet of roses.

Kitchen Shower

The South Dummer U.F.O. Club gave a "kitchen shower" for Mr. and Mrs. Harold Patterson on Thursday evening at Mr. Patterson's mothers home, where they have been staying since they were burnt out.

A pretty good supply of kitchen necessities were donated, also a sum of money. Mr. E. N. MacDonald thanked the people for Mr. and Mrs. Patterson. A loss Mrs. Patterson felt very keenly was her mother's silver, which she had had in the house but a short time. Dr. and Mrs. Munro, Miss Edith Tucker and Mr. Hector Munro were present and supplied music. The doctor said a few words. Mrs. J. A. Crowe recited. There were no games nor anything of that kind, but a very enjoyable social evening was spent. Lunch was served by the visiting ladies.

CAMPBELLFORD NEWS.

CAMPBELLFORD, July 14—The following note is an extract from the Carleton Place Herald, praising the work of Mr. R. T. Cowell, A.R.C.O., recently of Campbellford and now organist and choir master of the Zion church at Carleton Place:

"The service in Zion Church last Sunday evening was almost exclusively musical, a rich program being rendered by the choir under the leadership of Mr. R. T. Cowell, A.R.C.O. Each number was well rendered, the solos and the anthems being exceptionally good, whilst the organ work of Mr. Cowell gave evidence of his mastery of the big instrument. His rendering of the Andante from the 5th Symphony by Tschaikowsky being very good, showing the capacity of the organ as well as the fine technique of the artist."

Mr. Cowell's many Campbellford friends will be pleased to know of his progress and also glad to know he is very much improved in health.

An appropriate programme was rendered; Mr. W. H. Hooper being chairman, after which an address was read by Miss Mildred Delehay, and a well-filled purse was presented by Mrs. W. H. Jessop:

"Dear Mr. Wilkinson:

On the eve of your departure to another field of labor, your friends and associates of Pontypool United Church felt impelled to show you, in some tangible way, their appreciation of your work here during the last four years.

"We fully realize the difficulties with which you have been surrounded, but these come in a greater or less degree to us all and if we are to successfully meet them, we must simply do our best and leave the rest to our Heavenly Father, who judges no one harshly, but delights in showing love and mercy to all who trust Him.

"We appreciate your efforts in behalf of the Church, but especially in succeeding in interesting the young people in church work, through the agency of the League.

"We know, too, that you have had to do much more than should be required of a pastor in looking after the finances of the church, but we believe that virtue and industry will sooner or later be rewarded. We are told to 'Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days.' Also Paul said, 'I have planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the increase,' so since 'Our times are in God's hands,' we can safely leave all with Him, knowing that He will not allow any work done lovingly and gratefully for Him to be lost.

"We also would like to express to Mrs. Wilkinson our appreciation of her willingness to help in every way she could, knowing that the responsibilities of home and children took nearly all her time.

"We all join in wishing you all, a happy and blest experience in your new home and work.

"In conclusion, we ask you to accept this small token of our appreciation.

"Signed on behalf of the Congregation.

Mrs. W. H. Jessop.
Mildred Delehay."

After the address, Rev. Mr. Wilkinson, who was taken very much by surprise, replied very fittingly. Speeches were then made by several officials of the church; one of which impressed us most was made by Mr. Thomas Webb, in which he stated that we are to prone to think of other peoples' opinions instead of looking up to higher Powers.

After a dainty lunch was served by the ladies, they all joined heartily in singing "God Be With You Till We Meet Again."

REV. D. B. AVISON SPOKE ON SUNDAY

Gave Interesting Address on Missionary Work in Korea, China.

MILLBROOK, July 14. — "My talk this morning will deal with what the life of a missionary really is, rather than what you imagine it to be," was the introductory remark of an interesting address given in the United Church on Sunday by Dr. Douglas B. Avison, of the Severance Union Medical College at Seoul, Korea.

Dr. Avison was born in Korea 33 years ago, and is a missionary under the Board of the Presbyterian Church of the United States. "My father," he said, "went out under the American board because the Canadian church had then no missions in Korea, and so I followed suit."

The morning talk to the boys and girls took the form of a Korean legend, and brought out reference to the fact that marriages in that land, "which hangs like an ear drop from northern China," are arranged by a marriage broker who is paid for his services. The couple have their first meeting at the time of the ceremony, and the brides eyelids being tightly pasted down, she does not see what manner of man her husband is until they are together in their own home.

Commenting on the changing conditions in Korea, which has a population of about twenty millions, the speaker referred to the fact that walled cities are not so numerous as in former years, that all roads lead to Seoul, the capital, which is the centre of the national life, the rest of the land being practically considered as rural in character.

Curiosity does not attract the people to the missionaries, as it did in earlier days, and the native Christion church has now a baptized membership of over 3,000,000 souls, and and adherent membership of over 5,000,000. "Members are not baptized on profession of faith alone, but must prove their zeal by study and passing an examination in memory work of certain passages of Scripture."

The three-fold ministry of the Saviour, teaching, preaching and healing the sick, is carried on by the missionary force on the Korean field to-day, but the church has so grown that organization, and the training of Christian leaders, make special demands upon its attention.

Difficulties and excitement attend the trips for teaching purposes made into the country districts by single lady missionaries, who ride one of the native ponies, provided with neither stirrup nor saddle, but seated between, or on top of, the box of supplies first placed on the animals' back and covered with a rug before the rider takes her place; the mountainous nature of the country, and the curiosity of the natives, make the trip, which lasts three or four weeks, a memorable one. A native helper and a servant usually accompany the missionary, and bells on the pony, similar to our sleigh bells, make the start off musical.

The language is a difficult one, taking about three years to learn and pass the necessary examinations, though the workers use it from the first as best they can, or its mastery would be very slow of accomplishment.

The Japanese government fears the Christian church because it is the one great body doing organized work whose aims and ideals it cannot understand. When a new field is to be opened usually the medical work is started first because the people will listen when their bodies have to be ministered to, and suffering relieved. The budget of a hospital is about $20,000 a year, hence the necessity of charging for the service given since the church at home probably pays only the salary of the doctor and nurses on the staff.

Some of the remarkable methods of the native doctors were outlined by the speaker, who intimated that even the Christians sometimes have the attitude: "If the Lord fails we call in the doctor." "This is a great compliment to the doctor, but a poor argument, for when you have exhausted every other method, and found them no good, it may be too late for ours to be much good either."

Dr. Avison's work has been chiefly among the children for the past two years, his connection being with the Severance Medical College at Seoul, which has a capacity of 80 beds. Six denominations are concerned in this college, a doctor and nurse being supplied by the United Church of Canada. There are 80 students, 20 being the number admitted each year. The accommodation is being enlarged this year, but between five and six thousand patients have been treated annually, and between sixty and seventy thousand received attention in the dispensary.

"Korea is not a part of China; its people differ in every particular from either the Chinese or the Japanese. Missionary work among them is well worth while, for the white people have exploited them, and feel a keen superiority; yet the Koreans are just as intelligent. The Easterners can make gunpowder just as well as we can, and I would rather face any soldiers than the Japanese for they never think of sparing an enemy after capture. We must eliminate the selfish idea, and we will find they give a ready response to Christian love and interest."

"The Korean Church is sending missionaries to China and Japan yet the need for our mission workers, evangelical teachers, doctors and nurses, is not yet over, for the great lack is trained leadership, and this we are bending our efforts to provide."

It is expected that Dr. Avison will speak again on other phases of Korean life, with which he is intimately acquainted, during his stay in Millbrook. On the pastor's invitation many of the congregation had the privilege of extending personal greetings to the speaker, his wife, and two little daughters, at the conclusion of the morning service. Dr. Avison's three children were all born in Korea; furlough expires next June.

BOGUS DOCTORS DEFRAUD LADY

Two Unknown Men Mulcted $900 From Aged Lady.

FALSE OPERATION.

OSHAWA, July 14. — Posing as Montreal eye specialists, two unknown men are reporte' to have pulled off last week one of the most sensational frauds that has been attempted in this section in late years, when Mrs. John Puckrin, an aged lady, living in East Whitby Township, was mulcted of $900. Full details concerning the affair did not come out until yesterday, so completely made were the plans of the "specialists." Provincial Constable Taylor of Whitby is working on the case and is following up a valuable clue.

Said Operation Required.

The affair took place on July 5th. Two well dressed men drove up to the Puckrin home on the Fourth Concession of East Whitby. One of them got out of the car, introduced himself as an oculist, and asking for Mrs. Puckrin, said he wished to test her eyes. After making a test he announced that she had cataract over both eyes, and would be totally blind within six months unless something was done immediately. Mrs. Puckrin was considerably wrought up over the information. The visitor informed her that two courses were open, either Mrs. Puckrin could go to Toronto and have an operation, where she would be charged $1500 or she could be treated by the man in the car, who was a specialist in treating cataracts, and who did it for nothing. His sole charge would be for the radium, which must be used in the operation. The cost of the radium was fixed at $900.

Insisted on Cash.

Mrs. Puckrin decided to take the radium cure, and asked about money, offered a cheque. This the men refused, suggesting that they drive her to the bank at Whitby, where she could withdraw the money. Mrs. Puckrin agreed, and the men drove her to the Standard Bank and waited outside while she got the money. After returning home the "operation" was performed. It consisted in pouring some green liquid from a bottle into Mrs. Puckrin's eyes. Before departing the specialists pointed out that as they were from Montreal, they were not supposed to practice in Ontario, and requested Mrs. Puckrin as a special favor to say nothing of the matter to anyone. The following Saturday Mrs. Puckrin decided to tell her physician, Dr. MacDougall, of Whitby, of the affair. The doctor immediately notified the police.

SEEKS AUTHORITY TO PROSECUTE C P R

British Columbia Asks Railway Board to Sanction The Action.

VANCOUVER, July 14 (Canadian Press).—Application for leave to prosecute President E. W. Beatty, Vice-President W. R. McInnes and Director W. N. Tilley, K.C., of the Canadian Pacific Railway, for refusal to obey the order of the Board of Railway Commissioners to equalize the export rates on grain and flour was made to the Commission by G. G. McGeer, counsel for the British Columbia Government, yesterday.

After a conference on the bench the Commissioners decided to adjourn their session until to-day to consider the situation. The application was directed only against the C.P.R., the National Railways not being mentioned.

Mr. McGeer stated that the C.P.R. had not obeyed the equalization order issued by Chief Commissioner McKeown and Commissioner Frank Oliver and sustained on an appeal to the full board by a division of three and three.

DIES SAVING FAMILY.

MINE CENTRE, Ont., July 14.—In an heroic effort, which saved the lives of his wife and four children from drowning, when their boat overturned, W. Timmins, mining engineer, lost his life after he had seen his wife and two of the children safely on shore and placed the other two on the bottom of the overturned craft, from which they were later rescued.

The accident occurred Sunday afternoon shortly after four o'clock. Captain Timmins and his family had gone for a trip in a boat to which was attached an outboard motor. A short distance from the shore the boat capsized in the heavy weather and Mr. and Mrs. Timmins and the children were thrown out. Mrs. Timmins, with two of the children, managed to reach the shore. Captain Timmins remained at the boat and succeeded in getting the other two safely on the bottom, to which they clung until rescued.

Exhausted from his efforts, Captain Timmins then disappeared. The body was recovered later.

Captain Timmins was an Englishman and was mining captain for the Foley Mines, at Mine Centre. He had been at Porcupine before coming to this district two years ago.

CAN NEVER KNOW EXPLOSION TOLL

Indications To-Day are That Arsenal Deaths Cannot Be Found.

DOVER, N. J., July 14. Canadian Press. — The indications to-day were that the number of the victims of the explosion that destroyed Lake Denmark and Picatinny Arsenal, and worked havoc in a dozen New Jersey towns, probably never will be known.

The list of missing has varied from hour to hour and Brig. General Drum in charge of the policing arrangements has not at any time been willing to make any positive statement as to numbers. All records at the arsenals were destroyed. The death toll stood at 21 to-day. The latest unofficial estimates placed the property damage as high as $65,000,000 for Lake Denmark naval arsenal; $5,000,000 for Picatinny arsenal and $4,000,000 for civilians.

Four towns were wholly or partly destroyed; Wharton, Rockaway and Hibernia were three other towns that suffered the greatest damage.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

Letters to be printed in the Voice of the People column must be received at The Examiner office on the day before it is desired to have them published.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Sir: Once when Sir Wilfred Laurier was taunted with not being a businessman, he replied: "Certainly not; I never pretended to be a business man. My desire has always been to be an administrator."

That is, of course, the true conception of a statesman, a man put in charge of the state by all classes of citizens, who will use his "judgment" in directing men of business abilities in his government to do what is best to be done. Many a man can see where it is best to build a bridge or a railway who could not for his life build either, and a business man, if a self-centred successful one, will say: "I know nothing of anybody else's business. My own is all I know about."

Such a man is invaluable in his own line but useless to manage a state with varied interests, and that is why so many lawyers are in parliament. They not only are conversant with the making of laws, which is the business of parliament, but they are the specialists into whose hands all business men place their business at three important periods: 1. When it is being put in shape to begin it. 2: During the rise and fall of liabilities from time to time. 3: When it is to be wound up for good or ill. A judge must always be a lawyer, because he alone is fit and qualified to interpret the relationship of business and the daily affairs of men and the laws which govern them. A judge and a legislator are exactly alike except for one thing—a judge never initiates; a legislator must do so. A legislator is a man who undertakes in the public interest the general management of public affairs, and he asks information from time to time from those in the Legislature best qualified to give it, from a farmer about farming, from a miner about mining, from a lumberman about lumbering, from a financier about finances, etc.

The good legislator-administrator, is like the good strategist, a rare bird. Oyama, the great Japanese strategist, was not a soldier at all, and though wearing the uniform out of courtesy, knew nothing of the technique of an army. His business was to put and keep it in motion most effectively, and so it is with an administrator, and when we are shy of such people, as at present, it is a bad thing for the state. The business man's business is to get money out of the state through supplies, contracts, etc., and while he is an invaluable asset to every country, he is not qualified to be an impartial administrator of the people's affairs. So that the oft-repeated remark that we need a business government, that is, a government of business men, is founded on a fallacy and has never yet worked out. The overhead gift of general management called administratorship, is what is needed, and in a country where people are not accustomed to "think" so much as to "do." We must beware of fine-sounding phrases. They are made as Gladstone said, to bewitch and betray the judgment—and he ought to have known, great as he was. Sir John A. Macdonald said once somewhere, that he fought shy of business men for his cabinet as they always wanted to buy or sell the country. That was business all right, but not statesmanship.

DISCLOSURES IN MCPHERSON CASE

Los Angeles Times Says Telegram Was Sent by Radio Operator.

LOS ANGELES, July 14 (Canadian Press) — The telegram announcing that Aimee Semple McPherson was alive and safe was sent from Oakland to her mother, Mrs. Minnie Kennedy, three days after Mrs. McPherson was reported drowned May 18, the Los Angeles Times says today. The telegram bore the signature "Dr. Murten" and was sent by a man partially identified as Kenneth G. Ormiston, former radio operator at the Angelus Temple, who is being sought to testify before the county grand jury in an investigation of the evangelist's abduction story

Mother Is Witness

Mrs. Minnie Kennedy, mother of Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson, was the first witness summoned before the Los Angeles county garnd jury yesterday when that body resumed deliberations in the McPherson case. In the ante room were nearly a score of other witnesses.

A bombshell was thrown into the jury deliberations when Judge Arthur Keetch, presiding judge, who has direct control of the jury, announced that no report would be made by the jury unless indictments were returned. This means that in the event the jury finds Mrs. McPhersons story to be without foundation, it is not to make a report to that effect nor is it to report in her favor unless in the form of indictments.

Rumors of dissensions on this point immediately began to fly and it was strongly rumored that the jury might make a report either for or against the evangelist, despite the Jurist's orders.

An aviator who asserted that he could prove Mrs. McPherson to have been transported from Los Angeles by airplane shortly after her mysterious disappearance, created somewhat of a sensation when he brought forth his charges. District Attorney Keyes quickly settled the matter by subpoenaing him without further notice and he was one of those in the witness room.

Authorities place little credence in his tale, but are willing to give him a chance to be heard.

FOREST FIRES IN WESTERN STATES

Kaniksu National Forest Resembles Huge Volcano Reports Ranger.

SPOKANE, Wash., July 14 (Canadian Press).—Tinder dry forests of Washington, Idaho and Montana were dotted to-day with hundreds of roaring fires. In many sections the flames have been fanned by high winds, spreading over large areas.

Every mountain in Kaniksu National Forest looks like a volcano, according to E. J. Jost, aeroplane forest observer, "with great clouds of smoke rolling up." Between forty and fifty lightning fires were started yesterday, and in the Coeur D'Alene section of Northern Idaho, rangers reported.

ROTARY LAKEFIELD PLAY ON THURSDAY

Bill Howden and Chuck Kenneally will Form Battery for Rotary.

One of the topnotch minor league batteries will be seen in action at Exhibition Park on Thursday evening when Bill Prindible's Rotary Juveniles play Lakefield. A big reason for the fine record of five straight wins, made by the Rtoary nine, is the pitching of Bill Howden and the backstopping of 'Chuck' Kenneally a former battery mate of "Casey" Masterson now twirling winning ball fast intermediate company. Howden is a big lad with good speed and curves and he had a strong team behind him.

Fans who are interested in the youngsters will find much to attract them at Exhibition Park on Thursday evening.

Players with Midget, Juvenile and Junior teams in the past two years are making good in intermediate baseball. Cameron, Nicholls, Delahaye, McIntyre, and Wood, of Raybestos and practically the whole Crescents team are recruits from the minors.

RETURNING OFFICER PROTEST DISMISSAL

Claim Immunity As Civil Servants. Deny Political Affiliations.

TORONTO, July 14. — That changing governments should have no more effect upon returning officers than upon postal clerks or Senators, is the contention of the nine returning officers appointed "at pleasure," for the Toronto ridings by the late Liberal Government Yesterday they telegraphed a protest to the Governor General in connection with the rumor of their displacement.

Seek Immunity From Dismissal.

"If the dismissal is put through by Order-in-Council. it simply means that the present Government is reverting to a patronage arrangement," stated one of the men concerned last night. "We Toronto returning officers were Liberals; when we were put in by Act of Parliament in the House, there was not a voice of dissent from the Opposition. Every one understood that, under the new act, we were appointed "at pleasure," which is the usual tenure of office in the Civil Service. Once we were in our official positions, we became without political colour, like all civil servants. I don't think our Conservative friends could find anything to criticize in the way we handled the ballots and carried out our duties during the election last fall. The proper procedure, instead of dismissing us, is to wait until we die, just as a Liberal Government has to wait for Conservative Senators to die."

Hon. Dr. S. F. Tolmie while in the acting Cabinet asked the various members from Toronto to recommend persons for the position of returning officer, it is claimed and as a result practically a complete set of nine officers is said to be now waiting for the approval of the Cabinet, which might be given the dismissal of the present officers was effected.

Do Not Expect Reply.

"We are not expecting a reply from his Excellency, but if he sees fit to take the matter under his personal consideration we shall be very pleased," said Cecil Carrick, who signed the wire on behalf of his colleagues.

"The returning officers for the City of Toronto respectfully call to his Excellency's attention a statement that they are to be replaced by other officers.

"The returning officers were appointed by his Excellency in Council during pleasure, under amended legislation, and therefore hold office upon the same conditions as al most all public servants. Dismissal without cause assigned is a reflection upon their personal honesty and integrity. Dismissal simply because of former political affiliations is unjust, and is a dangerous precedent,

"It is respectfully submitted that such action being done in his Excellency's name under the present circumstances would be unfair to his Excellency and most unadvisable.

"(Signed) Cecil Carrick,
On behalf of the Toronto Returning Officers."

WILL INVESTIGATE.

County Orange Lodge Will Hold Meeting Tonight.

TORONTO, July 14.—At a meeting to-night the County Orange Lodge will investigate the disturbance which occurred during the Orange parade on Monday when, it is alleged, two motorcycle officers of the Toronto Police Force were knocked off their machines by a few of the younger paraders. This morning Chief Dickson and County Master J. Wesley Benson, are to hold a conference when the matter will be discussed. Inspector Johnson, of No. 6 Station said yesterday that the procession was remarkably well behaved except for this one disturbance.

SOLUTION OF YESTERDAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE.

Lyrics Of Life

(By Douglas Malloch.)

THE LANES OF LIFE.

The lanes of life take many a turning.
For always hearts will need to go
Up hills of joy through vales of yearning—
The stony field, and yet the swallow,
And, even when the sun is low,
Assurance of a dawn to follow.

There never was a lane forever
Along the heights—but now and then
Would cross a meadow, skirt a river.
It was not made by rule and measure—
Up hill, down hill, and up again,
And this is was that gave it pleasure.

And yet we hear so much complaining,
As though the world could have its grass,
Could have the rose, without the raining.
Ah, yes, we hear so much of sorrow,
And yet we know that night will pass
And bring the splendor of tomorrow.

There never was a life all laughter
Time brings us many a troubled hour,
Yet always there is something after—
A little sorrow for a season
But just around the bend a flow'r,
And even for a grief a reason.

The lanes of life take many a turning:
You will not find them always glad,
Unless their lesson you are learning
The stony field, and yet the swallow,
And, even when the heart is sad,
Assurance of a dawn to follow.

LOVE LETTERS THAT MADE HISTORY

(By Joseph Kaye.)

RICHARD WAGNER AND AN INCIDENTAL CHARMER.

The temperament of Richard Wagner—the outstanding musical genius of two centuries and the inspiration for most of our modern music—required the company of the feminine to a great degree. He was married twice, first to an actress, known in the Wagner gallery as Minna, who was far from being an equal in mind to him and, whom he treated very badly, and to Cosima Von Bulow, love-daughter of Franz Lizzt, who made her husband, Hans Von Bulow, a celebrated conductor, an unnecessary part of a triangle. In between these marriages and over-lapping them, he had a formidable number of friendships which he accepted in a spirit of unquestioning naivete! He was also rather effeminate in his taste for dress, which was a curious contrast to the heroic conceptions of his operatic characters. This effeminancy clothed him in silk and vari-colored garments as the letter following suggests. This letter was addressed to a young woman who was a mere incident in his life, a housekeeper who had the good sense to know how to provide her master with all the comforts of home. It is a love letter not to be included in a famous collection, but a love letter, nevertheless, and one that shows an unconventional side of the great man.

"Dear little Marie —

I shall be home again next Wednesday. I shall be at the northern station at half past seven in the evening. Frantz (a servant) must be there punctually with the carriage and he must also have what is necessary for the trunk. Now, my best sweetheart, have everything in the house very nice, so that I can get a cosy rest, which I very much need. Everything must be quite tidy and well-warmed. See that everything is nice in the lovely study: if it is not, open it a little so that it may be warm: and perfume it nicely: buy the best bottles of scent, so as to give it a nice odor. Ach Gott! how delighted I am to be able to rest again with you there. (I hope the rose-colored pants are ready.) Aye, a thorough good time once more. At Christmas I will arrange the Christmas tree! And then, my sweetheart you will get all sorts of presents. My arrival need not be made known to everybody: but Franz must tell the barber and the hairdresser to come at half-past nine on Thursday morning.

"I leave it wholly to yourself as to whether you will meet me at the station. Perhaps it will be nicer if you meet me first at the house, in the warm rooms. Many kisses to my sweetheart. Au revoir."

DR. FLINT INTERVIEWS JUDY.

"Now you, my dear," said Mamie, looking at me with something that I could not explain in her face, "you, who only a few weeks ago had nothing to your name after your bag had been stolen, are talking of getting fifty thousand dollars from a man whom you hardly know as if it were perfectly easy."

"Good Lord, Judy, do you think you are a vamp? I think you have gone crazy over something you have seen at the movies."

"Do you know, Judy, how frightened you were that night when you thought you were penniless and alone in this great big city? I think I have never seen such bewildered agony on any face in all my life."

"You will never see it again on my face, Mamie," I told her. "I've learned a lot since that time. I always knew I had magnetism, and now I think I know how to use it."

"Have you learned to separate a man from fifty thousand dollars of his money? You may find that a little different from asking for a box of candy." Mamie said with as much sarcasm as a girl of her temperament was capable.

"That remains to be seen," I answered as I put on my hat to go to the store. I was early, but I had a shrewd hunch that I would be asked to come to Doctor Flint's office and I wanted to get that over before I met either Mr. Robinson or some sharp reporter, who would be sure to dig up the fact that I was one of the last people to see poor Martha Cleaver alive.

Sure enough there was a cash girl at my locker, and the moment I hung up my hat she said, "Miss Dean, Doctor Flint asked if you would come to his office."

"Certainly," I answered and followed her.

Doctor Flint met me with a very serious face as I opened the door. I could see that he was trying to smile, but he made me feel that if he smiled very long his face would crack.

"Will you be seated, Miss Dean?" I sat down, but I didn't speak a word. That got the doctor's goat at once. Finally, after clearing his throat once or twice, the old hypocrite said most pompously, "I will not disguise from you, Miss Dean, that the Morton Department Store is placed in a most disagreeable position by the death of Miss Cleaver."

He stopped and waited for me to speak.

"Yes?" The word was as insolent as I could make it.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

(By Mildred Marshall.)

Facts about your name, its history; its meaning; whence it was derived; its significance; your lucky day, and lucky jewel.

ADELAIDE.

Adelaide has an heroic significance: it means noble cheer. It is distinctly a Teutonic name, coming from Adilo or Odilo. Ado and Addo are still in use as proper names, but other syllables have been added for the more modern version.

Curiously, Adele and Adela occur very early in history, unlike most names which show quaint and sometimes almost unrecognizable forms in their beginnings. Adal was a prefix used frequently among the Teutonic races and Adalheit or Adelchen were diminutives given to the daughters of the family. It was translated to mean "noble estate" and thus the princess of each little Frankish duchy was the "nobleness thereof."

All the feudal princes of the 10th and 11th centuries seem to have had an Adelheid to offer in marriage and they have Latinized her in all manner of ways. The French have made great use of all forms of the name. The Teutonic races, in honor perhaps of the Italian Queen Adelaid, whose adventures, before her marriage with Emperor Otho, were so curious—preferred Adelaide to all other forms. From them, England received it again with their good Queen Adelaide, whose popularity made it so frequent. Italy calls her Adalaida and Alisa, France makes her Adeline.

Adelaide's jewel is the turquoise, which though the simplest of stones possesses rare power to protect its wearer from harm and is said to break at the approach of grave danger. Friday is Adelaide's lucky and 6 her lucky number.

Tennyson, who omitted very few feminine names from his list of poems to fair women writes of Adeline

"Mystery of mysteries,
Faintly smiling Adeline,
Scarce of earth nor all divine,
Nor unhappy, nor at rest,
But beyond expression fair
With they floating flaxon hair:
Thy rose lips and full blue eyes
Take the heart from out my breast."

HOROSCOPE

"The Stars Incline, but do not Compel"

WEDNESDAY JULY 14 1926.

(Copyright, 1926, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

This should be a fairly favorable day, according to astrology, for certain benefic aspects dominate.

Again newspapers appear to be in unusual demand and to be subject to much gain, for they are to contain news of extraordinary interest.

Honors for editors and publishers are foretold. Writers will travel far and will benefit in money and fame.

Great demand for orators and linguists is indicated, also for teachers and secretaries.

A premium is to be put on executive ability in coming months when the world will demand supreme talents well developed.

The Moon today is in a sign making for wise discrimination and definite opinions. Education is subject to the best possible direction.

While this configuration prevails it is well to beware of entrance to a quarrel. Irritability and peevishness are supposed to be encouraged.

Domestic troubles should be avoided by bearing and forebearing, for the aspects indicate increase of divorces and less lasting marriage contracts.

Vanity and egotism should be eliminated as far as possible, for both men and women will incline toward extreme individualism at this time.

Increase of nervous maladies and mental troubles is prognosticated. Astrologers emphasize the need of more rest and see in many sudden deaths proof of sleep starvation.

All the seers of the present appear to find a steady warning against any sort of national extravagance or excess along any line of enterprise, except aviation or other form of preparedness.

Persons whose birthdate it is have the outlook of quiet and prosperity in the coming year, which they may face with confidence.

Children born on this day may be too easily influenced for their own best interests, for they are likely to be artistic and emotional. They are capable of big achievements, if well directed.

WILDWOOD MOVIES

So many people have phoned and have asked about birds, saying something like this, "What birds is it that meows like a cat?" or "Is a Bluebird all blue or was I seeing something else?" that maybe we had better stop this business right here in order to make a few things plain.

Now, it does not matter whether you are at your summer camp or in a city garden; the birds will come to you if there is foliage and water, etc.

A Catbird is dark gray with a black cap, and the under side of the base of the tail shows reddish brown. He is a mocker and sings a song that may be anything from soup to nuts; sometimes the soup is dishwater, but sometimes the whole menu is sweet. He meows like a cat and mocks everything.

A Brown Thrasher is first cousin to the Catbird, but he is red-brown, has a white wing bar, and a well-streaked breast. His song is more melodious than that of the catbird. He has a long tail too.

On burnt land which has grown into a brushy waste, one may find the Indigo Bunting. This is an all blue bird. To me it seems to mock the sky-like brilliance of the Bluebird, but it is a beauty any way you like to take it. The difference between the Bluebird and the Indigo Bunting is this: The Bluebird is brilliant blue with a red-brown breast, and the female is similar but not so brilliant. The Indigo Bunting is blue all over, has darker wings and his mate is a dull rusty brown. In some localities the Indigo Bunting is mistaken for the Bluebird.

The Kingbird is dark all over, excepting a lovely white breast, when seen at a distance, and he has a white tip to his tail which he spreads almost every time he settles or hovers, and this marking is easily seen.

The Waxwing is Beau Brummel. He has a crest and also a yellow tip to his tail. He looks like an aristocrat.

The barn swallow has a long, forked tail. The tree swallow has a blue-green back and a white breast, it is called "White-belly." Chimney Swifts seem to have no tail at all, and Martins are big and very dark, and talkative.

YOUR JEWEL COLOR FLOWER

By Mildred Marshall

The opal is today's talismanic stone bringing its wearer good luck and brilliancy of mind. The superstition that it is unlucky should not be held against it on this day.

The carnelian, today's natal stone, brings good luck in mental battles and endows its wearer with keen mental vision. Those whose success depends on alertness and quick judgment will find this stone most potent.

BEAR BITES CHILD.

Animal Seized Infant by the Hand. Happened in Zoo.

TORONTO, July 14.—When 2½-year-old James Spence, of Virginnia Avenue, visited Riverdale Park yesterday, in charge of Kathleen Buckmaster, 15 years of age, who lives on Hillcrest Avenue, she got too near one of the bears, and the animal seized his hand in its mouth. According to the police, Miss Buckmaster lifted the little boy up in her arms, near the cage where the bear was, so that James might better see the animal. Old Bruin, however, did not appreciate such close contact, and took the boy's hand in his mouth. The child was taken to the Sick Children's Hospital by P. C. Armstrong. The injury was found to be not serious.

ONCE UPON A TIME — JESPER WHO HERDED THE HARES—XIII — by W. J. ENRIGHT.

THIRD TEST MATCH ENDS IN A DRAW

254 RUNS FOR THREE WICKETS IS SCORE IN SECOND INNINGS

After Cautious Start English Batsmen Trounce Australian Bowling.

HOBBS IN FORM.

LEEDS, England, July 14. Canadian Press Cable. — The third test match between England and Australia has become history, the game ending last evening in a draw.

Thus the story of the second test match, but with the situation with respect to the teams altered, is paralleled. The former game at Lord's was decidedly in favor of England, but the latter encounter at Leeds was strongly to the advantage of Australia.

England was unable to avert the follow-on yesterday, falling short by exactly 200 runs of the total piled up by the Australians in their first innings. With this tremendous handicap the home country were required to continue at bat, the Australians hoping against hope that in the time that was left they might be able to dismiss England a second time before play ended. Unfortunately for them, this was not realized. Taught by the disasters of the initial innings. England became cautious, but enlivened this caution with some wholehearted play. The end of the day found England still batting and with only three wickets down 254 runs had been scored.

The Scores.

The statistics of the game were:
Australia, first innings, 494.
England, first innings, 294.
England, second innings, 254 for three wickets.

When play resumed yesterday, Geary and Macaulay were batting for England. The score stood at 203 for eight wickets. The wicket was becoming patchy and somewhat treacherous. This operated to the benefit of no side. The batting opened with both players exhibiting a confidence that was lacking on Monday and they trounced the Australian bowling unmercifully. The totals were rapidly hoisted, while Mr. Bardsley tried bowling changes which were quite ineffective against the aggression of the batsmen.

The break came when Macaulay at 76 was sharply caught by Clarence Crimmett off the latter's own delivery, and Strudwick was the last man in. The Surrey wicket-keeper lasted only long enough to break his duck egg, when he was caught out by Gregory off Grimmett. England's innings ended there.

Second Innings.

Compelled to take the bat a second time by virtue of their having failed to reduce the margin between themselves and Australia to under 150, England again opened with Jack Hobbs and Sutcliffe. They started carefully, and for half an hour the runs came slowly. Having accustomed themselves to the bowling, however, both batsmen opened up and the crowd was treated to some fine strokes and some robust drives. For a time it looked as if Hobbs were en route for another century but at 88 he was bowled by Grimmett and F. E. Moolley paired with Sutcliffe.

Game Ends in Draw.

That the result would be a draw became plainly evident at this stage, and the English batsmen began to take chances. They lifted the Australian bowlers all over the field, driving many of them to the boundary, and this went on until finally Sutcliffe was crashed by Richardson, just six runs under the century. Woolley fell when England's total was 208.

Hendren of Middlesex and A. P. F. Chapman were at bat when time was called, with Chapman in rare form. He dealt ruthlessly with the Australian bowlers, delighting the throng with his vigorous batting. At one time Chapman drove the ball out of the grounds altogether while in one over he secured 17 runs from T. J. E. Andrews, made up of three 4's, a couple of 2's, and a single scoring on every ball delivered.

MILL DEFEATS ST ANDREWS TEAM

CAMPBELLFORD, July 14.—The Mill had little trouble defeating St. Andrew's in last night's association softball game at the Agricultural Grounds, the final score being 23 to 4.

Running true to form, St. Andrew's played smart ball in spots, followed by a weird session, and the Cloth Makers inserted their hits at the opportune time. Both third basemen had a busy evening, Peeling accepting eight of his nine chances and Blakely eight out of ten. Owen Hendry, behind the bat for the Saints, caught the fancy of the crowd by his clever display for a youngster his size.

The line-up:

Mill—Blakely, 3b; Ayrhart, cf and ss; Cochrane, 2b; Montgomery, 1b; Blake, ss; Lambert, cf; Bennett, c; Diamond, lf; Bell, rf.

St. Andrew's—Hendry, c; Grills, p; Shillinglaw, 1b; Beggs, rf; Bland, lf; Peeling, 3b; Chaplin, 2b; Little, ss; Bailey, cf.

Umpires—Osborne, plate; Bush, bases.

The score:

Mill	018040055—23	13	4
St. Andrew's	003001000— 4	7	7

LEAFS SCORED NINE IN FOURTH

Visting Moundsmen Were Ineffective and Leafs Win 18-9.

NEWARK WINS CAPS.

TORONTO, Ont., July 14 (Canadian Press) — Ineffective pitching marked yesterday's game between Baltimore and Toronto and won by the Leafs 18 to 9. Henderson, who started for the Orioles held the Leafs to one scratch hit to the fourth inning when he became wild to four successive batters. Manager Dunn used five other pitchers, Slappey, Ogden, Blaisdell and Jackson being easy for the home team to hit. Doyle though batted hard from the start was left in until the sixth when he gave way to Hubbell. Otis Miller for the Leafs and Pete Monohan hit home runs. Toronto got nine runs in the fourth inning.

The only other game in the league yesterday was at Buffalo where Newark gathered in six to the home team's three. Stryker's free tickets to first base proved costly. Thompson hit a homer in the opening inning.

It rained at Rochester and Syracuse.

KINGSTON PONIES HERE SATURDAY

Another Memorable Battle Is Expected at Riverside Park.

The Kingston Ponies will be here on Saturday to clash with the Petes and with Lefty Cairns and Al. Heckman hooking up in another pitching duel another memorable game should be the result. The July 1st clash between the two teams which the Petes won 2 to 0 was one of the best games staged in the Central loop in several seasons and there is every reason to expect a notable battle Saturday. The Petes play in Kingston today and whether they win or lose there will be fireworks in Saturday's return game which will attract the season's biggest crowd.

FOURNIER GETS THREE HOMERS

Equals League Record But His Team Loses Game.

BOSTON'S SINGLE.

ST. LOUIS, July 14 (Canadian Press)—Circuit clouts featured the National yesterday with Jack Fournier, Dodger first baseman, tying the Major league record by smacking three quadruples. Fournier's performance at St. Louis netted five runs for the Brooklynites, but the Cards won 12 to 10. Sherdel, hurling for the Cards, offered Fournier his meat in the fourth, sixth and ninth innings.

At Chicago Wilson clouted the first ball offered him in the sixth and knocked it into the bleachers to score Heathcote and count two runs Boston could muster only a single tally on High's triple and E. Taylor's single in the ninth. It was Wilson's 13th circuit drive of the season.

Cincinnati made it two straight from Philadelphia in a free hitting affair. The home team had ten runs to Philadelphia's 7.

NEW YORK LOSES THIRD STRAIGHT

Deciding Run Is Secured In Seventh Inning.

HOUSER'S HOMER.

NEW YORK, July 14 (Canadian Press)—The Yankees lost their third straight today when Detroit annexed the opener of a series 5-4. Wells, of the Tigers had a slight edge on Pennock and the visiting left hander received better support. What proved to be the deciding run was scored in the seventh when Blue came home on Fothergill's single.

Houser's homer at Philadelphia gave the home team the game in the eighth. St. Louis was leading 2 to 1 when the circuit clout came and scored the extra run.

At Boston Wiltse southpawed for the Red Sox ineffectively allowing thirteen hits, and Cleveland took the game 6-1. Eichrolt with a single, double and triple, led the attack. Carr held the mound for the Indians being touched only four times.

At Washington the Senators banged four Chicago pitchers for 20 hits and a 13 to 9 victory. Three triples and four two-baggers were included in the loot. McNeeley with five hits and Ruel with three had perfect cards.

LOSS MUST BE GIVEN TO GOYER

Relief Pitcher in Saturday's Game Not Responsible For Defeat.

The Belleville Intelligencer charges the loss of Saturday's game to "Hoot" Gibson the relief pitcher instead of to Gilly Goyer the twirler who started the game. Wrong, brother. Goyer went out in the third with one run in and the bases loaded and as the pitcher who is relieved is always charged with the runs he leaves on the bases—in this case three—the responsibility for the loss cannot be placed on anybody's shoulders but those of Mr. Goyer.

LADIES' BALL GAME.

The C.G.E. Ladies and the Sporting Ladies will meet in a softball game at 6.30 o'clock on Thursday evening at Central Park. This should provide an interesting game, and will attract a large crowd.

CRESCENTS NOW WELL IN FRONT

Play Errorless Ball To Win Fourth Contest for City Title by 5 to 4.

Raybestos tossed away the fourth game of their series with Crescents at Exhibition Park last night, when after taking a lead of two runs in the first frame, Manager Coursey's athletes made enough fielding misplays to give the Southenders a 5 to 4 victory. Crescents played errorless ball while Raybestos slipped at critical moments and spoiled Carl Wood's good pitching. The game abounded in stirring plays, with both teams contributing. Corbett took five chances in left field; shortstop Hall cut down runners by some fine work, and both second basemen put in a busy time, Johnny Marchen retiring the side in the first on ground balls, and Doug. Moore duplicating the feat in the third.

The win gave Crescents a wide margin as they have won three of the four games played. Another win will give them the city intermediate title. The winner of the series will play home-and-home games with the county winner for the East Peterborough League championship, and the right to enter the O.B.A.A. semi-finals.

Cameron leading off for Raybestos singled into right and made his way to third while Moore and McIntyre grounded out. Oscar Nicholls was passed and took second. Both runners scored on Delahaye's drive across second. Marchen threw out Rogers.

Crescents went out in a row in their half, Wood getting two strikeouts. Raybestos were easily disposed of in the second, but Crescents scored three. Rangers' best was a tap to the pitcher, who threw him out. Marchen fanned, but Delahaye dropped the third strike and then threw the ball into right field, Marchen taking second Corbett got a single into centre and Marchen made third on a balk. Masterson popped out to Nicholls at third. Jack LeBarr grounded down first, the ball going through Harry Corrin to score Marchen and Corbett. Hall upset the dope by sending out a long double, scoring LeBarr. Wood threw out Jones.

Crescents added another in the fourth, Marchen went out at first, Delahaye dropping the third strike. Corbett got a hit down short, and made second on Cameron's high peg. Masterson fanned. LeBarr hit into right, and when the return peg should have stopped Corbett coming in from third, Wood made a high heave to Nicholls and the run scored. LeBarr who had kept on going tried to get home also but dodged off the line to escape being tagged and was called out.

Raybestos came along fast in the sixth with one down. Oscar Nicholls doubled and was hit home by Delahaye. The latter just missed going out at second by a nice slide, on a play off the return peg. He stole third and was hit home by Corrin. Nicholls singled over short and Wood was hit, filling the bags. Ranger saved the day by taking Cameron's foul fly to end the frame. It was a nice catch on a hard chance.

SOFTBALL

On Monday night the Sporting Girls went to Lang and there played the Sixth Line Girls or Otonabee a friendly game of softball. The Sixth Line Girls won the game, 18 to 16. The game was a good exhibition of softball, and was very close as the score indicates. The trip down did not help the playing of the Sporting Girls, as they were chilled through with the cold wind on the Twelfth, and it took them the first four innings to get warmed up.

The line-up and score was:

Sporting Girls—Naish, c; Johnson p; Jay, 1b; Clarke, 2b; Muir, 3b; Ferguson, ss; Edwards, mf; Connors, lf; Cranon, rf; Halliday, c; Abbott, p.

Fielder drops a fly ball but manages to recover same in time to force a runner at another base. How is the play scored?

* * *

The fielder is not charged with an error, even though his muff of the ball enabled the batsman to reach first base.

When a fielder after muffing a fly ball, is fortunate enough to force a runner at another base, he is given credit for having erased the costliness of his error.

The play is simply scored as a "force-out." The fielder who dropped the fly ball is credited with an assist, while the fielder who completed the force-play gets the put out.

International Board Meeting.

The International Football Association Board met in the Grand Hotel, St. Andrews, Scotland, today. Mr. Robert Campbell, vice-president of the Scottish Football Association, was in the chair.

The following representatives were present: England—W. Pickford and J. M'Kenna. Scotland — Robert Campbell and T. Steen. Wales—T. E. Thomas and A. Thomas. Ireland—J. M. Small and J. Ferguson.

The proposals of the Scottish Football Association to alter the penalty law were withdrawn.

The Throw-In.

When the ball is in touch, a player of the opposite side to that which played it out shall throw it in from the point on the touch-line where it left the field of play (touch is that part of the ground on either side of the field). The player throwing the ball must stand outside the touch-line facing the field of play, and shall throw the ball in OVER HIS HEAD with both hands in any direction, and it shall be in play when thrown in. A goal shall NOT be scored from a throw-in, and the thrower shall not again play until the ball has been played by another player.

The linesman should point with his flag to the place where the ball went into touch and stand a little behind the thrower to WATCH the throw-in. If the player does not throw the ball in properly, the Referee will give a free kick. An improper throw-in would be one delivered over the shoulder, or with one hand giving the impetus and the other merely guiding the ball, or if the thrower has not some part of both feet outside the touch line at the moment of throwing, or if the thrower merely dropped the ball and did not throw it. A player throwing in the ball MUST FACE the field of play.

Let the LINESMAN GIVE HIS DECISION. All the claiming in the world will not alter it, unless the referee shall see fit to interfere.

THEATRE AT THE REGENT

"THE PLEASURE BUYERS"

Reckless, daring and heartless, Gene Cassenas leads a mad, wild pace through riotous pleasures, crushing here a rose, there a quivering butterfly, and leaving sorrow where he has trod. His life has made him many enemies, and one tragic morning he is found dead, a bullet through his heart. The shot had been fired through a window as he sat in his study. Who killed him? Was it his fiancee or her father? His wronged servant, or the boy he had driven to desperation? Or could the frail hand of Joan Wiswell have struck the fatal blow? Or was it Terry, the man whom Cassenas had betrayed and sent to prison?

"The Pleasure Buyers" comes to the Regent Theatre today for a run of two days.

Tense, powerful and thrilling, it is one of the most fascinating and baffling mystery stories ever screened. Irene Rich is the star, and the cast includes Clive Brook, Gayne Whitman, June Marlowe, Heinie Conklin

SECRETS OF STARS INSIDE BASEBALL

By Billy Evans

BY ROGERS HORNSBY
Champion Batsman—National League.

I am often asked to give the formula that has made possible my batting success in the National League. Such a thing, is of course, impossible.

Love of the game, a keen delight in hitting the ball and plenty of effort and practice have been three great helps. Nature, however, gave me the basis for my batting success a good eye, a broad pair of shoulders, plus co-ordination.

It has always been a pet theory with me that the properly-timed, perfectly-hit ball is the one that travels directly through the pitcher's box, either on the ground or in the air.

In golf, when a player hits the ball perfectly, it carries straight down the fairway. It goes to his right if he slices, to his left if he hooks.

I have always felt that the same thing holds good for baseball. It is possible to hit the ball hard to either right or left field and do just as much damage as when it goes to center, but it is my thought that perfect timing and contact must send the ball to center field.

That being my pet theory, I follow it religiously. I try to hit every ball in batting practice directly back at the pitcher. In the game I am not quite so particular. But I figure that such practice makes for perfection and results in actual competition.

Incidentally such a practice is a tonic for the eye, since it is hard to hit any ball other than a well-pitched one through the box. It tends to make the batter pick his ball rather than swing haphazardly.

I recommend the stunt of trying to hit every ball pitched in batting practice directly back at the pitcher. It is sure to improve your hitting.

HELPFUL HINTS BY GOLFING STARS

By Special Arrangement With Colliers' Magazine.

JOHN DUNCAN DUNN LEARNING WHY.

The man looking on can tell you more about your form than you can yourself. But even if your instructor is the best one in the world, you are entitled to a diagnosis of your fault and the diagnosis has to be one that appeals to your common sense. There must be a reason why. It is peculiarly an American trait to want to get a reason for a thing.

It is human nature to copy eccentricities before one will copy the things that are worth while. Everybody is looking for a panacea. There is no such thing in golf, unless it be hard work. If you can think it is not hard work and get some enjoyment out of practicing, then you will improve that much faster.

Therefore, in practicing your short game, try to make it as interesting as possible. If you can practice a 130-yard approach over a ravine onto a putting-green, make a game of seeing how many balls you can make stop on the green. Above all, don't get discouraged.

It pays to be natural. Recapitulate your faults after you have cured them and see that you have not overcured them.

HOLLYWOOD.—One of Myrtle Stedman's innumerable admirers recently suggested "The Actress Who Is Growing Old Gracefully" as the title for an interview with this charming matron of the screen. Half a dozen scriveners immediately dashed off stories with that as the pivotal theme.

Now "gracefully" I concede, but "growing old" I will not be party to spreading across the film fan world. How old she is I do not know. It's immaterial. Certainly Miss Stedman's buoyant spirit and gentle graces, genuine and glowing, rather than years, connote her age.

That's Her Son!

Perhaps a woman who proudly introduces a young man as her son, Lincoln Stedman, and a woman whose picture career goes back to the days of the old Selig Company, should make some conventional concessions to her years.

But Miss Stedman doesn't recognize the necessity. Nor have her screen appearances hinted at more than a rich and alluring maturity from her memorable roles in "The Silver Horde," "The Valley of the Moon," and "Pee Gynt," to her latest impersonations.

She is endowed with one of those radiant blond souls which more truly complexion the personality than any exterior coloring: a source of youth, friendliness, magnetism which she reveals in all her professional or social contacts.

She never "turns actress" on friend or associate.

Trouble—and she has had plenty—has not ruffled her.

Pose, affectation, she is too self secure to need. She is, in a word, of the finest caliber to be found in her profession.

She Is Different.

From which it may be gathered that this writer wears his admiration for Myrtle Stedman on his sleeve. So be it. She stands forth so refreshingly from many of her screen sisterhood.

It is her native and amiable honesty which have given her impersonation their absorbing quality of validity It is her realization, without either false vanity or modesty, that she blends the admirable qualities of normal, mature womanhood which have guided her domestic and stage life to fine achievement.

If present plans do not go awry she may soon be seen in "The Ruined Lady," a role which she enthusiastically covets.

machinery was put out of commission and they were unable to keep this frozen.

Mr. Dutton said that in the past his firm had received splendid service and that they had installed a double switch so that if the power went off on one line they could get it from another. But recently the whole power has been cut off. In the baking business everything works on schedule time for they are working with living organisms and a five minute shut down will throw everything over on the wrong side.

R. L. Dobbin, the commission engineer, stated that the cause of Friday night's and Monday's cut offs was outside of the city at the Auburn power house, where the commission has no control and caused by a switch there that has been giving much trouble of late.

Chairman E. F. Mason said he had written Mr. Smith, the director of this district, complaining of these cut offs but had received no answer.

Mr. Bradburn thought it was the duty of the commission to take the matter up immediately with head quarters and suggested that Mr. Jeffries be gotten in touch with in regard to the matter. This suggestion will be acted upon immediately.

To Move Hydrant

J. J. Duffus wrote asking the commission to move a hydrant that was in front of the new service station which he is building and it was decided that the matter would be taken up with Alderman Turner and the fire chief as to a suitable place. Mr. Duffus is to pay all the expenses of the moving.

A change was made in the manner in which the city schools are to be charged for the water they use. The public schools are grouped together as one consumer and the separate schools as a second.

George Henderson, the accountant, was instructed to get prices on the electrical appliance stock which the commission is holding for sale in its office so that it can be disposed of immediately.

LAST TRIBUTE TO OLD THEATRE

TO BE TORN DOWN.

The last ringing down of the curtain of the historic Academy of Music, New York, has taken place. In its stead, a huge, modern office building will stand. Within the square, brown bulk of this famous old theatre at 4th and Irving Place, fifteen hundred men and women gathered to pay homage and bid farewell to a building, which through time and modern development, has passed beyond its usefulness.

Possibly the most widely heralded entertainment taking place at the Academy of Music occurred October 12, 1860, when a false floor was built over the parquet to accommodate the three thousand guests who attended the ball given for the Prince of Wales; later, King Edward VII. It was in this theatre, under the management of P. T. Barnum (afterdate three thousand guests who at-Lind appeared, making a triumphal success through her singing of "Home Sweet Home." It was on this same stage that Adelina Patti repeated this unaging, yet very old song, and to those gathered to bid adieu to this historical old structure, Mme. Frances Alda rendered this world-wide known melody.

In the early eighteen fifties, a group of men discussed in a New York club the need for a new opera house. In ten minutes, $200,000 were subscribed. On October 2, 1854, the Grisi and Mario Opera Company presented "Norma" on the Academy stage. The following names are some of the then world-famous artists who appeared as soloists in the operas produced: Steffanone, Vestavilli, Brignoli, Amodio, Trizzolini, Torriani, Campanini, Mannetti. Scolara, Marconi, Tetrazzini, Nilsson, Hauck, Patti, Gadski, Juck, Emma Thursby and Robertson.

At the time this theatre was built 14th Street was considered "way uptown." The fashionables drove up from their Spring and Broome Street homes with Irish coachmen snapping long whips over the flanks of greys and chestnuts, drawing handsome vehicles out of which Grand Dames, in rustling crinoline stepped to enter the doors of this opera house. The Academy site was part of the old Peter Stuyvesant farm. This was when Times Square was "way up in the country" and electric surface and subway cars were undreamed of.

In receiving the people who entered the Academy to see the last lowering of its great, green curtain, George B. Cortelyou, president of the gas company, taking over this reconstruction, acted as host. As closely as possible he revived the surroundings of a half a century ago. Within the doors were young women in hoop skirts and crinoline. After the New York Symphony had played a selection from "Norma," which opened the Academy, and after Mr. Cortelyou had paid his tribute to memories, the young ushers in crinoline entered the boxes. Peering over the gilt rails the young women with their low-cut bodices and demure coiffures brought back to the boxes something of the flavor they must have had when "La Juive" was sung, "Most positively the last night but two,' as the old posters advertised. Otis Skinner talked in a genial way of his youthful memories of the Academy. Miss Emma Thursby, who sang first from this stage as a coloratura soprano, sat in a wheel chair in one of the plush and gold boxes. She expressed herself as being "terribly excited", and stated she had not been in the Academy for twenty years. As the program ended, a crowd of elderly people stepped out of the past into the shouting noisy bustles of today 14th Street as Irving Place.

UNCLE WIGGILY

Today's Bedtime Story

By Howard R. Garis

UNCLE WIGGILY'S TAFFY DROPS

Copyright, 1926, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
(By Howard R. Garis.)

"Where is the sugar, Nurse Jane?" asked Uncle Wiggily one day as he hopped out into the kitchen of the hollow stump bungalow where the muskrat lady housekeeper was giving the breakfast dishes their morning bath.

"What do you want of the sugar?" asked Nurse Jane. "If it's a little red ant lady who has come to borrow some, I'll give it to her."

"No, I want it for myself," explained Mr. Longears. "Also please tell me where you keep the molasses jug."

"Oh, I'm sure Mr. Stubtail, the gentleman bear, must be outside," laughed Nurse Jane. "Otherwise you wouldn't be wanting so much sweet stuff."

"No, Mr. Stubtail isn't here at all!" answered Uncle Wiggily. "I just want the sugar and molasses for myself."

"What a sweet tooth you must have!" squealed the muskrat lady.

"Oh, not so much," answered the bunny. "It's for the animal children who are playing on the beach of the ocean I made out of the duck pond. They say it won't seem a bit like the seashore unless they have taffy drops."

"What are taffy drops?" asked Nurse Jane.

"Some sort of candy I make by boiling sugar and molasses together," answered Mr. Longears. "It is very good—I'll give you some, for I know you like sweets."

"Indeed I do!" chuckled Nurse Jane. So she gave the rabbit gentleman the sugar and molasses, and soon Uncle Wiggily was boiling something in a camp fire kettle on the beach.

Mr. Longears had made a little ocean by putting a lot of salt in the duck pond. And Old Mr. Mucker, the mud turtle, by bobbing his broad back of shell up and down caused waves to slosh around on shore. So Uncle Wiggily and his friends had a little sea-shore of their own in the cool, shady woods.

But some of the animal boys and girls had said:

"It doesn't seem like the seashore without salt water taffy!"

"I'll make you some taffy drops which are just as good," offered Uncle Wiggily, and now he was doing it. As the wonderful smell came from the boiling, sweet kettle, Jackie and Peetie Bow Wow and Johnnie and Billie Bushytail and many other animal boys and girls crowded around murmuring:

"Oh, how we love taffy drops!"

When the sugar and molasses had boiled enough so that it was ready to turn into candy, Uncle Wiggily set out some tin pans, with butter on the bottom, so when he cooled the taffy drops they wouldn't stick.

"How soon before we can eat any?" asked Baby Bunty, hopping around on one leg because she was so excited.

"It will be ready in a minute or two," answered the bunny uncle.

He dropped little chunky gobs of sweetness on the greased pan. The smell was more delicious, now, than ever. The animal children sniffed hungrily.

"Everybody must go in for a swim until my taffy drops cool," said Uncle Wiggily. "When you come out from bathing, you may eat them!"

With a shout of delight the animal boys and girls plunged into the duck pond ocean and splashed about, while the turtle gentleman bobbed up and down, making waves. Uncle Wiggily went in swimming, also, and after a while he hopped out, calling:

"The taffy drops are ready, now!" But as he hurried up the beach to take the candy from the tin, and pass the drops among the boys and girls, all of a sudden, Baby Bunty cried:

"There goes the Fox! He's going to get our candy!" The Fox was leaping toward the tin of taffy which had been set in the shade on a big rock to cool.

The bad chap was just going to eat the taffy drops, which were now cool, when all of a sudden Baby Bunty took her rubber ball, filled it with salt water and then the little rabbit girl squirted it at the Fox. In his eyes went the salty water, and in his nose.

"Oh, glubbity dub bub!" howled the Fox, and away he ran not getting even a teeny, weeny smitch of candy. So there were plenty of taffy drops for Uncle Wiggily, Nurse Jane and the animal children, who had a happy time.

And if the big bee doesn't stumble when he tries to bumble, I'll tell you next about Uncle Wiggily's popcorn balls.

IN POLICE COURT.

Three employees at the depot of the Canadian Pacific Railway pleaded guilty to a charge of stealing a quantity of beer, the property of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The beer, it is said, came through to Peterborough consigned as ordinary merchandise.

J. F. Strickland, who appeared for all the accused, asked for suspended sentence as, he said, the men were being dealt with drastically by the railway company.

His Worship stated that he would remand all the accused until Friday for sentence. Bail was set at $500 in each case.

James Davis, a resident of Burleigh Township, pleaded guilty to a charge of entering a shanty at a lumber camp and stealing therefrom a fur robe and a mackinaw coat. The offence was committed last December, but as the accused was in a camp th arrest did not take place until yesterday. The accused stated that he was cold at the time he took the goods, but when asked could not give a satisfactory reason for not returning them.

Provincial Constable Maker stated that he searched the house of accused two days after the theft and had recovered the robe but was unable to find the coat, as the accused had worn it when he left for the woods.

A man and a woman, both from North Monaghan, appeared on charges of vagrancy.

The man, who pleaded guilty was remanded until Friday, and the woman who did not elect to plead was remanded at the request of Provincial Constable N. F. Maker, who made both arrests.

A local man pleaded guilty to a charge of being intoxicated in a public place. He said that he had been in Lindsay and had had a few drinks of beer. He stayed in Lindsay overnight and left there yesterday morning intending to go to Port Hope.

Evidently he repented his decision for he changed his mind at Millbrook, he said, and came to Peterborough. He admitted that he had consumed the best part of a bottle of rubbing alcohol that was found on his person when he was arrested.

Magistrate O. A. Langley, in fining the accused $10 and costs, told him he ought to be thankful that he was still alive.

ANNUAL SOCIAL WELL ATTENDED

Sacred Heart Church Social Was Very Successful Event.

RANGERS BAND.

Notwithstanding the cool weather of last evening, the annual social of the Sacred Heart Church, held on the grounds adjoining the church, was a very successful event, and was attended by a large crowd of people, the majority of whom partook of the excellent supper served within an enclosure, at long, white-clothed tables. The grounds were illuminated as usual with many overhead rows of electric lights, and there was a frame of orange-colored globes on the pretty little blue and white booth, decorated with big bowls of daisies, where candy and homemade cooking were sold. Japanese lanterns and pennants also formed decorations of the two big stands purveying soft drinks, cigars and ice cream. The Fish pond and the "Kill the Cat" game were centres of attraction, and there was plenty of patronage for the fancy wear booth, where a big crowd gathered during the evening.

The band of the Peterborough Rangers played splendidly, with an appreciative throng of listeners. Everyone appeared to be having a real good time, from the senior members to the little boys, one of whom chanted the following jingle at intervals:

THERE ARE SOUNDS FOLKS NEVER HEAR

Insects Talk in Shrill Noises Beyond Range Humans.

In church, while the organ is playing, have you ever felt the pew you are sitting in, and the floor beneath your feet begin to tremble with a mysterious sort of rumbling that seems to come from nowhere? Perhaps, a bit startled, you have looked around apprehensively at the walls and ceilings. Then, in a moment, you have realized that the source of the strange rumbling is within the church itself—somewhere among the pipes of the playing organ.

What you may not have known, however, is that the vibrations which shake the objects about you are nothing more or less than sounds. They are really part of the church music; the deepest notes of the organ. Yet so low are they pitched that while your body can feel them as vibrations your ears cannot hear them at all.

In fact, says the August Popular Science Monthly, all about you, in the noise and hubbub of modern life, the air is full of sounds that you cannot hear. Just as there are notes so low that your ears cannot catch them, others are so shrill that you are hopelessly deaf to them. Countless creatures may be conversing in shrill languages that you never have heard. Many scientists believe that some animals, like the bat, and many insects, can hear tones so shrill that they are forever inaudible to human beings. Certainly there are insects which have apparatus apparently adapted for producing such tones. It is quite possible that these creatures can talk to each other continually in sounds to which we are hopelessly deaf. It is possible, too, that some day we may find a way to repel or attract insects by inaudible waves. Thus, we might set up silent noise machines to keep mosquitoes or flies away from our houses. On the other hand, if we could find a noise that harmful insects liked we might play this siren song for them and draw them into traps.

ANNIVERSARY OF GOLDEN WEDDING

Mr. and Mrs. M. T. Butcher Celebrate Happy Day.

To-day, Mr. and Mrs. Mark T. Butcher, 350 Water Street, celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the day on which they were married. It was just half a century ago that Mark Butcher and Mary Jane Wills were married, in the town of Mitchell, Ontario, where the bride's parents, natives of the Isle of Wight, had come to live after a few years spent in Toronto, London and Montreal.

Mrs. Butcher was brought to Canada when one year old, so she may be regarded as almost a native of the Dominion, like her husband, who was born in Prince Edward Island, where his parents remained until he was fourteen years old. Then they removed to Peterborough, so that Mr. Butcher can remember the town almost sixty years ago, when the old Hill Music Hall was directly across the Market Square, on the spot now occupied by the Neill Shoe Store, and when people in the spring time were compelled to take boats at what is now Sherbrooke Street, to get across the intervening swamp to the section now known as the south end of the city.

Some years later, Mr. Butcher's parents went to live in Stratford and then to Mitchell, where he was married. Four years afterwards, he and his wife came back to Peterborough, where they have lived ever since, for a space of about forty-six years, during which time the city has changed and expanded from year to year. Here Mr. Butcher has been in business almost continuously, and here their nine children were born. Six are dead, five dying in infancy, another, Miss Olive, dying about two years ago. Of the three remaining children, one, William, lives on Wolsley Street, another, Charles, who is at home at present on a visit, at Kincaid, Saskatchewan, and the third, Mrs. James Campbell, wife of Captain James Campbell, at Gravenhurst. There are ten grandchildren.

Mrs. Butcher, who is over seventy years of age, is as hale and hearty as her husband, who will be seventy-two years old in October. She is bright and active, does all her own housework and sewing, and was busily engaged in putting up fruit on the morning of her golden anniversary. She also teaches a class in the Free Methodist Church, of which she is a devout member.

Mr. Butcher, who has none of the marks of age, whose kindly black eyes are keen, and whose black beard is only faintly touched with grey, is also keenly interested in religious matters, holding some individual ideas along these lines, and also has a little garden at his home at Smith and Stewart Streets. Both had parents who lived to a good old age, Mr. Butcher's father reaching the ripe age of ninety-six years, while Mrs. Butcher's father lived to be ninety and his wife eighty-seven.

KILLED BY AUTO.

Lady Killed While Returning From Church Party. Will Be Inquest.

BELMONT, Ont., July 14.—Suffering from serious extenal and internal injuries, received when she was struck as she was walking home from a garden party at Salem University Church, Derwent, at midnight by an automobile whose driver was temporarily blinded by the headlights of an approaching car, Miss Theresa Manning, aged about 60, died yesterday at her home north of here. An inquest will be held into the cause of the fatality.

Miss Manning, who was quite deaf, failed to notice the car approaching from the rear as she stepped to one side of the road to avoid the automobile. In the accident that followed her leg was broken, her jaw was fractured, an ear was torn off, added to which she suffered internal injuries. She was removed to her home, not far distant, but death ensued several hours after the accident.

Wheat Has Sharp Advance Values Gain High Level.

CHICAGO, July 14 (Canadian Press)—Fresh advances in price of wheat today quickly sent market much above yesterday's top figures. High temperatures in Canada were attracting sharp attention, and the general run of crop reports from northwest were unfavorable. Starting at 5-8c off to 1-4c up wheat wavered little but soon scored decided general gains. Corn and oats showed some tendency to lag, corn opening 1-4c to 1 1-4c lower but later turned up grade. Provisions were firm.

International Nickle Has Heavy Lead at Toronto.

TORONTO, July 14 (Canadian Press)—International Nickle was by far the outstanding feature both in strength and activity on Toronto Stock Exchange today. It registered net gain of 1 1-2 points for session closing at 38 1-4 after touching high of 38 3-8c.

Drivers in the collieries walked out when they were refused a local contract. The miners were attempting to haul coal to the surface in an effort to keep the mines going.

TWO MEN EXECUTED IN VANCOUVER JAIL

Last Minute Efforts Fail To Obtain Reprieve. Professed Innocence.

VANCOUVER, July 14 (Canadian Press).—Benito Pasquale, aged 50, Porto Rican, and Alexander de Bortoli, Italian, were executed on the the gallows at Oakalla Prison here this morning. Last minute efforts to get the sentences reprieved failed. The men were sentenced to death for the murder of two women.

The men started their death march at one minute after four o'clock and a minute and one-half later life was pronounced extinct. There was no hitch in the grim proceedings.

Right up to the last minute Debortoli, professed his innocence. "Goodbye, everybody," he called in a clear voice just as Arthur Ellis, official hangman, released the trap. Pasquale walked to his death without a word, and seemed unconcerned over the proceedings.

Pasquale paid the death penalty for the murder of Miss Ann Roedde on December 2, 1925. The girl was a member of the General Hospital nursing staff, and it was while visiting a friend that he committed the crime. The murder was most brutal, Pasquale slashing the nurse's throat and almost severing the head from the body. He also slashed his own throat, but recovered.

De Bortoli was found guilty of stabbing Miss Pearl Traversey following a quarrel in a cabin near Hogan's Valley, Vancouver, on November 26 last.

Miner's Executive Meets with Church Officials to Consider Situation.

LONDON, July 14 (Canadian Press).—The executive committee of the British Miners' Federation began a series of conference to-day which have stirred unusual interest because of the reports that a possible move move for peace in the coal dispute may be forthcoming. Although the first session this morning ended without developments toward peace, considerable speculation has been aroused by the announcement that the executive committee will meet this evening with the Archbishop of Canterbury and representatives of the churches to consider the situation.

OVER 200 FIRES CONTINUE SWEEP OF NORTHWEST

Nine Deaths Reported During the Last Five Days.

NO RELIEF IN SIGHT.

Conflagration in B. C. Was Nine Miles Long and Two Miles Wide.

SEATTLE, W., July 15 (Canadian Press).—With nine deaths entered against it, the reign of fire, heat and lightning in the Pacific northwest continued last night.

Two women and two children were burned to death Tuesday when a forest fire trapped a motor car between Banff, Alta., and Windermere, B.C. The dead were Mrs. Leslie Watt and her two children, and Mrs. Clifford Nesbitt. Five other deaths have been reported in the last five days.

No relief was seen here yesterday from an epidemic of forest fires. Humidity remained low and temperatures high.

A fire that on Monday destroyed a logging camp at Lewis Lake, near Stillwater, was reported the severest in British Columbia last night. It had covered an area nine miles long and two miles wide.

In the Couer d'Alene section of Northern Idaho, fifty fires were started by lightning. Sixty men were sent from Spokane, Wash., and Missoula, Mont., to fight 165 blazes in the Blackfeet National Forest.

Forty forest fires were started by lightning in the Colville National Forest in north-eastern Washington, and only four were reported under control. Trails in the Mt. Baker National Forest near Bellingham, 100 miles north of here, were closed to the public.

Advices from Missoula, Mont., said that after electrical storms on Tuesday night, the Kanisku Forest yesterday was a mass of flames in the region north of the state.

Major Blair, Vancouver and Q.M.S. Parnell, Verdun, Que., Each Total 102.

105 IS POSSIBLE.

BISLEY CAMP, Eng., July 15 (Canadian Press Cable).—Major R. M. Blair of Vancouver and Q.-M.-S. Parnell of Verdun, Que., each scored 102 out of a possible 105 in the first stage of the famous King's prize, shot at Bisley yesterday, which was the highest score made by any of the more than 900 marksmen from all parts of the Empire competing. The two Canadians will shoot off with ten other marksmen for the Bronze Medal, awarded to the highest scorer in the first stage.

Eleven Canadians altogether had scores of 96 and better, earning the right to shoot in the second stage on Friday. Three others, Pte. J. Houlden, Hamilton; Major C. R. Crowe of Guelph, team commandant, and Capt. Alex. Martin of Calgary will have to shoot off with 64 other marksmen who, like themselves, had an aggregate of 95 points.

Progress Identically.

Major Blair and Q.-M.-S. Parnell progressed identically in the three ranges, 200, 500 and 600 yards. Each shot 34 out of 35 at the first, and each scored a possible 35 at the 500 yard distance. Each had a 33 at the longest range.

Besides the two possibles recorded by the bronze medal finalists, Sgt. J. Borland of Toronto and Major L. I. Johnson of Ottawa scored possibles, also at the second range. No possibles were made by Canadians either at the first or third distances.

Scores of 100 were made by Major Johnson, Sgt. G. Emslie of Toronto and Major F. Richardson of Victoria, B.C.

Eleven Canadians Qualify.

The eleven Canadians certain of places in the second stage, comparing with the six Canadians progressing this far last year, are: Major H. M. Blair, Q.-M.-S. Parnell, Sgt. Borland, Major Johnson, Sgt. Emslie, Major Richardson, Corp. H. W. Burton of Victoria, Pte. J. H. Regan of Edmonton, Lt. J. T. Steele of Guelph, Sgt. D. Fyvie of Victoria and Sgt. K. R. McGregor of Ottawa.

Lieut. Desmond Burke's score of 94 was the same as last year in the first stage, when he was eliminated. He scored 29 at the 200 yard distance yesterday, following with 34 at 500 yards, but dropped to 31 at the last distance.

Heat Makes Judge Discard Wig, Gown and Waistcoat

LONDON, July 15 (Canadian Press).—The thermometer in London yesterday stood at 85 degrees fahrenheit, and Canadian tourists, accustomed to much higher temperatures, gazed with amusement at the sweltering London crowds.

It was the hottest day recorded in London this year, and an East London judge shocked those assembled in his court by discarding his wig, gown and waistcoat.

In Glasgow, where the temperature reached 86 degrees, almost unprecedented, the chief astonished the staid court officials by removing his wig and gown and tossing them on a bench before him.

DRAYTON MAY GET WASHINGTON POST

OTTAWA, July 15 Canadian Press—While the fact that Sir Henry Drayton was not given a portfolio in the new Meighen government has aroused much conjecture, Sir Henry declares himself absolutely satisfied with the arrangement.

Sir Henry pointed out that he preferred not to have charge of the administration of the department particularly as he was to be acting premier during the election campaign.

This may mean that he will be in charge at Otttawa for a considerable time.

Rumour connects Sir Henry with the office of Canadian High Commissioner in London or Canadian representative at Washington, in the event of the Meighen government being sustained at the polls.

It has also been suggested that he will take over the Department of Railways alter a time.

Crooked Votes Helped to Elect Liberal Chief in Prince Albert States New Minister of Defence

CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION RAISED TO SIDE-TRACK ISSUE SAYS GUTHRIE

Convicted Criminals and Bootleggers, He Declares, Were Set By Customs Department To Prevent Smuggling Over the Border—One of Appointees Was Man Over Eighty Years Old.

RENFREW, Ont., July 15 (Canadian Press) — "Knowing that he could not survive the Customs scandals, Mackenzie King thought he could distract the people's attention, hence the attack on the King's representative," declared Hon. Hugh Guthrie Minister of Defence yesterday, at a meeting of the Conservative organizatian of South Renfrew which nominated Dr. M. J. Maloney member of the last Parliament from the riding.

The Minister of Defence described the revelations of the customs inquiry as the most gigantic political scandal in the history of Canada. The King Government, he said, had been condemned in Parliament for mismanagement and corruption of the Customs department and for the shielding and protecting of criminals, bootleggers, smugglers and thugs.

Mackenzie King had asked Parliament for $300,000 to fight smuggling but he appointed political heelers some of them rum runners who had been convicted, to watch smugglers. One of his appointees was a man 84 years old. More than that said Mr. Guthrie, he allowed Bisaillon and Clerk, "the arch plotters of the smuggling gang," to remain on although he knew they were the ringleaders.

Horrible Revelations

Mr. Guthrie said that inspector Duncan had been sent to Montreal last December armed with full authority. "I can't describe the horrible revelations before a mixed audience," exclaimed the speaker. He pointed out that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police had been taken off border points in Quebec by Hon. Jacques Bureau.

"The King govenment granted full protection to the whole ring," he stated. "Do you wonder why Mackenzie King wanted dissolution instead of being indicted? The criminals that have been protected and the iniquities that have been winked at are the blackest things in the history of Canada."

Mr. Guthrie said that on Tuesday while acting-minister of justice he had received a petition for the release from penitentiary of "Baldy" Robb, who had been sentenced to five years for stuffing ballot boxes in the Peace River election. He charged that the Conservative party had been robbed of the election last fall by crooked election officials taking as his cases Athabasca and Peace River.

King's Votes

Mackenzie King's election in Prince Albert was touched upon by the speaker who declared that the former premier had received the full voting strength of polls although in practically every one of them there were voters who had voted who were dead and away from the district.

"They won't operate this election," he exclaimed. "We will see that

LADY LIBERALS ENTERTAIN AT ANNUAL PICNIC

Several Speakers Laud Work of Women in Peterborough Riding.

JACKSON PARK.

Hon. G. N. Gordon Tells of Personnel of New Cabinet.

The combined business meeting and annual picnic of the Ladies' Liberal Club of the city, held yesterday afternoon at Jackson Park, was very successful, and was well attended. Ladies to the number of about fifty were present, also between fifteen and twenty children. An al fresco supper of home-made goodies was followed by a brief business meeting, presided over by the president of the club, Miss Luella Jobbitt. Guests of the ladies were Hon. G. N. Gordon, K.C.; J. J. Hartley, and John Dewart. An energetic committee in charge of refreshments included Mrs. F. Whitehouse, Mrs. H. S. MacDuffee, Mrs. B. F. McNeely, Mrs. A. H. Fielder, Mrs. P. J. Doris, Miss L. Jobbitt, Miss M. F. Maloney, and Miss R. Hardwicke.

Brief speeches with regard to the political situation were made by Hon. Mr. Gordon, Mr. Hartley and Mr. Dewart. Mr. Gordon referred to past activities of several of the members of Mr. Meighen's cabinet and supporters. With regard to Hon. E. B. Ryckman, newly-appointed Minister of Public Works, he spoke of his partnership some time ago with a racetrack gambler, Todd Sloan, and of the remarks of Mr. Justice Lennox, at the time when Mr. Sloan sued Mr. Ryckman for his share of gambling profits, when the judge said that, in any conflict between the testimony of the two, he would accept that of Mr. Sloan in preference to that of Mr. Ryckman.

Of DeWitt Foster, Mr. Gordon said that, when this gentleman rose to make speeches in the House, he was usually greeted with cries of "Whoa!" because of his connection with grafting in horse sales during the war. One horse sold to the Government during the war, said Mr. Gordon, for which Mr. Foster charged the sum of $120, had been purchased previously for an exchange of two ducks and a drake. Mr. Foster had been read out of the party by Sir Robert Borden, as had been Mr. Garland, who had received profits of $8,000, through a dummy clerk, by the sale of bandages during nine weeks, to the Government.

R. B. Hanson, a lawyer of St. John, N.B., had been found guilty of forging a judgment of the Court and his license to practice law had been taken away from him by the New Brunswick government.

Mr. Gordon went on to speak of the action of E. A. Peck, M.P., in voting against the recent budget, against penny postage and against a reduction in income tax.

"Lord Byng," said Mr. Gordon, "our Governor-General, had an outstanding position in the war, which was the envy of all. He holds much the same position in Canada as the King does in England, but he should have no policy and no politics. He should take the advice of those who are carrying on the government of the country. Mr. Meighen led the Governor-General into a trap by asserting that he would have the support of the Progressives, who, instead of assisting him, voted against him only sixty-five hours after he assumed the reins of leadership."

Mr. Gordon referred to the last defeat of the Liberals in this riding as resulting, possibly, from a sense of sureness engendered by their former victories. He accepted a cer-

Proprietor Decides To Stop Sunday Night Cafe Dancing

TORONTO, July 15 (Canadian Press).—The Sunday dancing problem which has caused so much concern to some citizens of Niagara Falls, Ontario, and which resulted in the Attorney-General taking an interest in the matter has been amicably adjusted, according to Hon. W. F. Nickle, who announced, following an interview with the proprietor of the cafe where dancing took place, that it had been decided to stop dancing on Sunday nights.

Bishop Expresses Hope That Faiths May Be United

NEW YORK, July 15 (United News).—Hope for the fusion of the Protestant and Catholic faiths into a single creed was expressed by Bishop Williams T. Manning of the New York Diocese of the Episcopal Church as he sailed for Europe on the Cunarder Berengaria.

He will attend a meeting of the continuation committee at Berne, Switzerland, August 23 to 25. That organization is planning a "Faith and Order" world conference at Tausanne in August, 1927, which Dr. Manning hopes will result in the unity of all Christians.

"We hope in time it will lead to complete unity," he said. Dr. Manning also discoursed on the "jazz age." He thought the world was improving morally, and that the peak of the jazz age has been reached. As for smoking and drinking by young women and girls, Mr. Manning intimated those habits of "fads" were simply part of the "jazz" period, which "is righting itself."

CONVENTION DATES ARE NOT YET SET

Peterborough Leaders Admit Conferences Have Taken Place in Parties.

No definite dates have been set for conventions by either the Liberal or the Liberal-Conservative organizations, although enquiries revealed that meetings had been held in each camp.

The Hon. G. N. Gordon said there had been a conference of a number of the Liberal men and women, but as yet no date had been set for the convention. Mr. Gordon added that they expected to have the Rt. Hon. Mackenzie King here for a picnic and if at all possible they would have the convention on the same date.

E. A. Peck, ex-M.P., stated that the Conservatives had held an executive meeting but as yet they had decided on no definite date for the party convention.

French Franc Takes Drop Bank Advances Become Low

PARIS, July 15. Canadian Press.—The French franc, which has long been dropping, to-day reached a new low record, being quoted officially at the closing of the Bourse at 40.68 to the dollar and 197.19 to the pound.

To-day's slump is attributed to the sudden realiation by financiers that the last statement of the Bank of France, reveals tah: there is only 50,000,000 francs left for advances to the state unless the present legal limit be broken.

The Bank of France's weekly statement shows that the state has borrowed another 100,000,000 francs in addition to the 350,000,000 borrowed last week.

In view of Finance Minister Caillaux's previous statement in the Chamber of Deputies that the state was within 500,000,000 francs of the legal limit of the bank's advances, the narrow margin still available had a depressing effect.

BRITISH PREMIER ANNOUNCES DATE

Forthcoming Imperial Conference To Be Held on Oct. 5.

LONDON, July 15 (Canadian Press).—Premier Stanley Baldwin told the House of Commons to-day that the proposed date of the forthcoming imperial conference was October 5.

Questioned regarding the subjects to be discussed at the conference, he said it had been agreed that the work should include a general review of the policy of defence and questions arising from it. The conference also would consider development of systems of communications and solicitations between the Government of the Empire on matters of common concern.

Premier Baldwin said that the following would be the chief econmic questions on the agenda of the conference:

1.—Overseas settlement.

2.—General view of inter-imperial trade, present and future, including a discussion of the work of the imperial economic committee and position of Empire marketing board.

3.—Imperial communications, including work of imperial shipping committee and discussion of question of commercial air service.

4.—Research.

6.—Question of securing an agreement regarding liability of State enterprises to taxation.

Dr. L. H. Guest, Labor member, asked whether there would be any opportunity for representation of "Opposition" opinion as well as "Government" opinion at the conference, in view of the circumstances in South Africa, Canada and this country.

Premier Baldwin replied that the only difficulty regarding Opposition representation was that the imperial conference had always been a conference of Governments. No provision had been made for the official representation of Oppositions either in the Dominions or in the country convening the conference.

CALCUTTA RIOT OVER RELIGION TAKES 4 LIVES

POLICE FIRE.

(By G. W. Seabridge, United Press Staff Correspondent).

CALCUTTA, July 15. — Four persons were killed and forty-nine sent to hospitals with wounds and injuries in grave riots between the Moslems and Hindus in North Calcutta to-day.

The police fired fifty rounds of ammunition in attempting to suppress the disorders. Scores of arrests were made.

The disorder broke out when Moslem crowds attempted to obstruct a procession of Hindus. The Hindus were marching to music and observers say that they were not making any aggressive action. The Moslems came out of a side street on to the line of march and squatted on the pavements to pray, thereby holding up the parade.

The police, who had been maintaining a close guard on the procession, attempted to disperse the obstructionists. At what was apparently a pre-arranged signal, disorders started on all sides.

Bricks were hurled at the marchers and in a moment a riot was under way with bricks, knives and sticks used promiscuously. Ambulances were rushed to the scene as the casualties increased.

Renewal Feared.

Unrest in India has been manifested in a series of religious clashes, frequently involving casualties, throughout the last few months.

The Moslem-Hindu strife is an old one and deep seated in India's life. Early in July serious disturbances occurred about Pabna when Moslem mobs looted and burned Hindu mosques. Numerous casualties were then reported and the disorders culminated in the cessation of business in some cities where mob rule was threatened before the military intervened.

CHURCH ROBBED OF SACRED VESSELS

Sacrilege Committed in Roman Catholic Church—Community Indignant.

AYLMER, Que., July 15. Canadian Press. — This community and more particularly the Roman Catholic portion, is aroused to indignation over the thefts and sacrilege committed last night to St. Paul's Roman Catholic Church here. Robbers stole the sacred vessels, valued at between two and three thousand dollars, including two gold and silver chalices, and two receptacles for the Holy Eucharist. The sacred host was scattered on the grass outside the church, this constituting the most ruthless sacrilege in the view of the members of the faith.

If you looked at our prices on the Used Cars we are offering this week you would realize that they were inexpensive cars. But if you saw the cars and the prices, you would know they were remarkable values. That is the difference between value and price. And that is why we want you to come in and see the cars. Welcome Everywhere

His merry laughter is infectious. Nobody can resist his endless flow of high spirits. He has even been known to make a tax collector smile.

His breezy good-humour and amazing energy both spring from his unfailing good health; and the source of his unfailing good health is the tasteless pinch of Kruschen he takes every morning in his breakfast cup of coffee or tea.

As Grandpa is so fond of saying, "It's the little daily dimeful that does it."

Profit yourself by his experience. Don't allow your energy to be sapped, your constitution undermined by the indoor life you are forced to lead, with insufficient fresh air and exercise, business worries and hasty meals. You can wipe out the ill effects of these conditions if you follow the Kruschen Way to health.

Every little pinch of Kruschen is a combination of just the six salts your body needs every day for its health. Nature would supply you with these six salts if you led a natural life in the open air and indulged in no errors of diet. It is in supplying the daily deficiency of these vital salts, caused by modern conditions of life, that Kruschen is invaluable.

What the "little daily dimeful" does is to clear your system of all the clogging waste matter that has been lowering your vitality, and to send pure, refreshed blood coursing through your veins. In a few days you feel a new being — braced in body and in mind, ready to tackle your work and your play with an unwonted zest and capacity.

Get a 75c bottle of Kruschen now and begin to test for yourself the virtue of the "little daily dimeful." Continue taking it after you've acquired "that Kruschen feeling" of fitness and cheerfulness, for your body is in daily need of the good that Kruschen does.

Half a cent a day is the cost of insuring your health and happiness. Isn't it worth while?

Tasteless in Coffee or Tea

Put as much in your breakfast cup as will lie on a 10 cent piece. It's the little daily dimeful that does it

SANDY NAMED IN VICTORIA

Ex-Progressive M.P.P. Again Standard Bearer in South Riding.

FOR PROVINCIAL.

LINDSAY, July 15 (Canadian Press).—At a Progressive picnic and nomination, held at Little Britain yesterday afternoon, F. G. Sandy, ex-Progressive M.P.P., was nominated as the party's standard bearer, for South Victoria for the provincial Legislature. Mr. Sandy accepted the nomination and in his address stated the province had a stable government of unstable men. J. G. Lethbridge, Progressive member for West Middlesex was the chief speaker. He severely scored the record of the Ferguson Government.

"Trash and Nonsense"

Mr. Guthrie described the events in parliament leading up to Mr. King's resignation after having been refused dissolution by His Excellency, the Governor-General. "The hue and cry of the Grit party is that His Excellency did not act in a constitutional manner by refusing Mr. King dissolution," he said. "What trash and nonsense. Mackenize King wanted to dissolve Parliament in the face of defeat to avoid the vote of censure."

"Well might the Governor-General refuse to allow dissolution particularly after he had had dissolution on October 29 last and failed." exclaimed Mr. Guthrie adding that His Excellency had acted as any constitutional governor would have.

"Meighen' stands for stability and protetion that will protect and will not injure any section of the country," said Mr. Guthrie. He declared that the farmers of the country need protection in view of the fact that eighty millions of dollars of farm produce had been imported into Canada from the United States each year.

Will Solve Problems

The Minister predicted that Premier Meighen would solve the problem of co-operative marketing, of bringing the producer and consumer together. He charged that every treaty that the King government had made cost the people of Canada millions of dollars and took for example the fact that Australian butter and eggs had been given practically free entry into the country at the cost of the farmers of Canada.

Opposes Low

The nomination of Dr. Maloney as Conservative candidate in South Renfrew is of particular interest as he will probably have as an opponent Hon. Thomas A. Low, former Hon. Thomas A. Low, former who was defeated by 1,400 votes in the general election of 1925.

The Traffic Cop is Your Protector

Ontario highways are policed for your protection. The traffic "cop" is your friend.

The traffic patrol is not to inconvenience the motorist, and not for the purpose of collecting fines. Its aim is to protect life and limb, and the public investment in the roads. Its work makes for the safety of yourself and your family.

Won't you do your part in this movement to reduce accident on the highways, and encourage your friends to do the same?

Do not fall into the temptation of speeding, because the road ahead is clear. Remember that excessive speed is one of the greatest agents of destruction of some roads. While reminding motorists that the traffic patrol will do its full duty in enforcing the law, the Government urges the co-operation of motorists in refraining from excessive speed. Each motorist is interested in road protection because each must contribute to road maintenance.

THE HON. GEO. S. HENRY, Minister of Highways

S. L. SQUIRE, Deputy Minister

Issued by the Ontario Department of Highways to secure the co-operation of motorists in abating the abuse of the roads of the Province.

SUNDAY DANCING.

Attorney-General Nickle's statement that it is legal to operate a dance-hall on Sunday or permit dancing in a restaurant so long as no charge is made to the dancers, has caused some comment, although the question is of only passing interest in Peterboro.

There is little or no Sunday dancing in this district, and apparently no demand for this form of recreation on Sunday.

Some people are of the opinion that even where no charge is made Sunday dancing could be stopped as an annoyance to the public, but it is quite true, as Mr. Nickle points out, that it is very difficult to refine a nuisance or to make the sound of dance music or dancing come under that definition.

So far as the noisy side of dancing is concerned, it is by no means certain that the sound of dance music grates any more harshly upon the ear than the unmusical singing of hymns with a badly played piano accompaniment that some worthy families consider the proper musical setting for a Sunday evening at home.

However, we in Peterboro have no cause to worry over the question of Sunday dancing; it is unknown here, fortunately.

THE QUEEN OF SOUTHEAST GREY.

Miss Agnes MacPhail, the only woman to ever sit in the Parliament of Canada, has generally posed as a democrat, the real Simon-pure article.

That makes it difficult to understand her adopting a royal style of addressing her constituents by greeting them in a long letter on the political situation as "My Dear People," as she did a few days ago.

Doubtless the Progressives of the riding delight in being treated as loyal subjects and addressed this way, for they have nominated Miss MacPhail as their candidate again, and hope to send her back to Ottawa to continue her campaign against Boy Scouts, cadet training and war pictures in the schools.

It is difficult to get the Southeast Grey point of view, but looking at the matter from this distance, it seems impossible to associate Miss MacPhail with the businesslike and efficient administration of Canada's affairs that most people are hoping will eventuate out of the coming election.

"My Dear People" will not be contributing largely to the progress of Canada if they send her back again.

WHERE SPEED IS FOOLISH.

Many motorists are resentful when speeding is given as the most prolific cause of accidents; yet it cannot be denied that in the majority of cases too fast driving is responsible.

The other morning within a short time there were two accidents, one of a rather serious nature, at Welcome Corners on the Provincial highway, because drivers attempted to take the turn at too great a speed.

Driver No. 1 did not slow down, and as a result his car shot across the road and into the ditch.

Driver No. 2, shortly after, made the same mistake, but did not have the same luck, as his sedan turned turtle in the ditch and the occupants were badly shaken up, and one passenger had her wrist sprained. The car was badly smashed.

Here were two accidents that could have been avoided with ordinary care.

The nature of the turn at Welcome is indicated by road signs, and only sheer carelessness and a mania for fast driving can be held responsible for the two mishaps.

THE BRITISHER AND SPORT.

American golfers commenting on the failure of British stars in the recent British open championship, have indulged in criticism of the British tendency to enjoy sport for its own sake rather than to be actuated by the desire or the will to win.

Certainly the British have not developed that intense anxiety to secure victory that distinguishes the American athlete in every line of sport.

And after all, is not the British view the better one?

Isn't it better to get enjoyment out of the games we play than to put such a premium on victory that sport becomes a scientific business to which we must sacrifice our time and many of our pleasures?

The Britisher plays for the love of the game itself; if he wins, so much the better. If he doesn't and the game has been a good one, he shakes hands with his conqueror and is satisfied.

While it is difficult for a people who put such stress upon winning to understand that attitude, yet there is much to said in favour of the British conception of sport.

DIFFERENT COUNTRIES, DIFFERENT METHODS.

The London Daily Mail asks whether dictators have come to stay in Europe or whether they are to be regarded merely as transient and temporary manifestations. Personal rule that is autocracy more or less veiled prevails in Italy, Spain, Greece, Turkey, Portugal and probably Poland. And this has not been done by sheer armed coercion. The strong man seems to have public opinion on his side. This is accounted for by popular weariness of politics and desire for rest and stability. But the writer goes on to say:

"We do not want Fascism here and have no use for it. If Signor Mussolini had been an Englishman he would not have required to establish his ascendency by the methods he found it necessary to employ. He would have been floated into office by the free choice of the constituencies, and as head of a responsible Cabinet he could have had all the powers he needed for his great work of national reconstruction and regeneration. There is no occasion to go outside the constitution unless the constitution breaks down.

"It has not broken down in Britain, nor is there any sign that it will. A responsible British Ministry, with a majority in Parliament and the constituencies, can be equal to any emergency so long as it correctly interprets the national will and acts with energy and resolution. That was unmistakably demonstrated in the late strike. . . . No dictator could have dealt with the crisis so successfully and so smoothly. The future of parliamentary politics is safe enough in this country if our parliamentary politicians continue to show themselves worthy of their trust."

What is said of Britain is equally true of Canada. There has been a situation of extraordinary difficulty at Ottawa, but there is no dangerous disturbance throughout the country. People are going on with their usual occupations, business and pleasures quite calmly, with evident confidence that a solution will be found without resort to the methods of Mussolini. This confidence is justified by our history. In the period immediately preceding Confederation there was a somewhat similar situation, with the parties so evenly balanced as to cause frequent elections and changes of Government. The result was not chaos, but the establishment of a new system of government under which Canada has flourished and made progress for nearly sixty years. We have not the least doubt that our present troubles will have an equally satisfactory ending.—London Advertiser.

SPEED VS. SAFETY.

The "spotter," manipulating "speed-traps" and other pitfalls to entrap the unwary motorist, very largely has been eliminated from the highways of Ontario, his place having been taken by the motorcycle traffic officer who works in the open. But if infractions of the motor traffic regulations continue to occur at their present rate and if a minority of the motoring public sets the law at defiance, leading to many serious accidents, it may be necessary to reinstate the "spotter" as a means of preserving public safety. That has been the experience in the neighboring Province of Quebec and the reason for the reversion to the old order of things is given a paragraph or two contained in a late issue of the official bulletin of the Quebec Roads Department:

"Safety for the travelling public and the people residing along the main highways is growing more uncertain day after day. Some drivers act as if possessed of a regular speed madness. In many districts crossing the highway is nothing less than a risk; children's life is endangered; the cattle is mercilessly killed; auto-drivers' and passengers' security is now but a meaningless word.

"As a consequence of the very numerous complaints sent to him, the Minister of Roads has decided to reinstall the former 'spotters' on the highways. Last year, at the request of the automobilists, the 'spotter' system was given up for that of the motorcycle officer. The Minister was then assured that the law would be complied with as formerly, and that public security would not be endangered. Facts have betrayed his expectations.

"It would be a deplorable thing were all the work and money spent for improving and maintaining the highways of this province to result only in increasing accidents and loss of life. First of all, life must be preserved; people residing along the highways—especially children—and motorists themselves, need protection. The law, fully complied with, meets everyone's interest, and above all the imprudent chauffeurs' interest. Fortunately, the latter still are the small number. The great majority of motorists are prudent, law-abiding, and they will welcome the Minister's decision as a new proof of his concern for their security."

In this circular Hon. Mr. Perron lays stress upon the need for safeguarding life, and particularly juvenile life, from the speed maniac, who is selfishness and recklessness personified, and who makes the highways unsafe and disagreeable for all concerned. The loss of child life through the operation of motor cars is one of the exceptionally sad features of the traffic. Dealing with this question is a most interesting bulletin issued by R. B. Stoeckel, Commissioner of the Department of Motor Vehicles of the State of Connecticut. Unless most careful measures are taken, he points out, motor vehicle accidents involving juveniles are likely to increase. Motor vehicle traffic is growing and the child, with no "stored knowledge," as Mr. Stoeckel points out, is exposed to more danger.

A brief section, dealing with child psychology, as related to street traffic, is worth quoting: "When he (the child) first begins to move about he knows little or nothing about those relationships which his movements have to the movements of other persons and of vehicles. He has no inherent mental qualifications which enable him to estimate speeds and distances or to judge the probable action of another, so he enters upon traffic participation as a learner dependent alone upon his senses and innate common sense. The other factors which he needs for his present and future safety have yet to be acquired. He has to learn traffic.

"Even a very young child generally has a good enough mind and enough common sense so that he can proceed safely when his mind can be kept focused on the action he is performing and is not diverted or distracted. He learns rapidly by his every successful performance and in a short time acquires experience to the extent actually necessary. His mind is in the acquisitive stage about everything which is going on about him, so his attention can readily be drawn to a different subject when it ought to be concentrated on traffic and his part in it. This fact is the basic reason for accidents to children."

But legally the child has just as much right to be in the streets or on the highway as has the motorist and the "due care" to be expected of it is only the care that can be expected of the average child of its age. So that the responsibility for any accident in which a child is involved is difficult for the motorist to avoid.—Brockville Recorder and Times.

HOW DO YOU SAY IT?

"ONTO."

(The McClure Syndicate, Inc.)

This word, "onto," affords an interesting example of the way in which words make their way into the language in spite of purist "Onto" seems to be fixed firmly in usage, despite the authorities. "It is the result of a desire for a preposition formed from 'on,' in the same way that 'into' is formed from 'in,' says one writer. And he goes on to say that "if it were accepted, we should say, 'I lay on the bed but I jumped onto the table.' It is, however, usually regarded as a vulgarism. 'On' has long been used with verbs of motion."

However, there is a difference between "I jumped on the table" and "I jumped onto the table." The difference is apparent to every reader. Since the word "onto" meets a need of the language, and there is no other word that can take its place, it has been accepted, and by the public, and is in common use, and it is an old saying that "usage makes language."

CHICAGO GRAINS.

CHICAGO, July 15.—(Canadian Press).—Unusual power to absorb selling manifested itself in the wheat market yesterday, and prices were bulging at the last. High temperatures northwest and possible black rust developments received particular notice. Closing quotations were unsettled at 1-4 to 1 1-8 net advance with corn varying from 1-2 decline to 3-8 gain, oats unchanged to 1-4 off, showing a rise of 7 to 22 cents.

Word that rain is needed at once over a wide area of Canada did much to promote buying in view of the unpromising outlook which the latest Canadian crop estimate has drawn attention to.

Black rust fears arose principally from advices that in the section from Ortonville, Minn. to Grand Forks, N.D., losses will be great if not total in case of rust weather, during the net two weeks. Other reports regarding wheat west of the Red River valley told of severe deterioration of late. On the other hand, Liverpool quotations appeaed unresponsive to price upturns on this side of the Atlantic, and some Chicago trade leaders were skeptical of the new Canadian crop estimate. The Canadian official forecast at this time last year, it was pointed out, proved to be 50,000,000 bushels too low. Bears were also inclined to emphasize that primary domestic receipts are nearly double those of a year ago.

Rising temperatures over the corn belt did a god deal to keep the corn market easier than wheat. Oats took their cue from corn.

Provisions reflected the upward trend of hog values.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

MONTREAL, Que., July 15.—(Canadian Press).—With foreign bid still below working basis, the export trade in grain here yesterday was again extremely dull. The domestic market was also quiet but the undertone was firm.

The foreign demand for spring wheat grades or flour was quiet but the local trade was moderately active and prices were steady. The tone of the market for winter wheat grades was firm with a fair trade passing.

Prices for all grades of millfeed were well maintained under a good demand from local sources. The enquiry for standing grades of rolled oats was again limited but the undertone remained firm.

A fair amount of business was done in American new crop potatoes. The tone of the market was about steady with sales of No. 1 grade being made at $6.00 per barrel. Old crop New Brunswick grades sold at $2.25 per bag of 90 pounds.

Extreme dullness marked the egg trade but the feeling was firm. The receipts were 1,215 cases.

A steady feeling prevailed in the market for beans, but the volume of business was small. Car lots of choice white hand picked were quoted at $2.25 per bushel and smaller quantities at $2.35 per bushel.

The undertone to the butter market was again unsettled and the trade volume was small. The receipts were 875 packages.

The cheese market was without any new feature to note. The receipts were 6,886 boxes.

STERLING EXCHANGE.

Sterling demand $4.85 1-4.

Sterling cables $4.85 3-4.

DR. FRANK CRANE'S DAILY EDITORIAL.

GETTING AWAY FROM YOURSELF.

By Dr. Frank Crane.

Some time ago I wrote an article about a book in which a man who had lost his hearing told of the strange, silent world which the deaf inhabit.

"Due to an operation my ear drums were broken. To lose one's hearing in adult life requires a great inward adjustment. In fact, the struggle is so hard at times that one loses faith in everything.

"Yet to shout from the house tops is of no avail. Self pity makes it even more discouraging, as to concentrate upon self is just walking farther into the channel of sullenness. Therefore, there seems but one way to choose—try to get away from self, if that is humanly possible."

There are thousands of brave, heroic people like this woman who are carrying on, trying to make the best of a life twisted askew by misfortune. They rise the sum total of human heroism in the world.

For when sickness, affliction or sudden handicaps tumble the dreams of a life time about a person's prime, just to make the best of life is in itself to be heroic.

There are times to such people when getting away from themselves is a necessary part of life.

The other day I called upon a young man who had been sick in bed for two years. Lying on his back, unable to hold a book, he got away from himself by having a map hung on a string over his bed.

He memorized the names of the states and the countries and their position in relation to each other, and made trips in his imagination.

He also had lists hung on the string and had learned all of the American presidents in order, and said he soon would be the only man in the world who could name all of the vice-presidents.

Methods which enrich your mental or spiritual resources, and those in which the activity benefits others, are the most effective.

For in losing yourself in self-betterment or in social service and kindred activities you not only occupy your mind, but also reap the feeling of doing something worth while with your life.

EXPERIMENTAL FARM ACHIEVES FINE PLANT BREEDING SUCCESS

The "Agnes" Rose a Cross Made in 1900 Bring Gold Medal.

WILL BE POPULAR.

OTTAWA, July 15 (Canadian Press).—The Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa has added another achievement in plant breeding. The "Agnes" rose, bred at the farm, has brought the honor of the first award of the Walter Van Fleet gold medal offered by the American Rose Society for an outdoor rose of highest excellence originated on this continent. The gold medal was formally presented to M. B. Davis, representing the Dominion Department of Agriculture, at a banquet given to the American Rose Society pilgrimage at Port Stanley, Ontario, recently. The presentation was made by the president of the society, F. L. Aitking of Rutherford, New Jersey, in the presence of W. L. Saunders, son of the originator of this rose.

The "Agnes" rose is a beautiful pale yellow flower with outer petals of a delicate creamy salmon hue. The flowers are borne singly and in great profusion. They are fragant and bloom early but only once in the season. Because of its extreme carliness, great hardiness, and unique and attractive color this rose is expected to be very popular in Canada, especially in the cooler districts.

The distinction of breeding the rose goes to the late Dr. William Saunders, who had so many other successes in this work. The cross which produced the rose was made in 1900 between Rosa Rugosa and Persian Yellow. It bloomed first in 1902 and has been under test at Ottawa ever since, during all of which time it has never been noticeably injured by winter.

AROUND THE WORLD TWENTY-EIGHT DAYS

Airplanes, Express Trains and Racing Autos Used To Outdo Jules Verne.

NEW YORK, July 15 (Canadian Press). — Airplanes, ocean liners, express trains and racing automobiles have outdone Jules Verne's wildest dreams of speedy world-girdling. With their aid two men circled the globe in one-third of Verne's hero's time and lopped a week from the actual record made a little over a decade ago.

Linton O. Wells and Edward S. Evans roared into New York in a racing car yesterday afternoon and alighted at the Pulitzer Building, exactly 28 days 14½ hours when they left on a tugboat to catch the liner Aquitania down the bay, en route to Europe. They had crossed France, Germany, Russia, Siberia, China, Japan and the United States. Eight thousand of the 20,100 miles traversed were by airplane, with eleven stops and not a single accident.

The world girdlers spent Tuesday night at Rantoul, Illinois, losing a number of hours toward their record because the planes in which they had come from Seattle were not equipped for night flying. They allowed themselves only three hours' sleep between Seattle and New York, jumping from the pits of their planes to seats of waiting cars at Mitchell Field for the last dash of the trip.

The previous world girdling record was made in 1913 by John Henry Mears, who bettered Jules Verne's fiction estimate of "Around the World in Eighty Days," by performing the feat in 35 days 21 hours and 35 minutes.

When Wages Are Not Paid Stevedores Tie Up Vessel.

HAMILTON, July 15. — Thirty local stevedores, who recently unloaded the cargo of the S. S. Wenchitta, freighter of Norwegian register, have had a "plaster" placed on the steamer's hawsers at Montreal.

The men did not receive their wages for the work, it is said. A draft made on a bank in Detroit was not paid and summary action was then adopted when it was learned that the steamer was at Montreal.

So far as is known, this is the first local instance of "sea-lawyers" tying up a vessel for wages due.

BREAKS OUT ANEW.

DOVER, N.J., July 15.—Despite the rain of last evening, which became a downpour early this morning, fire which had been smouldering in storehouse No. 5, in the northern part of the Lake Denmark naval depot, ever since the explosion caused by a bolt of lightning on Saturday afternoon, flamed up anew this morning, and for several hours threatened extensive stores of fourteen and sixteen inch unexploded shells nearby.

With the exception of about half an hour this afternoon, when the flames got over to a storehouse containing five, twelve, fourteen and sixteen in. unexploded shells, a company of 100 Marines, under Captain A. T. Lewis, kept the fire confined to storehouse No. 5, which was filled with unloaded five-inch shells.

COUNCIL PASSES TRAFFIC BY-LAW

SEWER EXTENSION.

CAMPBELLFORD, July 15. — At Tuesday night's meeting of the town council a new traffic by-law was passed, subject to the approval of the Minister of Highways. One of the new regulations has to do with the parking of cars at an angle of 45 degrees on the main streets.

Wesley Stephens and William Hall, asked for an extension of the Rannie street sewer to the south corner of the lot on which Mr. Stephens' house stands. The council agreed to the construction providing the ratepayers effected, were willing to pay the same frontage sewer tax as paid on the Second street sewer, and sign an agreement to that effect, before the work was started.

Davidson's and Sullivan's proposition on the matter was agreeable to all concerned; that the council provide the necessary sewer tile and the property owners affected, do the digging and back-filling themselves.

The committee appointed to secure a right of way from Front street to the river, on the northwest end of Front street, were unable to make a report.

The report of the special committee, headed by J. N. Stone to enquire into the plan of the town was read, and after discussion Clerk J. F. Macgregor was instructed to write surveyors for an estimate of the cost of a new plan.

The report stated that the original plan was in bad condition and parts of it were almost illegible and it was the opinion of the committee that a competent surveyor be engaged to prepare a new plan.

The report also contained the following information of the Market Square property:

"As regards the market square, part of which was sold with the other lots, by the Rathbun Co., Limited, to James Thompson, by deed, dated June 22, 1906, we found that it provided, that the latter party, his heirs and assigns, were only to use the same for right of way, and for a lumber yard; but the same was not to be sold for building purposes; and also found the said market square on the said original plan, but could find no lease of the said market square to the Rathbun Coy. registered; nor could we find that any assignment of such lease had ever been registeed."

SOCIALIST PARTY FAVORS MAKING KING A DICTATOR

Albert To Get Power To Legislate By Decree.

TO SAVE FRANC.

BRUSSELS, July 15 (Canadian Press).—The Socialist party of the Chamber at a caucus yesterday, voted 48 to 10, with four abstentions, in favor of the bill giving the King full powers to legislate by decree, measures necessary to save the Belgian franc. This ensures the passage of the bill.

The franc, which sold at 230 to the pound sterling Monday, re-acted yesterday and gained steadily, the exchange market closing at 202. Confidence appears in a fair way to being restored, and the nervousness and panicky feelings of the past few days are disappearing. A permanent committee has been established to tighten control over the exchange market.

The Government has decided that one of the first measures to be enacted under the "full powers" authorization will have to do with the transfer of the telegraph and telephone systems now operated by the state to a national company as is being done with the railways. The capital value of the two systems is estimated at 1,800,000,000 francs. The company will issue three million preferred shares of five hundred francs each. The ordinary shares will remain in the possession of the state.

Increasing Inflation.

One of the causes of the collapse of the franc in the first days of this week has been overlooked in the statement which Premier Jaspar made to the Chamber, and in which he argued that the low record of the franc was not warranted by internal or external conditions.

The latest returns of the National Bank show a further increase in note circulation, now standing at 8,631,390,000. This is an increase of 11,749,600 over the previous week, and 1,000,000,000 francs over the corresponding period of last year. It is an increase of one-seventh of the total circulation, and financiers say that it has had much to do with the fall of the franc.

The Government expects to stop further inflation when granted full powers.

WOMEN ARE FORCED TO STRIP TO WAIST

Party From England Protests Against Methods of Ellis Island.

NEW YORK, July 15. — Canadian Press. — Members of a party of 12 persons who arrived from England on the liner Tuscania, announced yesterday that they would protest to the British authorities that in spite of objections made by women of the party they had been forced to strip to the waist by medical examiners at Ellis Island. They said they had to undergo the examination not only by United States officials but also by a representative of the Immigration Service of Canada, to which country they were bound.

The party arrived Saturday and as they were travelling third class had to go to Ellis Island, where the examination was enforced. They were released Monday and yesterday it was said that some had already gone to Canada while others remained here to make official protest.

Aside from the examination itself, the tourists protested that they had been asked "insulting" questions, and had been forced to carry their own baggage. Among those who objected to the treatment accorded were Mrs. Mary McNeil of Liverpool and her sister, Miss Anna Noble.

At Ellis Island it was said by immigration officials that the examination made of the members of the English party were just such as those made of all incoming third-class passengers. Statements by members of the party that the women had been examined by a man were acknowledged to be true.

SPOTTED FEVER.

STRATFORD, Ont., July 15. — Frederick Thomas, 11-year-old son of Police Constable Thomas W. Smith and Mrs. Smith, 174 King street, died Tuesday after an illness of only a few days, during which time doctors vainly tried to save his life. He was a victim of spotted fever, one of the rarest cases experienced by medical men here in many years. Once contracted there is practically no hope of combating it. Last week, young Smith was in splendid health and able to be around with his playmates. Friday night he complained about feeling slightly unwell, a few dark spots were noticed on his body. Two doctors were summoned and the case was diagnosed as "spotted fever," resulting from a deficiency in the blood system. Monday evening he became worse, gradually sank into a state of coma and passed away

DOWNEYVILLE NEWS

DOWNEYVILLE, July 15. — A very enjoyable evening was spent at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Harrington, when the members of St. Luke's choir gathered there Wednesday to spend a few hours. During the evening an address was read by Mr. Angus Twomey and two beautiful chairs were presented to Mr. Clare Harrington on the occasion of his marriage.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Harrington—We the members of St. Luke's choir have gathered here this evening to show your appreciation of your valuable service in our choir. We are not here to bid your farewell as we know you still intend to remain in Downeyville and we hope you will still continue a member of our choir. Occasions like this have occurred frequently of late and we have lost a few members of our choir and we do not care to lose them. We ask you to accept those chairs not for their value but as a slight token of remembrance of the choir. We all join in wishing you and Mrs. Harrington long years of married life.

Mr. Harrington replied briefly and thanked the members for their gift. He was glad to have them all present at his home to enjoy themselves and hoped they would often come and spend an evening with them.

Mr. Patrick Harrington, father of the groom, also replied and both he and Mrs. Harrington were glad to meet the choir members and to have the pleasure of entertaining them as he was one of the old members himself.

Speeches were also made by Messrs. Angus Twomey and Frank Milloy.

A dainty lunch was afterwards served by the hostess and the remainder of the evening was spent in music and dancing. Afterwards all sang "For he's a jolly good fellow" and that concluded a very enjoyable evening.

OMEMEE, July 15. — The local Orange Lodges, as well as several from Reaboro Lodge, numbering over eighty, marched to the Presbyterian Church on Sunday evening, where they listened to a splendid discourse given by S. M. Scott, of Lindsay. The congregation was unusually large. The special music consisted of an anthem, with solo parts by Mr. W. Leiper, and as an offertory number Mrs. M. ORANGEMEN ATTEND SERVICE AT WARSAW

Rev. J. Fenton Preached an Interesting Sermon on the Reformation.

WARSAW, July 15.—On Sunday evening, the Warsaw Orangemen had their annual church parade this year to the Anglican Church. There was quite a good turnout of Orangemen, and the church was well filled. Rev. J. F. O'Conor-Fenton conducted the service. The church was prettily decorated with orange colors. Mesdames Charles Foster and John Payne sang "In the Garden."

Mr. Fenton's address to the Orangemen was very interesting and instructive, and should prove very helpful. His text was the first verse of the fifth chapter of Galatians: "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage."

It is impossible to give even a synopsis of the sermon as every syllable uttered by the preacher counted, but a few of the points were that liberty was not a free-and-easy thing, where one could do exactly as one wished in every way. That usually ended in a crash. The liberty spoken of is, the freedom of doing right and requires strength. The Galatians, though Christians, had allowed many useless formalities to creep into their religion to such an extent that they were in bondage to their rules. Paul had said to them, "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you—?" Every one must obey the ten commandments, but meaningless rules are a burden, and people should stand fast and not be dominated by them.

Mr. Fenton is apprehensive of the effect of Asia, Middle Europe and Southern Europe on the Christian liberty. Very plainly did he put the history of Protestants. There were "protestors" long before the Reformation. At one time nearly all of Europe had one political head in Germany, one educational centre in Paris, one religious centre in Rome. The English people as a whole, never subscribed to this. They had their own king, who was subject to no potentate. King John did try to have it so, but the result was he had to sign the Magna Charta. The head of the Church in England was the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the seat of learning was at Oxford. The Battle of the Boyne was only one incident, a heroic one, but only one, in a long struggle which had been going on for long, and has gone on ever since. Protestants were those who, protested against these outside influences. He put it very strongly that being anti-papal was not being Protestant. Religion is not a negative theory, it is a positive thing, must show in men's lives. A man must have a belief, and know why he has it; no matter how wrong or foolish a religion a man may have, if he has it, and believes it, he will down the other every time. No man who does not actually believe in the Trinity, does not take Jesus Christ as his saviour, does not lead a pure life, does not remember the Sabbath, nor darken a church door, has any business to call himself a Protestant. The man who has a religion and holds to it is better. He spoke of the tendency, for courtesy's sake, to be too friendly with conditions, we should firmly stand against.

He showed the need of Jesus Christ in the formation of character, of unity, and of helping others.

STORM DESTROYS ROADS IN APSLEY

Recent Electric Storms Wreck Great Havoc in Apsley Township.

APSLEY, July 15.—Heavy rains from Thursday night to Saturday morning worked havoc on the roads in this vicinity. Road work had been in full swing all week, the condition of the hills being as bad if not worse than before. The total rainfall in the thirty hours amounted to 3.15 inches, nearly as much as fell in the whole month of June. The storms were intermittent, rain falling in only ten hours actually of the thirty hour period.

Though the lightning was very severe, little damage to buildings has been reported, but several trees were struck around the lakes.

The local Orange Lodge held a parade and service in the Orange Hall on Sunday afternoon which was largely attended. Mr. Sam Carr preached an appropriate and effective sermon on the Reformation.

A picnic was held on Monday, but a heavy rain from 9 a.m. till noon somewhat marred the celebration. Dinner and tea was served in the Orange Hall, and after the weather had cleared, the lodge paraded about twenty strong through the village to the accompaniment of drums and fifes. The fifers being E. L. Blackwell and John Coones. During the afternoon a baseball game was played and several races run off. Considering the weather, a good crowd assembled, some from as far distant points as Coe Hill and Purdeyville.

An open air church service was conducted on Sunday evening by Rev. C. Spence at Couch's Landing on Loon Lake and was well attended. This service will be a feature every Sunday evening at seven o'clock during July and August, and is for the benefit of campers and tourists at this favorite resort.

JUDY IS INSOLENT.

My tone had the desired effect upon Doctor Flint. I could see that it drove him mad with rage. He lost all control of himself.

"Where's that bottle?" he fairly shouted at me.

"What bottle?" I asked as innocently as I could.

"You know very well what bottle, young woman. Pass it over or it will be the worse for you."

I began to get angry, and I did not make a sound. The idea of that old man telling me that poor Miss Cleaver's suicide was going to make it disagreeable for the Morton Department Store, when he knew how disagreeable the manager of the store had made it for Miss Cleaver before she reached that stage of desperation where she would take her own life, made me want to strike him. I just looked at him. He need not think he was going to frighten me. He need not think that I was going to do any thing that I didn't want to do. I think I made him understand this and that he realized he had made a mistake by trying to bully me, for he immediately started on another track.

"Forgive my outburst, Miss Dean," he said. "Of course you know that I am very much worried about the loss of that bottle containing the liquid that poor Miss Cleaver drank here while she was temporarily insane. It will be very terrible if someone who does not understand all the circumstances should find that bottle.

"No one could have dreamed that a woman who was as successful in her chosen work as Miss Cleaver could possibly take her own life. I will tell you, Miss Dean, that I was so sure in my own mind that this could not be, that I did not, as I usually do, glance about for incriminating evidence of suicide when I come upon a man or woman in her condition.

"Of course, the moment I really examined Miss Cleaver I found out what was the matter with her, but I was then too busy trying to save her life to think of anything else."

"Did you really examine her, Doctor Flint? I thought you were too busy telephoning to do that. I know you left your patient while you held a long conversation with someone over the wire."

"I was trying to get an ambulance to get the poor woman to the hospital," the doctor explained.

"Someone else could have made that request just as well as you, doctor."

Doctor Flint tried to ignore my last speech.

LOVE LETTERS THAT MADE HISTORY

(By Joseph Kaye.)

(Copyright, McClure Syndicate, Inc.)

BERLIOZ AND ESTELLE.

Hector Berlioz was one of the greatest musicians and writers that the nineteenth century produced. The world has never quite decided whether Berlioz was a great composer or had only a minor creative talent, but that he was the father of modern orchestration is a fact that is gratefully admitted by all.

Berlioz was an extremely temperamental and sensitive man. He was beset by troubles all his life, due to the originality of his work and the musical innovations he introduced, and poverty was at all times his faithful companion.

Berlioz had two predominant loves in his life an English actress, Miss Henrietta Smithson, who played "Juliet" in Paris, and "Estelle." Miss Smithson he adored wildly and as she was a stage idol at that time and he a miserable, struggling musician who made ends meet by singing in the chorus of a burlesque, hope of winning her was more of a visionary dream. Yet the fates ordained that the beautiful and resplendent creature, Miss Smithson, should break her leg and suffer acute financial reverses and that in this condition, Hector Berlioz, enriched by three hundred francs which he borrowed, should marry her.

A man like Berlioz could present a beautiful passion, but as a husband he was a failure. His married life was a most unhappy one and the couple were eventually separated.

But for Estelle, his love bloomed unfaded for fifty years, doubtless for the reason that during this half century he saw her only thrice.

Berlioz's odd love began when he was twelve. The impressionistic youngster saw a lovely young woman of eighteen, with large, brilliant eyes, a splendid mass of hair and enchanting, graceful figure, and lost his heart completely. His passion became a standing joke at Meylan where this episode took place, and suffering Hector was reduced to despair. Seventeen years later he saw his Estelle for a moment as she passed in a stagecoach: sixteen years after this he visited Meylan again and became so distracted by memories of his first love that he decided to see Estelle.

She had married, lost her husband, and was living in peace with her children, a devoted mother. In that quiet household the woman of fifty-one received this passionate epistle from Berlioz:

"Madame,—

"There are certain faithful and persistent admirations that only die with us . . . I was twelve years old when I beheld Mademoiselle Estella for the first time at Meylan. You could not have known then how you overwhelmed that childish heart that was ready to break beneath the disproportionate burden of its feelings. I believe that you were even so pardonably cruel as sometimes to laugh at me. Seventeen years later . . . I waited for Mme. F. (Estelle) at one of the stations of the coach by which she was travelling. I presented her with a letter A violent shock at my heart made my hand tremble as it approached hers. I recognized the object of my first admiration, the Stella del' Monte, whose radiant beauty illuminated the morning of my life.

"Yesterday, Madam . . . I undertook a long contemplated pilgrimage. Once more I desired to see everything I have done so . . . Nothing is changed. Time has respected the temple of my memory. But strangers inhabit it now. Your flowers are cultivated by other hands and no one in the world—not even yourself—could have guessed why a gloomy looking man with features furrowed by labor and sorrow, should yesterday have penetrated to its most secret recesses. O quante lagrime! . . . .

"Farewell, Madame, I must return to my whirlwind. You will probably never see me, never know who I am: and I hope you will pardon the strange liberty I am now taking in writing to you. I forgive you beforehand if you smile at the recollections of the man, as you laughed at the admiration of the child.

'Despised Love.'

"Grenoble, December 6, 1848."

Forty-nine years after he first met Estelle, he actually saw her again. This was at her home. She was sixty-seven years old, and Berlioz was sixty-one. But in the eyes of the impetuous artist the years and gray hair and wrinkled features vanished and he ardently declared his love. Estelle was luckily a sensible woman and created a natural bond of affectionate sympathy between them. This led Berlioz into as peaceful a frame of mind as his tumultuous character could muster.

YOUR JEWEL COLOR FLOWER

By Mildred Marshall

The jacinth, today's talismanic stone, must be worn around the neck if its full powers are to benefit the wearer. It brings freedom from contagious diseases and assures the traveler of safety no matter what misfortunes may befall those around him, according to the ancients.

Today's natal stone is the pearl. Worn against the flesh, it protects its wearer from sorrow and bad luck, and useless worry.

The lily of the valley is today's lucky flower. It is dedicated especially to brides.

There Are Pages and Pages From Past and Present Paris

The newest silhouette puts its flare on the hip in the circular peplum sewed to a long body. It is known sartorially as the page-boy style, for it apes the belted tunic of the medieval court page. Paris makes it in the silk and satin crêpes in the Summer shades of Chartreuse green, soft rose, old blue, vermilion and the still-popular rosy beige. In damask it is even more suggestive of the days of the Field of the Cloth of Gold, while a more modern version of it takes to short sleeves and printed silks. It was worn recently at the Ritz by a young girl in the new pastel-blue faille, stitched with silver.

Not a favorable day for certain human ambitions, according to the reading of the stars. Mental effort is well directed.

Women are subject to favorable direction of the stars, and there is to be some sort of international alliance in which supreme possibilities in the work for permanent peace are indicated.

Under this rule the foresight of women should be quickened and their ability to accomplish big tasks increased.

Despite large public interests women are to be greatly concerned with romance and love affairs may interfere with many ambitions, for the planetary government makes for sentimentality and emotionalism.

Warning is given that the aspects may cause many women to wander after strange gods and to become supporters of alien faiths.

This is held to be a lucky wedding day for there should be harmony and understanding. Husbands acquired under this rule probably will not deceive.

One of the signs of the time will be an avid craving for all sorts of recreation. Sports will continue to prosper greatly.

This is an auspicious sway for theatrical plans and for musical enterprises. Those who seek public favor should benefit from publicity under this configuration.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

(By Mildred Marshall.)

Facts about your name, its history; its meaning; whence it was derived; its significance; your lucky day, and lucky jewel.

GENEVIEVE.

Genevieve signifies "white wave." It has the same origin as Gwen, which is considered the British Venus. The planet is Seren-Wener, as a morning star, Gweno as an evening star. Teutonic etymologists have tried to construe Genevieve as a combination of Gan (magic) and vaips (a crown), but without success.

History has established the fact that the first Genevieve was a Gaul born at Nanterre in 422 and could scarcely have been given anything but a Keltic or a Roman name, and the whole family of Gwens were dear to the Cymric race, whose religion was the same as the Gaul and Britain.

Genevieve was a shepherdess like Joan of Arc, who anticipated her deeds of patriotism, though she wore no armor and carried no sword. When Paris was besieged by the Franks, she walked forth unarmed in search of provisions and her heroism so impressed the savage Franks that they granted her entreaties that the wounded be spared. When she died, she was erected into the primary patron saint of Paris, and is adored as such by all Parisiennes, down from Anne Genevieve de Bourbon. The Teutons have a Saint Genevefa of Brabant, to whom has attached the story of the wife who was driven by malicious accusation to the woods where she gave birth to an infant and was nourished by a white doe until her innocence was proven.

The French use Genevieve, also Javotte, and Genevion: Italy makes her Genovefla: Germany, Genovefa, Vevay, and Vefele: and Russia Zenevieva.

Her talismanic stone is amber, which is said to ward off illness and bad luck. Monday is her lucky day and 5 her mystic number.

Coleridge wrote a charming lyric to Genevieve

"Maid of my love, sweet Genevieve,
In beauty's light you glide along:
Your eye is like the star of eve,
And sweet your voice as seraph's song.
Yet not your heavenly beauty gives
This heart with passion soft to glow:
Within your soul a voice there lives,
It bids you hear the tale of woe, etc.'

In case the birds we talked about yesterday are not those you have seen, we will talk about some more kinds.

Take, for instance, the Shrike. Now, when you are motoring or ambling along some country road, be it far from or near a city, you will sooner or later come upon a shrike. Well, a shrike is a "butcher bird," but I hate that name, for it is unfair and unjust and misleading. He perches on telegraph lines and fences, and he is a gray or blue gray fellow with black and white pattern. His breast is light gray. He has black wings with white markings on them, and a black tail with white edges and a black and white pattern on the under side. A black line runs through his eye.

Then there are the two yellow puzzles which folks forever seem to mix. One is the real wild canary, the Goldfinch. He is the chap with the yellow body, black wings and black cap, and his wife is olive-green yellow. The other is what is known as a warbler. It is the Yellow Warbler, and it is yellow-green on top, bright yellow underneath, and its breast is streaked with reddish-brown lines. It looks yellow on the wing, and the female is like the male but not so strikingly marked or coloured.

Of course we have the Phoebe: most folks know it by the song or call, "phoebe." It flits its tail in a most entertaining way upon alighting on a post, as though it were trying to keep its balance. The adults are dull gray, dark looking birds with light breasts. The Wood Pewee is very much like a phoebe, but it has wing bars and does not fit its tail as a phoebe does, and it calls, "Pee-a-wee" or Pee-aaa."

Do not confuse the Red-headed Woodpecker with the Yellow Bellied Sapsucker. The former is black and white in big striking pattern, with an all red head: the Sapsucker is black and white, too, but the pattern is spot-like, and there is a black bib, and the head is not red, but the male has a red cap and red throat, and the female a red cap and white throat.

FULL DENTURES.

You call them "plates" or "sets," both of which terms are now obsolete in strictly professional parlance.

An arctic traveller relates how the Eskimo, employing his teeth in the tearing and cutting of thongs and kindred materials used in the supplying of his necessities, quickly wears them down to the gum line. Being unable then, to properly masticate the hard foods which comprise the greater part of his diet, gastric troubles ensue, very often with fatal consequences. Thus he is cut down at an early age.

This is startling, if true, and knowing somewhat of his mode of living, we may well suppose that it is largely adherent to fact.

Modern, civilized peoples, however, while prone to toothless or edentulous mouths, from faulty dietary habits, etc., through man's inventiveness, is yet enabled to mitigate the evil consequences of such a state. It is patent that such relief is most necessary, for obviously the stomach is unable to bear the full masticatory load in addition to performing its own specific function, and if called upon to do so, it must eventually break down with probably fatal results.

You are cognizant of the esthetic effects obtainable with the present-day type of denture. Where niceties of detail are attended to, such as in the employment of staining materials, and a wise arrangement of the artificial teeth, the restoration can be made to simulate the lost natural denture to a remarkable degree.

But while the denture is, in a sense, the product of a highly developed mechanical skill, yet it must be remembered that the problem of the prosthodontist is not one of mechanics only, whereby a plate of vulcanite, gold or aluminum, as the case may be, is adapted to a firm surface, but that he is here dealing with living and yielding tissues, subject to the same processes of change as are other body tissues, and evincing the same reactionary tendencies towards foreign bodies placed contiguously to them. Muscle and jaw movements, a variable stress, phonetics and esthetics, all combine to complicate the problem.

It is a "far cry" from the old type of 'bureau-drawer denture,' to the product of to-day. Untiring research has been made in the study of jaw movements and tissue stress, that the denture, constructed on proper biological and mechanical lines, might successfully fulfill its function.

The person so unfortunate as to have lost his natural teeth, can approach the prosthodontist with every confidence that his masticatory apparatus will be restored with that degree of comfort and efficiency that will allow him to go through the rest of his life in health and peace.

There must be manifested, however, on the part of the person seeking such services, a realization that artificial dentures are never, and should never be, expected to be as good as the natural teeth, and with this there must be a receptive attitude of mind and perfect co-operation in the matter of persistent trial, to produce any degree of success.

AGE.

You really can't blame anyone for sorta fearing age. Of course there isn't any fun, when people reach that stage. But, after all, it's up to you, how soon you lose your hold on youth. There's much that you can do to keep from getting old.

To settle down and give right in to years that roll on by; to dream of things that might have been; to fret and fuss and sigh, is just the thing you shouldn't do. It brings the age-lines deep. 'Tis better, far, to laugh on through, and proper spirit keep.

Just look upon the little folk. They gladly show the way to make the age thing seem a joke that disappears through play. Swing back into the laughter that you had in youth, and then, you'll find that ever after, you are feeling young again.

PUSSYFOOT SAILS.

Optimistic Dry Reformer Says United States Only 10 Per Cent. Wet.

NEW YORK, July 15 (United Press).—Pussyfoot Johnson, most optimistic of dry reformers, has sailed for Esthonia to tell 15,000 delegates to the anti-alcohol congress that the United States is 90 per cent. dry.

Minus his familiar black derby, which he had replaced by a curious black felt hat with a flat crown and floppy brim, Johnson added that "the liquor business in the United States is as dead as Pharoah's mummy."

He advocated chloroforming for judges who have easy sentences for the liquor law violaters.

McPHERSON INQUIRY.

LOS ANGELES, July 15.—"Find Ormiston" was the slogan of everyone connected with the Aimee Semple McPherson case yesterday, following the disclosure that the hasty trip of Deputy District Attorney Joe Ryan to San Francisco last week produced the most startling bit of information that has yet struck this case of recurring sensations.

Ryan found the original copy of a telegram filed at Oakland, California, across the bay from San Francisco, three days after Mrs. McPherson's disappearance, in which the sender advised Mrs. Minnie Kennedy, mother of the evangelist, that her daughter was safe and not to worry.

The message was signed "Dr. Murten" by a man whom telegraph officials state closely resembled the pictures of Kenneth Ormiston, former radio operator of Angelus Temple. The hand-writing is declared to be almost identical with that of Ormiston. The investigators say they regard the finding of Ormiston essential to the ultimate solution of the case, and nothing is to be left undone in their efforts to locate the man.

Mrs. Kennedy yesterday readily admitted that she had received the telegram, but stated that she had regarded it merely as the work of a crank, and had relegated it to the pile of hundreds of similar messages received at the time her daughter disappeared.

Grand Jury Plans Shifted.

A sudden shift in grand jury plans and a general speeding up indicated that the hearing before that body may end to-day. If not, District Attorney Keyes feels sure that the next session of the jury, next Tuesday, will complete the case so far as the jury is concerned. All officials made it plain, however, that their investigation will continue no matter what the grand jury may do.

The grand jury work at this time is confined to the question of whether indictments charging kidnapping shall be returned, and, if so, against whom. Judge Arthur Keetch has forbidden the jurors to make any report of their findings in any other way than by indictments.

Heretofore it has been the custom for the grand jury to issue a lengthy report for publication, detailing its discoveries and conclusions.

Talk of Jurors' Division.

There is some talk of a heated discussion between the jurors and the judge on this point, and many rumors of a possible report in face of this order, but opinion is that the jury will follow orders.

Both Mrs. McPherson and Mrs. Kennedy demand that there must be no whitewashing and no appearance of whitewashing, either in Grand Jury proceedings or elsewhere. They are insistent in the absolute truth of Mrs. McPherson's story and declare that eventually it will be upheld in its entirety.

Mrs. Kennedy stated yesterday morning that Mrs. McPherson is heart-broken that her story is doubted and that nothing short of complete vindication will come forth. Mrs. Kennedy voiced the opinion that Mrs. McPherson made a great mistake in telling her story in the first place, but added that the mistake was made in good faith and a mistaken confidence in human nature.

May Be Related.

Some credence is given the report that Kenneth Ormiston, former radio operator at the Angelus Temple in Los Angeles, who is wanted in connection with the Aimee Semple McPherson case, is related to a prominent family which formerly resided in Whitby. Members of that family now residing in Oshawa and Uxbridge, while not positive of the fact, are inclined to believe that Kenneth Ormiston is a second cousin. They are of the opinion that the man is, in all probability, a grandson of their father's brother, Rev. Dr. William Ormiston, who was at one time a well-known New York clergyman, and who at one period preached in St. James's Square Church, on Gerrard Street, Toronto, and who, prior to going to New York, had a charge in Hamilton.

Lyrics Of Life

(By Douglas Malloch.)

OURSELVES.

There are so many books to read,
So many laws to understand,
Yet all the statutes we have planned
Are laws for other men to heed.
Now, I would say that what we need
Is just some books upon ourselves
With which to regulate ourselves.

Men might be better, that I know,
A thing we're all concerned about,
I think that I have figured out
A simple way to make them so:
If our own garden needs the hoe,
Ours are the weeds to worry worst
And those the weeds to tackle first.

And, when I start the newborn day,
The weeds that worry me the most,
Whatever fruits my orchards boast,
Are weeds that I should clear away,
The things I do, the things I say,
And not what others say and do
Are what must be attended to.

I'm kept so busy with the tares
In my own vineyard, so to speak,
I hardly have a chance to sneak
A disapproving glance at theirs.
I'm kept so busy with affairs
That I should fix, I get no time
To talk about another's crime.

SOLUTION OF YESTERDAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE.

Troubles They Never Had

UNCLE WIGGILY

Today's Bedtime Story

By Howard R. Garis

UNCLE WIGGILY'S POPCORN BALLS.

Copyright, 1926, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
(By Howard R. Garis.)

There was a cracking sound out in the kitchen of the hollow stump bungalow one morning, and as Mrs. Longears and Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy went down stairs, the muskrat lady housekeeper said to the rabbit lady:

"Uncle Wiggily must be up early beating the rugs."

"Do you think that is Uncle Wiggily?" asked Mrs. Longears.

"Who else would it be?" inquired Nurse Jane. "I heard him go down soon after the sun rose."

"But nobody told him to beat any rugs," went on the rabbit gentleman's wife. "What can he be doing?"

That strange crackling sound still echoed out in the kitchen, and when Nurse Jane was about to open the door Mrs. Longears caught the muskrat lady's paw and whispered:

"Don't! Better not!"

"Why?" asked Nurne Jane.

"Because it might be the Bob Cat!"

"I'll Bob Cat him if he's there," squealed the muskrat lady, who was very brave, and when the door was opened there was only Uncle Wiggily popping something in the stove. It was this that made the crackling noise.

"What in the world are you doing?" cried his wife.

"Popping corn to make popcorn balls to give to the boys and girls at my duck pond ocean seashore beach party!" answered Mr. Longears.

Uncle Wiggily was at the stove.

"I didn't know you were going to have a party," said Mrs. Longears.

"Oh, yes!" laughed Uncle Wiggily with a jolly little twinkle of his pinkie inkle nose. "Always on Thursday, when it's a hot day, I make popcorn balls and give them to the children on the beach."

The rabbit gentleman, as you know, had made the duck pond into an ocean by sprinkling salt in it. A mud turtle gentleman bobbed up and down to make waves.

Soon the white kernels of corn were popped and Uncle Wiggily kindly let Nurse Jane pour melted sugar over them in a big pan, and he also, more kindly still, allowed the muskrat lady to squeeze the sticky, sugared popcorn into balls.

"It makes me so messy to do that part," Uncle Wiggily explained. "I don't mind popping the corn, but I don't care about making the balls."

"You're at it early enough," spoke his wife, "beginning before breakfast."

"Oh, the beach party starts early and lasts all day," answered Mr. Longears. "I told the children I'd have plenty of popcorn balls for them," and he did—round, sweet, sugary ones, colored red, pink, white and yellow.

"Hurray! Hurray!" cried the animal boys and girls as they gathered around Uncle Wiggily and his basket of good things. "Oh, how we love Uncle Wiggily!"

"And I love you!" shouted the bunny gentleman, for he was quite excited about the treat he was getting ready. The basket of popcorn balls was set down on the beach, safely away from the waves that the mud turtle gentleman made by popping up and down in the water.

"Play around, and whenever you get hungry come and get a sweet ball," invited Uncle Wiggily. Such fun as the children had. Baby Bunty fell down in the water and wet her dress, but the sun soon dried it. Jackie Bow Wow covered his brother's tail with sand and Peetie thought his tail was lost. But Charlie Chick, the rooster, picked the sand away in his beak and there was the tail all safe.

Oh, so many popcorn balls as the boys and girls ate! And, all of a sudden, Jacko Kinkytail, the monkey boy, cried:

"Wow! Look! There's the Bob Cat!" and Jacko threw a white ball at the bad chap, making him run away with a howl, for the ball hit him on the nose.

"I didn't know my popcorn balls were as hard as that!" said Uncle Wiggily. "It made a loud bang on the bad chap's nose."

"That was a white baseball I threw, not a corn ball!" chattered Jacko, and then everybody laughed. For the Bob Cat wouldn't have run from a light popcorn ball, I guess. Anyhow, there was grand fun, and if the Lady Bug will dance with the Gentleman Beetle when the Grasshopper plays the fiddle with his left hind leg, I'll tell you next about Uncle Wiggily's merry-go-round.

NO SUNDAY DANCING.

Hon. W. F. Nickle Says To Niagara Falls Club—Owner Indignant.

TORONTO, July 15.— Hon. W. F. Nickle stated that Sunday dancing at the Prince of Wales' Club, Niagara Falls, would have to stop, when a deputation consisting of Mayor H. P. Stephens and three aldermen called on him yesterday to protest against the dancing. If the dancing did not stop after the intimation given, the Attorney-General said that steps would be taken to prevent it under provincial statutes. The decision would apply to all Ontario, it was intimated.

"With the exception of the Sunday dances," said Mr. Nickle, "there are no complaints against the Prince of Wales Club. It is well conducted in every other way and there have been no disorderly scenes."

Will Put Up Fight.

"I do not intend to stop the dance Sunday night," said A. Melbourne, owner of the Prince of Wales Club, in a statement yesterday, when interviewed regarding the ban placed on Sunday dances on his place by Attorney-General Nickle. "With regard to overcharging," says Mr. Melbourne, "we have been charging fifty cents a bottle of beer and a sandwich, giving waiter service, and with the understanding that we were to pay the Government ten per cent. of our Sunday night's gross receipts. With regard to my license I can get along without one. I can take a silver collection and so may any other dance hall, such as a church does, and I know that my collection will meet the expense of operation."

Easy to Gain With Yeast and Iron

New Combination of Yeast with Vegetable Iron Quick Way to Build Up Weight

This new combination of yeast vitamines with vegetable iron, renews the action of sluggish blood cells, drives out dangerous body poisons, increases energy and endurance and supplies the system with vitamines that build up weight.

For years yeast has been known as a rich vitamine food but not until we perfected "ironized yeast"—which comes in concentrated tablet form was it possible to take yeast and iron in the right proportions to build up weight.

Vegetable "Iron" when combined with yeast is quite easy to digest, therefore better for the system. And "yeast" when ironized, becomes just twice as beneficial as ordinary fresh or cake yeast.

Ironized Yeast Tablets are composed of concentrated food elements, therefore, they are pleasant to take and free from drug-like effects. If you are under weight, do not enjoy good health, lacking in energy and force, "ironized yeast" tablets will pick you right up, and if they fail, you get your money back.

Sold by druggists at $1.00 for a large 60-tablet package or sent direct from laboratory on receipt of price. Ironized Yeast Co., Fort Erie, Ontario, Canada.

The Runaway

By SHIRLEY RODMAN WILLIAMS

I PASSED a house where an adorable rascal of a child was tied to the porch with a long rope. "Have you been running away?" I asked, and he grinned amiably. The mother came out a little apologetically. "It looks cruel," she explained, "But he keeps running away. It's dangerous and I get frantic. I can't see that whipping would help because he's too little to understand, so he'll just have to be tied till it sinks in that he mustn't run away!" So there he was with limited freedom, till such a time when it should "sink in" that one mustn't go wandering off. Wise mother! She wasn't adding spanking to spanking trying to punish the child, but was using the best method she knew to make him reason the thing out for himself.

I have to stay on my porch all day
'Cause they say I went and ran away,
But I only went walking up the street
A-following after my two feet;
And there was a corner in the street,
So I went around it with my feet.

An' I met a dog who said, "Bow-Wow,
There's a pussy cat in those bushes now,"
So I helped him look for the pussy cat,
An' I thought, "It won't take long for that!"
But we couldn't find any pussy cat
Though we hunted a most long way at that.

Now I have to stay on my porch all day
'Cause they say they found me far away,
But I only went walking up the street
A-following after my two feet,
And when there were corners in the street
I just went around them with my feet!

Petes Get Only Four Singles From Cairns

PETES, WITH REGULARS OFF LINE-UP, ARE BADLY BEATEN GAME WITH KINGSTON PONIES

KINGSTON WIN 12-1.

Cairns Holds the Petes To Four Singles and is Given Errorless Support.

(By F. D. C.)

The Kingston Ponies changed ball fields yesterday, returning to their old home at the Fair grounds, but the shift didn't bring any fresh luck to the Petes who, with a makeshift team, were beaten 12 to 1. [illegible]nan Swanston, Harrison, Holyman and Batten were all absentees from the Petes' roster yesterday and Manager Johnston had to [illegible] Fred Ash from the outfield to first base and go into short stop himself, while the reserve strength on the bench consisted of Jeff Hardill with a lame arm.

Lefty Lennox drew the pitching assignment and the southpaw was hit hard and in bunches while under the bombardment his support fell away behind him and errors helped swell the Kingston total, although they batted in enough runs in the first inning to cinch the game. The Petes rarely play good ball in Kingston a[illegible] they didn't yesterday, the Ponies getting the jump in the first frame, and from then on the Johnstonites played like a beaten team.

Lefty Cairns turned in an excellent card on the mound for the Ponies allowing the Petes only four singles. Jimmy Hall with a pair of safeties, brother Jack, and Shiner Johnston himself were the only Peterboro batters to break through the left-hander's delivery and up to the eighth Cairns had been found for only one hit and looked sure to get a shut out. Hits in succession by Jack Hall and Johnston and a double play on which Hall scored prevented a whitewash.

Behind this clever twirling the Ponies played errorless ball, and Britton, Cherry and Thompson were particularly prominent by reason of their fast work.

At that they did not monopolize all the fielding honors for Jack Hall converted a nice catch into a double play and Ash slid aong the ground and made a circus gloved-hand catch of a low fly from Arniel's bat.

A funny angle of the game was, that although his teammates hit Lennox freely, Del Cherry, the leading batter in the Central League, was up five times without getting a hit.

The Petes did nothing in the first. Wolfe fanned. Rose fouled to Batstone and Jimmy Hall grounded to the same player.

Kingston's Big Start.

No so with the Ponies. Thompson was hit and Halbert singled to right, sending Thompson to third. On the play to get Thompson, which was very close and on which Helson apparently had the runner blocked off, Halbert went to second and both runners scored when Batstone singled sharply to left. Cherry fanned but Britton singled to right and Purvis drove a single of Johnston's foot, filling the bases. Teepel fouled to Collins, who made a nice catch. With two strikes on Arniel the Kingston catcher tripled over Jack Hall's head, scoring Batstone, Britton and Purvis. Cairns popped to Ash.

Thompson, first up for the Ponies, fanned. Halbert was hit but was doubled off first when Jack Hall made a shoe string catch of Batstone's drive to right.

Johnston fanned to start the Petes third. Collins walked but was forced at second by Lennox and Wolfe bounded to Cairns.

The Ponies got another counter. Cherry was thrown out by Helson. Britton was hit and stole second. Rose missed Purvis' fly back of second. Britton stole third and scored when Teepel forced Purvis. Rose to Johnston. Teepel in turn was forced by Arniel, Johnston to Rose.

The Petes first hit came in the fourth. Rose flied to Thompson. Jimmy Hall singled to right but Ash fouled to Purvis and Hall was forced at second on Helson's roller to Britton.

The Ponies broke loose again. Cairns singled to right. Thompson bunted for a sacrifice but Ash dropped Helson's throw and the batter was safe. Halbert singled over third scoring Cairns. Batstone sacrificed move the runners on a peg and after Cherry had fouled to Helson both Thompson and Halbert scored on Britton's double to right centre. Purvis doubled to the same territory to score Britton. Helson tossed out Teepel.

In the Petes' fifth Arniel took care of foul flies from Jack Hall and Johnston and Collins flied to Britton.

Ash made a sensational one-handed catch of Arniel's low fly. Cairns was called out on strikes and Thompson rolled to Helson.

Lennox was thrown out by Cairns to start the sixth. Britton threw out Wolfe and Rose fanned.

In Kingston's half Johnston fumbled Halbert's tap just long enough to lose the runner but Batstone and Cherry flied deeply to Wolfe in centre and Britton fanned.

Thompson robbed Jimmy Hall of a hit at the beginning of the seventh making a fine catch of a hard hit liner to left. Ash fouled to Arniel and Helson bounded to Halbert.

Purvis singled through short but was forced at second by Teepel, Rose to Johnston. Arniel rolled to Rose. Cairns hit to right, good for two bases but threw away a hit and cost his team a run by failing to touch first.

The youngest and oldest members of the Petes made it possible for the visitors to break into the scoring column in the eighth. Jack Hall lined a single over Britton's head. Johnston singled to right, sending Hall to third. When Collins hit into a double play, Halbert to Britton to Purvis, Hall trotted home during the twin killing. Lennox flied to Teepel.

Thompson opened Kingston's half with a single to right. Halbert flied to Hall. Batstone singled to centre. Cherry hit to Helson and when Rose left the throw to second get away Thompson scored and Batstone reached third. Wolfe dropped Britton's long sacrifice fly and Batstone scored and Britton reached second. Purvis flied to Jack Hall and Johnston tossed out Teepel.

READING REVIVES.

NEW YORK, July 15 (Canadian Press) — Faulkner and Maley were not good enough at Toronto yesterday and the Leafs were humbled by Baltimore 11 to 1. Quellich hit homer, his first two times at bat for the Orioles.

The Bisons and the Bears mingled for an even break on the former's stamping ground. The monarchs of the plains too the first with a ninth inning rally 5-4, but lost the second when Hankins mystified them 3-0.

Reading stopped Syracuse after the Stars had won ten straight games. Syracuse fans saw their team lose two games 12 to 6 and 3 to 2.

At Rochester the Skeeters of Jersey City won and lost, 5-3 and 4-3 respectively.

NEWARK, N.J., July 15 (Canadian Press).—Charles Davids, president of the Newark International Baseball Club, yesterday announced that he purchased from the Jersey City Club the contract of "Snooks" Dowd, infielder.

Davids also said he sold Pitcher Clyde Schroeder to the Hartford club of the Eastern Association.

CINCINNATI REDS INCREASE LEAD

BOSTON'S TRIUMPH.

NEW YORK, July 15 (Canadian Press).—With the Pittsburgh Pirates dropping two games yesterday, Cincinnati increased its lead by humbling Philadelphia 5 to 1. It was the third straight defeat for the Phillies. Carlson endeavored to work on the visitors' mound but retired. Cincinnati pounded him too hard in the first three innings. Carl Mays held the Pirates except in the sixth when Williams tripled and scored on Wright's single.

The New York Giants resumed their victorious western march by putting the Pirates down twice for scores of 12 to 8 and 5 to 2. Thirty-three thousand fans saw the visitors get away to a big lead in the first session and retain it. In the closing engagement, Fitzsimmons kept the Pirate hits scattered. Lindstrom made a homer, a triple and a single.

At Chicago yesterday Boston drove Charley Root off the hill in the first inning piling up a commanding lead to win 6-4. Benton had one bad inning when the locals bunched their hits.

St. Louis saw the Brooklyn Dodgers hit groups in the third and eighth innings yesterday for a total of 5 while the home team managed to get only 2.

The band then gave a delightful band concert in front of the Town Hall, which was greatly appreciated.

Mr. Anson Delong of Trenton was in the village on Sunday.

Mrs. William Boggs of Manvers spent Sunday visiting friends in the village.

Rev. Mr. and Mrs. A. Poulter and children are visiting Belleville friends for a few days.

TOURING AUSTRALIANS LIKELY TO SCORE WIN OVER LANCASHIRE

Scored 388 Runs For Three Wickets in First Innings.

FINE BATTING.

Bardsley and Woodful Mete Out Punishment To Bowlers.

LIVERPOOL, England, July 15 (Canadian Press cable).—The touring Australian cricketers this evening were well on the way to inflicting on Lancashire their second defeat when at the end of yesterday's play the score-board stood at 388 runs for the visitors with only three wickets down. This compares with 374 all out made by the Australians in their last game against Lancashire in the third week in June. On that occasion victory went to the Antipodeans by a margin of one innings and 77 runs.

The match yesterday opened in sunny weather with a fair attendance. The game in all its departments was slow, the visitors batting in leisurely fashion. However, they did pretty much as they liked with the bowling of Richard Tydlesley and Macdonald, and hit Iddon, the youthful medium-pace twirler, many times to the boundary.

The feature of yesterday's innings was the 155 rung up by Warren Bardsley, followed by the 95 of T. J. E. Andrews.

Scientific Demonstration

Bardsley and W. M. Woodfull began batting together. They gave a scientific demonstation of how bowlers should be met. The score mounted slowly but steadily and it was not until 116 runs had been secured that the first interruption came, Woodfull falling to a catch by Tydlesley off Macdonald.

Andrews then paired with Bardsley, and once more the game settled down to some fine run-getting, the former keeping the crowd delighted with some crisp wristwork. Bardsley and Andrews had continued the score until 302, when Andrews was dismissed, due to his over-anxiety to reach the century. He went in exactly the same way as Woodfull, snicking a rising ball into the hands of Paynter, off Macdonald.

W. H. Ponsford partnered Bardsley, but the latter succumbed at 340, with the only bad stroke of his innings. Richardson took his place and, batting with ease and confidence, he and Ponsford played out time.

RALLY IN NINTH SAVES NEW YORK

Score Tied and the League Champs Won in Twelfth.

SENATORS FALL.

NEW YORK, July 15 (Canadian Press) — The Yankees' sensational ninth inning rally in which five runs were scored after two were out, tying the count, featured their 12 inning victory over Detroit yesterday, 7 to 6. Whitehill held New York to three hits for eight innings but retired under fire in the ninth being replaced by Dauss. A triple by Gehrig drove Ruth home from first base in the 12th with the winning run. Koenig had opened the session with a single and Ruth forced him.

In the only other American League game played yesterday Chicago took Washington 10 to 2. Faber had the edge on Crouse and kept the home team's hits well scattered.

St. Louis could not play at Philadelphia because of rain while the Cleveland Boston contest succumbed to wet grounds.

NINETEENTH VICTORY.

OTTAWA, Ont., July 15.—(Canadian Press).—The English touring football team scored its nineteenth consecutive victory here last evening defeating a picked Ottawa eleven by 3 goals to one and boosted their goal average to 103 goals for compared to 17 against. Over 4,000 spectators attended the game, the biggest gate that ever turned out to a soccer match in the capital. While one sided, as indicated by the score, the play was always interesting on account of the brilliancy of the tourists and the determined efforts of the home team. The visitors played beautiful soccer, their accurate passing, clever combination and manipulation of the ball being a revelation to the Ottawa team and its supporters.

NEW YORK IS IN BOXING FRENZY

Berlenbach Defends Title To-night Against French Canadian Delaney.

50,000 PEOPLE.

NEW YORK, July 15 (Canadian Press).—Three years have passed since New York, where almost all things are common, has known the boxing frenzy it exhibits to-day—for to-night, in the roped square in Brooklyn, the light heavyweight champion of the world will defend his crown against the man many assert should wear it.

Fully 50,000 persons are expected to throng Ebbet's Field to see the encounter which is scheduled for 15 rounds, although few expect it to go that distance, and the financial returns will approximate half a million dollars.

Three years ago, Jack Dempsey defended his heavyweight title against Luis Angel Firpo of Argentine amid just such scenes. Only a heavyweight battle could bring the enthusisam manifest here.

Hundreds of newspapermen from as far away as Mexico, representing almost every state in the Union are here or on their way and promoters estimate that there will be at least 300 writers at or near the ringside.

Delaney, the challenger, remains the favorite in the betting by about 6 to 5, which very likely will become even money at ring time.

BELLEVILLE WINS OVER DELORO NINE

Winners Play Errorless Ball, Shutting Out Home Team.

BONAR LAW, July 15. — Special. — Under ideal weather conditions Deloro played their return exhibition game with the Belleville senior team on the home diamond on Wednesday afternoon, and retired beaten by the score of 6 to 0.

It is singular that the number six, which has represented the Smelters' score in so many games, should in this particular game tell against them in their first scoreless game.

The fixture attracted the best crowd of the season and the attendance of Marmora community band contributed greatly to its attractiveness.

Belleville obtained one run in the first innings and Deloro in their half came near equalizing, Boudreau grounding out with Jack on third. In the second innings, with two men out, Hagerman doubled and scored on a passed ball to first. Palmer singled and scored on Oulette's hit, the latter being forced out at second by Weir. Deloro went out in order. No score ensued in the third and fourth frames, both team tightening up. In the fifth innings Belleville finished their scoring for the rest of the game, hitting well for the three extra runs which came their way. Deloro failed to register in their half. Ralph, the southpaw, replaced Shea in the sixth, being in his best form, and the visiting batsmen were denied further success. Deloro again came within an ace of scoring in the final innings, but luck went against them, Oulette being in fine form and well supported. The game was well handled and was interesting to watch throughout. Umpires, Kerr at plate, Lynch on bases.

COGS WILL PLAY CURVE LAKE TO-DAY

To Play Postponed Game at Indian Village To-night.

This is a great day for Curve Lake. Cognawagas, with their backs to the wall, visit the Indian village this evening to play a postponed game of the first half of the East Peterborough League schedule. A loss will put the Cogs out of the race, and a win will tie them with Keene for the first half. The important thing about this game is the eagerness of the Indians to register a win, notwithstanding the fact that they are out of the running. Neither have they any great affection for Keene. The Indians are playing ball for the fun they get out of the game, and they are just as good losers as they are winners.

LADIES' SOFTBALL NEXT WEDNESDAY

Secords Team From Danforth League To Play C.G.E. Ladies.

Another great softball game will be played at Riverside Park on Wednesday, July 21, between the Secord ladies team of the Danforth League of Toronto and the C.G.E. ladies' team of Peterborough.

Miss Mae Manuel, their pitcher, is considered one of the most consistent pitchers in the League, and in her last game with Danforth she allowed only seven hits.

They are motoring in one of the big 'buses, accompanied by about forty people. Miss Mabel Ray, secretary of the Ontario Association, will also be in attendance, and Mr. Stubbings, president of the Danforth League. Other visitors will be Mr. Phil. Moore, business manager for Danforth, Alderman Somerville, president of the Danforth Club, and Miss Anderson of Ottawa, president of the Ontario Association.

The softball games arranged by Manager O'Brien are proving great attractions, and there is no doubt of this game being just as fast as any game yet seen in Peterborough.

CHANNEL WINS.

Frank Perks Defeated By Wind and Fog.

DOVER, Eng., July 15 (Canadian Press). — Frank Perks, well-known Birmingham swimmer, was unsuccessful in his attempt to swim the English Channel early to-day. Perks entered the water at Cape Griz Nez, France, last night, with the sea smooth and all conditions favorable. A heavy wind sprang up, however, raising a choppy sea, and a fog adding to his difficulties, Perks was forced to give up.

THEATRE

"PLEASURE BUYERS" A REAL THRILLER

Irene Rich Stars in New Murder Mystery Picture

"The Pleasure Buyers," the Warner Bros. picture which opened yesterday at the Regent Theatre for a run of two days, proved to be about as exciting a mystery picture as the screen has given us. Adapted from Arthur Somers Roche's Cosmopolitan Magazine story, it preserves the suspense of the original, while adding to it an unexpected denouement that will surprise those who have read the story.

As it unfolds upon the screen, the picture is enough to baffle the detective abilities of the most expert in the unravelling of mystery plots. It is one of those thrillers in which everybody concerned is under suspicion, so that if you are pretty clever you are likely to pick the least suspicious person as the criminal in the case.

The case concerns the murder of Gene Cassenas, a gay society favorite, who is shot while sitting in his luxurious home at a smart resort. The bullet has come through the window from the dark outside.

Back of Cassenas lies a career that has afforded justification for half a dozen murders, and suspicion finally concentrates upon half a dozen people. But we are not going to tell you who the guilty one was. The solution of the mystery calls for a visit to the Regent Theatre.

"The Pleasure Buyers" is adroitly conceived, beautifully produced, and excellently acted by a cast that includes Irene Rich, Clive Brook, Gayne Whitman, Charles Conklin, June Marlowe, Don Alvarado, Frank Campeau, Winter Hall, Edward Peil, and Frank Leigh. The smooth direction was due to Chet Withey, and those expert scenarists, Hope Loring and Louis D. Lighton, did themselves proud with Mr. Roche's story.

Irene Rich, of course, is the star, and she was never more lovely than as the gay society woman who finds herself enmeshed in the murder mystery. Her playing is marked by such deft, smart sophistication that it stands out as a masterpiece of the player's art. The cast of well known players who appear with her give her excellent support.

SECRETS OF STARS INSIDE BASEBALL
By Billy Evans

BY ROGERS HORNSBY.
Champion Batsman—National League.

Practice makes perfect. That holds good for batting. Too much importance cannot be placed on the value of batting practice. I love to hit that old apple any time and batting practice is always all too short to suit me.

I have found that it is best to first strive for accuracy rather than distance. Try to time the ball: pay attention to form: follow through with your swing and get the snap at the wrist.

Close attention must also be paid to the stance. A right-hander should never pull away from the plate with his left foot as he steps into the ball.

Al Simmons of the Philadelphia Athletics is the only player I know of who pulls away from the pitch, yet is a great hitter. Such a style usually kills off the batsman's power, destroys his swing by making a follow through difficult.

It doesn't seem to bother Simmons, however, because he doesn't lose as much power as it seems. Simmons had long arms, uses a very long bat and hugs the plate rather closely. Hence he gets a good cut at the ball despite the pull of the left foot.

Don't be a wild-pitch hitter: such a batsman, as a rule, isn't hard to fool. Strive for accuracy in timing and pick the style ball you like to hit. Distance is certain to follow when you perfect these two things.

A good batter adjusts his stance to suit pitching conditions. With a speed-ball pitcher it is usually best to take a bit of distance between yourself and the plate. Hug the plate on a pitcher who is partial to curves.

Always move straight through after you step into the pitch. That makes for perfect timing and eventually will get distance.

TOURISTS SCORE OFFICIALS' METHOD

Treatment at Ellis Island Is Most Insulting, They Say.

NEW YORK, July 15.—Caught in the toils of Governmental red tape, twelve British tourists, most of them women, visited Ellis Island Monday, and emerged with their esteem for the United States badly damaged.

Just who was responsible for the incident is uncertain. The tourists blame the Immigration Department; the Immigration Department puts the responsibility on Canada, and the Cunard Line says it was all a misunderstanding of the definition of the term "tourist, third class."

"Insulting," They Claim.

The twelve, arriving on the Cunard liner Tuscania, were held up after other tourist third-class passengers had landed. They said the immigration inspectors who examined them were "most insulting," but Assistant Immigration Commissioner Uhl denied this, and insisted they were treated as all other third-class passengers are. They were told they would have to go to Ellis Island.

The final outrage to their lacerated feelings came when the women were forced to strip to the waist in the presence of a number of immigrant women and were put through a physical examination.

They said that they had to undergo the examination not only by United States officials, but also by a representative of the Immigration Service of Canada, to which country they were bound.

Yesterday Miss E. P. Lloyd, head mistress of Granby School, Liverpool, and Miss Laura Pierson of Liverpool cut short their visit to the United States and left for Toronto, vowing never to return to these unfriendly shores. Others followed with similar intentions.

Order By Ottawa.

Amid the tangle of indignant charges, denials and counter-charges, it was learned that the Canadian Government issued an order that all British subjects on the way to Canada via the United States must be questioned by Canadian authorities. Mr. Uhl said the immigration authorities merely were following that order.

At the Cunard Line offices, however, it was said that Canada is not interested in enforcing the order strictly.

HELPFUL HINTS BY GOLFING STARS

By Special Arrangement With Colliers' Magazine.

ARTHUR HAVERS—MATCH-WINNING SHOTS.

Long driving, judging by all that is said and written about it, appeals to the golfer's imagination and sense of self-satisfaction more strongly than any other factor in the game. Assuming that it is straight as well as long, it is certainly a very big help on the road to victory. But if I may express the opinion of one who is declared to be a longer driver than most, I would say that very rarely does this dispensation stand out definitely as a match-winning influence.

It is a good start to be ahead of the other man from the tee, but it is by no means half the battle or even a quarter of it. What it does is to afford one a feeling of contentment and the advantage of seeing what club the opponent takes for his second shot and what happens to that shot.

But when he is of the philosophic frame of mind and does not fret at being outdriven by 10 or 20 yards, his handicap in the tee shots is a slight matter that may be far more than remedied by good approaching and good putting.

This is the combination that decides the issue in most matches and competitions.

HECKMAN WILL BE SENT IN TO CHECK PONIES

Petes' Ace Will Face Lefty Cairns in Saturday's Game.

A DUEL EXPECTED.

With Full Line Up On Petes Hope To Turn Trick in Home Game.

The Kingston Ponies will provide the opposition at Riverside Park on Saturday, and with a full line-up in action, the Petes are hopeful of wiping out yesterday's lacing by taking the Daley men into camp. Al. Heckman will be assigned the task of taming the Ponies. He did it to perfection on Dominion Day, not a Kingston player reaching second base, and will make a big effort to repeat the performance on Saturday. Manager Joe Daley will send Bruce Cairns right back at the Petes. He was in great fettle yesterday, holding the Johnstonites to four hits, and the duel between the League's two leading pitchers will give an added zest to Saturday's engagement. The game will be called at 3 o'clock sharp.

BASEBALL SCHEDULE.

The following is the schedule for the Bantam Series of the City Baseball League. All games will be played at the King Edward School Grounds on Saturday afternoons. The home teams will supply the umpires. Games to start sharply at the time stated on the schedule. There will be no play-off, the team winning the most games will be City Champions.

LADY LIBERALS

tain responsibility for the last defeat, he said, but assured his hearers that he was positive the Liberals could again carry the banner to victory in the forthcoming contest.

J. J. Hartley spoke of the excellent work done by the ladies at election time, and received much applause when he said that he was sure that many who had failed to register their votes for Mr. Gordon in the last election would be sure to do so in the Fall.

J. Dewart said that a great deal was at stake in the coming election. He referred to the popular budget brought down during the past session by the King Government, and to the gratitude which should be felt by the people for the work of statesmen in this regard. He was sure that every broad-thinking man and woman would be behind the Liberal party in the coming trial of strength.

Miss Jobbitt reminded the ladies that the date of the annual meeting had been changed from May to September, and asked them to express an opinion as to whether elections for the ladies' club should be carried on as heretofore, on the recommendation of a nominating committee, or by open vote from the floor. A motion was passed, recommending the latter procedure. Elections for the Ladies' Club will take place on the first Monday in October. Miss Jobbitt added a word, asking for loyalty for the party leader and the candidate, whoever the latter might be.

SUES HIS WIFE

EDMONTON, Alta., July 15. — Canadian Press. — Determined to stop this vicious practice of wives occasionally tipping their hubbies into the ditch while in control of the family car, an unusual action was heard before Mr. Justice Walsh in the Supreme Court recently, when James Benjamin Smith brought action against his wife Minnie, charging that she had caused him considerable damage as a result of a motor car mishap last summer. He asked for $2500 general, and $335 special damages, attesting that while making a trip from the city to Calgary in July last, with his wife at the wheel of the car, going 30 miles an hour, the auto suddenly skidded on a patch of greasy roadbed and was ditched. His clothes were burned by acids, and he received personal injuries.

Judgment in the case was reserved.

The flames broke out about five o'clock in the kitchen of the home of Thomas D'Allaire, merchant and were not brought under control until this afternoon under the combined efforts of Ste. Marie brigade and detachments of fire fighters sent from Quebec and Levis. Dr. Melady, dentist, had to be taken to hospital in Quebec for treatment of injuries to his eye received during the fight.

MUST DROP BUS LINE.

Highways Department Acts at Instance of Hydro Radial Commission.

WINDSOR, July 15. — Officials of the Border stage line were notified yesterday by the Department of Highways of Ontario to discontinue the bus service inaugurated between Windsor and Pike Creek. The buses, however, were operating as usual yesterday afternoon. The demand of the government is backed by the Hydro-Electric Railway officials who say the new line competes with the Tecumseh division of the railway.

"This line has been operated at a deficit for more than three years and the decrease in revenue is greater now since the bus route has been operated," said T. U. Fairlie, consulting engineer of the Hydro Commission.

"The company franchise does not apply to the river front road over which the bus line operates. If that part of the line not served by our suburban line to Tecumseh will support a motor bus route in addition to the cars, we will give the necessary service."

Officers of the bus company indicated they will fight; petitions are being circulated among members of the two golf clubs on Lake St. Clair, and the summer cottage colony along the route, asking Premier Ferguson to intercede in behalf of the company.

"We are giving a service the Hydro does not provide, and should be allowed to operate," one of the company officials said.

Baserunner steals second but after being declared safe by the umpire overslides the base and is touched out. Does he receive credit for a stolen base?

* * *

The baserunner when he so overslides and is retired, is not credited with a stolen base, even though he did beat the throw of the catcher.

The oversliding of the base is simply a continuation of the original effort which began when the player made the break for second.

When he did reach the bag before being retired, his failure to keep possession of the bag, due to the fact that he overslid the base, kills the chance for a stolen base, because he failed to accomplish his original purpose, to become the occupant of second base.

No man can climb but beyond the limitations of his own character. — Morley.

DISCONTENT ARISING AMONGST FASCISTI

Petty Trouble Breaks Out Amongst the Two Governing Bodies.

ROME, July 15 (Canadian Press) —A current of discontent has been discovered among extremist factions of the Fascist and stern measures have been adopted to curb it. The trouble is attributed to the friction between the local and the central Fascisti officials and an unwillingness of some of the extreme Fascists sections to accept the ruling of the central body.

The local press says the Fascist party intends to go to the limit in crushing such as Dupanloup's, and has determined that petty squabbles must be forgotten in order that all the nation's energy may be concentrated on solving the national problems.

There is no change in the general character of the market, as a whole certain issues and weakness make its appearance in other quarters. The selling in the oils for instance has been brought about by tired holders who were getting rather impatient. The bringing in of several new fields is no need for worry. The rails are waiting for the important decision regarding rates in the north-west. Another session of the same general type as we have had the past few days will be witnessed again to-day that is regularly strong. Bank of England rate unchanged at 5 per cent. Middlewest Utilities sells 70,000 shares of 7 per cent. preferred stock to Hill, Joiner and Co., who will make public offering.

Demand sterling $4.85 1-6; francs $2.46½; lire, $3.37⅛.

Stocks Show Strength In Morning's Dealings

TORONTO, July 15 (Canadian Press).—Amulet and McIntyre were active in the trading on the Standard Mining Exchange to-day, with the former selling up two points at 1.33, and the latter off 5 cents a share at 24.85. Noranda exhibited strength at 16.60 for a net gain of 10 cents per share, while Dome recovered somewhat from yesterday's close, selling 24 cents higher at 11.25.

Gold Hill showed strength with a two point advance at 59, but Teck Hughes was weak, five cents down at 3.81. The latter announced five cents per share extra dividend. Wright Hargraves gained 15 points to 8.50, while Hollinger was unchanged at 19.65.

Nickel Very Active On Rather Dull Market

TORONTO, July 15.— (Canadian Press.) — The International Nickel again monopolized a spotlight in the trading on the Toronto Stock Exchange, the rest of the list being extremely dull and inactive. Up until noon 1395 shares of nickel changed hands, closing quotation showing net gain for session of 1 quarter at 39 1-4 after touching high of 40.

Limited interest was shown in several unlisted stocks, Noranda gaining 11 cents to close at 16.60. Page Hersey preferred registered a decline of 1 point to 101 1-2 and common was also off 1-4 at 48 1-4. Imperial Oil was weak, declining 2 1-2 points to 32 1-2. Twin City ranged from unchanged at 70 3-4 to 1-4 up at 71. Massey Harris common gained 1-2 to 58 3-4, while preferred was unchanged at 94 3-4. Dome Mines was weaker, being 10 to 15 cents down at 11.10. Dominion Bank advanced 1-2 to 212.

Resistance To Selling Shown By Bond Houses

NEW YORK, July 15.— (Canadian Press.) — Industrial, public utility and foreign bonds to-day offered resistance to the selling movement which held back most of the railroad issues. Trading was moderately active with price changes still showing marked irregularity.

Scattered profit taking accounted for declining tendency of the carrier obligations, some of which had been conspicously active and strong in the recent sessions. Among issues which were shaded a trifle were the St. Paul 4's and Baltimore and Ohio 5's and 6's. Buying interest centered chiefly on the miscellaneous industrial lines. Dodge Brothers convertible 6's followed upward trend of this stock and fractional gains were recorded by American Smelting 5's. Despite the fall in the French francs, below 2 1-2, French bonds held firm while German and South American issues continued to improve.

With Unofficial Estimates Wheat Drops In Price

CHICAGO, July 15 (Canadian Press).—Wheat took a sharp early swing downward here to-day, influenced a good deal by the unexpected set-backs in the quotations at Liverpool and by the unofficial Canadian crop estimates greatly in excess of the official forecast, opening 3-4c to 1 3-4c off, Chicago wheat market rallied somewhat but quickly went lower again. Corn, oats and provisions were easy, corn starting at ¼c to 5-8c decline, and later showing a slight further set-back.

The north-western crop developments were being narrowly watched by the wheat traders to-day. According to one comprehensive summary, good rains in a number of the districts throughout Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Montana have been of material benefit, with some indication that Montana will raise a larger crop than a year ago. On the other hand, dry weather and high temperature in other parts of the four states have resulted in a further deterioration.

Some private estimates to-day of 1926 Canadian wheat production put the total at as much as 415,000,000 bushels.

WORLD'S RECORD.

Cow Makes New Record For Milk and Butter Fat.

NEW YORK, July 15. — Canadian Press. — A new world's record for milk and butter fat by a four year old Jersey cow, was claimed to-day for Pretoria Oxford Janet, owned by Foster Whitaker, a 17 year old Vancouver, B. C., high school student. In a 305 day supervised test the cow proddced 14,035.2 pounds of milk and 72 pounds of butter which is a record for that breed.

FASTEST FLY GOES 14 MILES MINUTE

Man Will Be Able to Circle World in Day.

After studying the flight of birds for centuries, man at last has learned to fly; and in doing so he has outdistanced his living models in speed, in altitude and in carrying ability.

Now a study of the marvelous flying mechanism of the world's speediest known creature, a South American fly known as Cephenemwia, has led at least one scientist to suggest the possibility that eventually birdmen may nearly tripie the present airplane speed record of 300 miles an hour.

Dr. Charles H. T. Townsend, American entomologist stationed at Itaquaquescetube, Brazil, points out that if we can learn to duplicate the action of the Cephenemyia we shall be able to fly around the earth between sunrise and sunset of the longest summer day, or in about seventeen hours. To do this over the 13,855-mile circuit at the latitude of New York, we should have to travel constantly at a speed of 815 miles an hour, or almost fourteen miles a minute! This is as fast as the speed of projectiles of certain types of artillery.

It sounds like a "pipe dream." And yet, as Dr. Townsend recalls, it was not so long ago that people gasped at the thought of traveling "a mile a minute." He reminds us, too, that it is not beyond the possible for man to duplicate with machines what other creatures have accomplished in natural locomotion.

The fact remains that Cephenemyia does cover 815 miles an hour, or nearly four hundred yards a second. With tremendous power stored in a body of extremely light weight, it moves so swiftly that it can be seen only as a blur or streak of color.

No one knows what he can do till he tries. Syrus.

NINE WOUNDED AND ONE DEAD BY GUN SHOTS

Attempt To Hold Up Royal Bank in Winnipeg Is Foiled.

THREE BANDITS.

Theatre Crowd in New York Witnesses Battle With Robbers.

WINNIPEG, Man., July (Canadian Press).—One man was shot and seriously wounded when three bandits, armed with guns, held up the Royal Bank branch at the corner of Portage and Good Streets here this morning. The three robbers entered the bank and ordered "Hands up." John Matteson, painter, who was banking some money, leaped forward and one of the bandits fired, the bullet lodging in Matteson's side. Apparently unnerved by the shooting, the robbers then fled in a waiting automobile.

One Dead, Six Wounded

NEW YORK, July 16 (Canadian Press).—Glen Miller, 35, of Buffalo, died this morning from wounds received in a gun fight with detectives at Broadway and 48th Street on Wednesday evening. Miller had tried to rob a restaurant and had been brought to bay by pursuing detectives. The exchange of shots in the thick of the theatre crowd caused great excitement. Six persons were wounded by stray bullet, but none fatally.

King Uses Prerogative To Save Life Of Horse

LONDON, July 16.—(United Press.)—King George has used his prerogative as commander-in-chief of the Army to save the life of a horse.

Hearing that a twenty-year-old horse belonging to the crack Life Guard Regiment was to be destroyed because it had become useless in old age, the King issued an official order to prevent the animal's death.

In issuing the reprieve, the King stated that the horse's remaining years would be spent in comfort.

CHAUTAUQUA TO OPEN SATURDAY

Tent Is Being Erected To-day —Canadian Artists Coming.

BIG PROGRAMME.

Up on Central Park the big brown canvas tent is being set up and things in general are being put in shape for the five days of Chautauqua entertainment starting tomorrow afternoon. The programmes this year are better by far than they have been for several years.

A rare treat will be given to Peterborough folks who come out on Monday evening to hear Canada's own performers, Ruthven McDonald and His Highlanders in a concert of Scotch songs and readings, also miscellaneous popular numbers.

The opening concert on Saturday afternoon will be given by the Paul Vernon Concert Company directed by Paul Vernon, director of the Violin Department of the Cosmopolitan School of Music, Chicago. This same company will also give the prelude to the evening lecture, "The Science Story," by R. B. Ambrose, which is a lecture-demonstration on electricity and its possibilities.

Besides the many other features on the programme Peterborough people will also have an opportunity of seeing "Applesauce," the uproarious comedy which enjoyed a long run in New York and Chicago. Also Solis' Marimba Band, the internationally famous band of Central American musicians in a concert of classical and popular selections.

The sale of season tickets has been progressing in good shape and from indications there will be a larger crowd attending this year than ever before. Season tickets may be purchased in front of the tent on Saturday, at The Examiner office, and from Dr. John J. Craig, and G. A. Gillespie.

Liberal Repudiates Charge Of Corruption In Prince Albert Vote

Dr. Robertson, President of Liberal Association Declares Hon. Hugh Guthrie's Charges Based on False Information or Desire To Mislead Electors.

NO EVIDENCE THAT UNQUALIFIED VOTERS WERE ALLOWED TO VOTE IN BY-ELECTION

PRINCE ALBERT, Sask., July 16 (Canadian Press).—Statements referring to the Prince Albert bye-election, at which former Premier King was elected to the last House, attributed in press dispatches to Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Minister of Defence, were the subject of an emphatic denial yesterday by Dr. Thomas Robertson, president of the Prince Albert Federal Liberal Association.

A Canadian Press dispatch from Renfrew, Ont., Tuesday night contained the following paragraph in reporting an address by Mr. Guthrie:

"Mackenzie King's election in Prince Albert was touched upon by the speaker, who declared that the former Premier had received the full voting strength of the polls although in practically every one of them there were voters who were dead and away from the district."

Dr. Robertson characterized these statements as "either arising from grossly wrong information given him (Mr. Guthrie) or as deliberate false statements for the purpose of misleading the electors in Eastern Canada."

Dr. Robertson Denies

Dr. Robertson's statement follows:

"If Mr. Guthrie's speech was correctly reported," he has either been given gross misinformation by some person who has no knowledge whatsoever as to the manner in which the campaign in the recent bye-election was conducted or he has made a deliberate false statement for the purpose of misleading electors in Eastern Canada as to the manner in which Mr. King was elected in this constituency.

"A careful perusal of the records of the election in question shows the full polling strength was not polled at any poll in the constituency. There is no evidence whatsoever that any voters who were dead or who were absent from the constituency polled votes.

Guthrie Reproved

"If the Hon. Mr. Guthrie is willing to take the full responsibility of having made this statement, he ought to be ready to follow up and prove the charges.

"It ill befits any man in public life, let alone a cabinet minister, to utter such glaring falsehoods from a public platform on the eve of a general election. The Hon. Mr. Guthrie ought either to follow up these statements and prove them or make a public apology to the people of Canada for having uttered such palpable falsehoods. The people of this constituency would like to have the opportunity of hearing Mr. Guthrie make the same charges at a public meeting here and will give him the opportunity to do so."

FIRE DESTROYS GENERAL STORE AT SPRINGVILLE

STRONG WIND.

Fire destroyed the general store and residence of Valentine Tully last night about 5.00 o'clock at Springville. The fire semed to originate in the store room at the back of the store, where the coal oil stove is kept in the summer and it is believed that the stove exploded and as there was plenty of coal oil in this store room the fire rapidly spread.

Mrs. Tully was on the front verandah putting the baby to sleep and when she returned to the store room it was a mass of flames. A general alarm was sent in and although the farmers around responded very rapidly, the fire had too much of a start to save very much of the furniture, which was practically all destroyed.

A strong wind was blowing from the west and soon sparks from the burning building had started the shingles on the nearby roofs, but the men were able to keep it from spreading any further. At six o'clock there was nothing left but smouldering ruins and a few articles of furniture scattered along the highway.

It is thought that not a very large insurance was carried. Mr. Tully has been keeping store at Springville for about five years and was doing quite a large business throughout the whole country, as he had several delivery routes.

It is quite a number of years since Springville was the scene of a fire. There was a time when this hamlet was quite a little village, but fire through time has burnt two hotels, one or two stores, and a large drill shell, also several houses.

ANGRY PROTEST AGAINST SOVIET AID TO MINERS

"STRENGTHEN LAW."

Demand To Withdraw British Recognition of Russian Government.

LONDON, July 16 (Canadian Press).—Strong language was heard at a big anti-Bolshevik demonstration organized in Albert Hall last night by various members of Parliament, who are angry at the Government's tolerant attitude toward Russian aid to the British miners. A resolution was carried by acclamation protesting against "the subversive activities of the Soviets" and offering "full support to the Government in any steps dealing with these."

Col. John Gretton, Conservative, presided, and a large number of commoners attended. Sir Hamar Greenwood, also a Conservative and former Chief Secretary for Ireland, said that if the Home Secretary, Sir Wm. Joynson-Hicks, lacked the necessary power to deal with such interference, he should ask Parliament to strengthen the law, "to deal with those trying to wreck our civilization."

Commander Oliver Locker-Lampson, Conservative, taunted the Government with being afraid that withdrawal of recognition of the Soviet Government might be treated as tantamount to a declaration of war, and exclaimed:

"I should like to ask whether the persistent meddling of the Bolshevists in our affairs is not tantamount to ten declarations of war."

Commander Locker - Lampson wanted the Government to take a referendum of the country on the question of withdrawal of recognition.

FRENCH GOVERNMENT ASKS UNLIMITED POWERS TO FACILITATE EFFORT TO STABILIZE THE FRANC AND LESSEN NERVOUSNESS IN FINANCIAL CIRCLES

Bill Will Be Exercised in the Passing of Measures Fixing Rates of Customs and Negotiating Loans To Defend Currency.

COMMUNISTS AND SOCIALISTS OPPOSE.

Bitter Feeling Manifested Against United States and the New Low Level of Franc Is Attributed to Manipulation in New York.

PARIS, July 16 (Canadian Press) Spurred by sterling at 200 and the dollar at 41, a new low record for the franc, the Government has decided to ask Parliament to vote the unlimited powers bill, within forty-eight hours after discussion on that measure opens.

The Cabinet Council yesterday approved the text of the bill on which M. Caillaux is working, and it will be referred to the finance committee of the Chamber to-day, with exhortation for all possible haste so that the bill may be ready for consideration by Tuesday next.

But this means another week's delay and increased nervousness in financial circles as well as among small operators on the Bourse and the middle classes, and the temper of the country appears to be rising.

Use of Unlimited Powers.

The bill will contain only one article and one annex, which explains within what limits the Government intends to use the unlimited powers to legislate by decree. The deliberations of the Cabinet Council have been kept secret but reliable information is that the Government demands the right to legislate on all questions of a purely financial nature, such as fixing the rate of taxes and customs and the negotiation of loans, the proceeds of which might be used in defence of the francs. No decision on purely administrative reforms could be made under this bill.

Cancel Contracts.

Those measures which it is the purpose of the Government to enact as officially announced, include: "First—All further recruiting and hiring of functionaries shall be immediately stopped; second—all contracts for new buildings or repairs on state-owned edifices, even if these are among the credits of the current budget, shall be cancelled; third—instructions will be given all Ministers that all the staffs of central administrations must be brought back to the number obtaining in 1914; fourth—so soon as the Government has obtained full powers, measures will be taken to curb the consumption of foodstuffs and other commodities necessitating purchases abroad.

The satisfaction, almost enthusiasm, with which the Anglo-French debt agreement was greeted, is mitigated by ever-increasing doubt that Washington will follow London's lead in the matter of a safeguard without which the Mellon-Berenger accord is almost certain to go down to defeat.

Bitterness Against U.S.

The tone of the discussion in the Parliament lobbies and the press is becoming more bitter against the United States, and it was freely said in the Chamber yesterday that the renewed collapse of the franc was due to manipulations in New York for the purpose of bringing the French Parliament to reason, as the Americans see it. The Left groups are especially irreconcilable against ratification.

The Chamber of Deputies began its morning sitting with ten deputies present in the deliberation rooms; the others gathered in the lobbies to discuss the financial situation. There was much opposition to granting the Government special powers. The Communists and Socialists announced that they would oppose such a measure to the bitter end.

Hoot the Sultan.

The supporters of the Cabinet tried persuasive methods with the members of the Left, but they received scant satisfaction, especially from the Communists, who preferred to adjourn to the outside gallery to boo and hoot the Sultan of Morocco, as he rode by with President Doumergue.

Culver City Man and His Wife Identify Mrs. McPherson As Woman They Saw in Car On Day Of Disappearance

LOS ANGELES, Cal., July 16 (Canadian Press).—O. A. Vick, of Culver City, and his wife confronted Aimee Semple McPherson before the county grand jury late yesterday and positively identified her as a woman they saw in an automobile passing through Culver City in the direction of Los Angeles, from the ocean beach at about 3 or 4 p.m. on the day the evangelist disappeared, while bathing at Santa Monica.

The testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Vick corroborates that of Police Captain M. O. Barnard and Mrs. Barnard, of Culver City, who previously told the jury of seeing Mrs. McPherson under the same circumstances.

REAR END COLLISION IN CITY SMASHES FOUR FREIGHT CARS; TRAIN CREW LEAPS TO SAFETY

Engineer, Fireman and Road Foreman Escape With Few Bruises.

CABOOSE SHATTERED.

Two Canadian National freight trains crashed in a rear-end collision near Brock Street this morning about 11 o'clock. Four cars were completely destroyed. One car is lying in the creek and another is hanging over the bridge in a very insecure position. The caboose of the first train was thrown clear of the tracks, carrying away a telephone pole in its passage, while the entire front of the engine was badly damaged.

The men on the second engine jumped from the cab when they saw that a crash was imminent. G. Saunders, the engineer, had his back twisted. W. Beattie, the fireman, escaped with a wrenched ankle.

W. J. Fee, road foreman, of Lindsay, who was travelling on the engine when the collision occurred, also jumped and escaped with a few bruises.

No details as to the cause of the accident could be learned, but it is said that the way freight was lying just north of Brock Street waiting for orders to move. It is said that the conductor of the train thought he heard the oncoming train, and in an endeavor to stop it went out along the track with a red flag.

The second train was an extra, hauling 54 cars of merchandise, and due to the curve in the track, was right on top of the first train before the crew became aware of it.

The passenger service was somewhat disrupted, the train due to arrive here at noon from Lindsay being diverted at Omemee Junction and routed via Millbrook to Peterborough. Railroad officials stated that they expected to have the tracks clear by 5.30 to-night.

Motoring Along Road Man Strikes Brown Bear

ST. THOMAS, July 16.—Herbert F. Williams, of Port Talbot claims the distinction of being the first man to kill a bear with an automobile. While motoring from Wardsville to London last night, Mr. Williams reported seeing two small animals, which he thought were pigs, coming toward him on the highway. He was unable to prevent striking one, and when he got out and inspected the injured animal he found it was a small brown bear. Its mate scurried through the fence and across the field. Mr. Williams despatched the injured animal with a hammer. He suggests that the bears may have wandered down the Thames Valley from Rondeau or some other preserve.

BISHOP'S PEACE PROPOSALS ARE WELL RECEIVED

Miners Refuse To Allow Trades Union Congress To Intervene.

BALDWIN WRITES.

Unions Turn Down Appeal To Place Embargo on Coal.

LONDON, July 16 (Canadian Press).—The Press Association says that the members of the executive committee of the British Miners' Federation stated this afternoon that the peace proposal suggested by a group of Anglican bishops has been accepted by the committee.

The Miners' executive was quoted as saying that the proposal to return to work for four months under the present conditions had been accepted with but few minor alterations. He expressed a belief that there would be new negotiations undertaken next week.

The miners' spokesman said that if new negotiations occurred, it would be through the intervention of the Bishops' appeal, rather than that of the owners which would unlock the doors to peace, he asserted.

The miners' executive committee held a conference this morning and the members later departed to their districts. It was learned that they had received an early visit from a prominent member of the Industrial Christian Fellowship and another church body, both of which organizations had discussed the mining situation with the executive committee on Wednesday.

It is understood that the miners have definitely refused to allow intervention in their struggle by the Trades Union Congress beyond financial assistance. There is talk of help being expected from the United States to which a delegation of the Miners' Federation may possibly get.

SIX DROWNED; CRAFT RAMMED

Five Men and One Woman Are Victims in Lake St. Louis.

ONE ESCAPED.

MONTREAL, July 16.—(Canadian Press.)— Five men and one woman on the tug boat Emma L. were drowned in Lake St. Louis when their craft was rammed last night by the grain boat Brulin, it was learned to-day. One man escaped from the tug before she sank.

The victims were Rose Paulhus, 18, Sorel; Captain Joe Bebeau, widower, Sorel; Henri Guadette, engineer, Sorel; Porela Cournoyer, second engineer, Sorel; Armand Porier, deck hand, no address; Antonio Pellettier, deck hand, Montreal. Sylvio Mongeon, fireman, escaped by jumping at the time of the accident.

He presumably was rescued by the crew of the Brulin.

TENTH DEATH WITHIN A WEEK

Lightning and Fires Menace Western Province — Rain Predicted.

HOMES BURNED.

SEATTLE, Wash., July 16. — (Canadian Press.)—Although forest fires continue to devastate the valuable Pacific North-west timber stands, reports of rain were received from Western Canada. The United States' weather bureau predicted to-day that rising humidity would improve conditions.

The tenth life to be taken by lightning and fires within a week was recorded yesterday when Severino Dalpra, blacksmith of Nelson, B.C., was killed by a falling tree near Hall, B.C. Three homes at White Bluffs Prairie, near Spokane, were burned by brush fire. Inhabitants fled the district.

The Imperial Airways has established a shopping excursion service by which passengers may leave London in the morning, spend several hours in Paris and return home early in the evening.

MILLBROOK, July 15.—The regular July session of the Millbrook Council was held on Friday evening, Reeve W. T. Wood, in the chair. present, Councillors Eakins, Lang, Stinson and Sayles.

A communication was read from the Deputy Minister of Public Works, J. B. Hunter, concerning the request of council for use of government Post Office lot for erection of band stand, promising that matter would have careful attention, and the council will be duly advised as to further action.

A communication from W. H. Fowlds, ofc Hastings, regarding Chamber of Commerce for Eastern Ontario, received and filed.

The accident insurance policy, sent on approval from the Globe Company, was returned, no present action being taken. The town hall is at present insured as municipal offices necessitating a special policy each time a public entertainment is held, and the council has in mind a radical change in this regard.

The clerk was instructed to secure quotations on municipal supplies from the Municipal World, and the S. R. Hart Company, Toronto.

Eakins-Lang: That the request be granted.

Stinson-Sayles: Moved in amendment that the matter be left over for another week in order that council should secure information as to whether, in other places, merchants other than garage and hardware business men have such privilege.

Stinson-Eakins: That the clerk be instructed to write the president of the Women's Institute expressing the thanks of the municipality for four sign boards erected for direction of tourists, at each of the main roads leading into the village.

The following accounts were read and ordered paid:

Millbrook Telephone Company, $3.70; B. Raper, labor, $35.80; S. Bonner, labor, $27.60; H. Lord, labor, $25.50; A. Footit, labor, $13.50; S. By-law No. 528 received the necessary reading authorizing the Reeve to borrow $2,000 for current expenses from Bank of Toronto if required.

The regular meting of the Golden Sheaf Rebekah Lodge, No. 176, was held on Tuesday evening, the special feature being the first official visit of the recently-elected District-Deputy President, Sister Laura Fuller, of Peterboro.

Sister M. Watt, Past President of the Rebekah Assembly of Ontario, read the President's Commission appointing Sister Fuller to her office, and other visiting members from Golden Link Lodge, Peterboro, were Sisters E. Hartley and C. Reid.

The six Rebekah Lodges in the district, under Sister Fuller's jurisdiction, include: Kawartha Lodge, No. 175, Lindsay; Lady Simcoe Lodge, No. 140, Beaverton; Winsome Lodge, No. 238, Little Britain; Dorcas Lodge, No. 98, Havelock; Golden Link, No. 81, Peterborough; and Golden Sheaf, No. 176, Millbrook.

The vacation season, the busy time for members living in the country, and the brief time for announcing the visit of the District-Deputy President all had their effect in lessening the attendance at Tuesday's meeting, but an active interest in Rebekah affairs was not lacking, and results beneficial to the local Lodge should follow.

A district picnic for the Rebekah Lodges is being planned for Wednesday, August 11, to be held at Chemong Park. Further notice as to definite date, and other arrangements, will be announced later. A good programme of sports is being arranged. The local Lodge will probably merge its annual picnic in that for the district this year.

Dr. C. Alvin Richards, who has spent the past year in hospital work at Pittsburg, Ohio, is returning, after a brief holiday with his parents, Mr. ad Mrs. C. W. Richards, to locate permanently in that city.

Mr. and Mrs. George Wilson and sons, Jack and Vance, of Yelverton, and Mr. and Mrs. Karr and baby, also of Yelverton, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Vance on Tuesday.

Miss Jean Stinson, daughter of Councillor and Mrs. P. Stinson, returned on Wednesday after visiting friends in Lindsay for a few days this week.

Dr. Douglas Avison, whose address on mission work in Korea was heard with keen interest by the large congregation in the United church on Sunday morning, wishes to correct a mis-statement of figures lest an erroneous impression be left in the public mind; the native Korean church now has a baptized membership of over 300,000 souls, and an adherent membership of over 500,000, not of three and five million as formerly quoted. Dr. Avison is not an ordained man, his field being that of medical missions only.

Mrs. E. S. Burnham returned home on Tuesday after a week's visit with Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Burnham, Chemong Park. Mrs. Margaret Staples, of Cavan, was the guest of he daughter, Mrs. Burnham, on Tuesday.

SCATTERED DESTRUCTION

A roof crashed in at the town of New Hope, N.J., a mile and a half from the navy ammunition depot at Lake Denmark. Shells were hurled in all directions over the countryside by the explosion and a barrage rained down as terrific as on a battle front in wartime. The population fled madly from the stricken region, and scores of civilians were injured by the bombardment.

growers and are recognized as separate personalities. Thus, one of the conspicuous beauties of Mr. Nadoo's garden is Souvenir de Claudius Pernet, of which three or four bushes were blooming when visited. This is a large and lovely soft yellow contrasting vividly with the deep crimsoned Covent Garden and with the white of Mrs. Charles Lamplough. These are three gems, all of them graceful in bud and opening immense petals which in their color and size give them striking prominence among their handsomest fellows. Mrs. C. Lamplough unfolds as a soft lemon shade but pales almost to pure white when full blown. Mr. W. H. Young of Peterborough imported and distributed quite a number of this variety early in the spring, and some of his patrons have reported their satisfaction with this rose, which was new to them.

Other beauties in Mr. Nadoo's garden are Marie Adelaide of Luxembourg, a dep orange yellow of splendid form. Los Angeles with its coral, apricot and gold against a background of pink, and Independence Day a rich blend of orange, apricot and gold.

K. of K. (Kitchener) is a dazzling scarlet, and Victor Hugo and Captain Hayward two brilliant crimson hybrid perpetuals. There are also Ophelias, Hoosier Beauties and many other varieties, all comprising a rose garden whose glories will encourage others to emulate, demonstrating as it does the possibilities of growing in this climate the finest and tenderest classes of the queen of flowers.

Mr. Nadoo has used his available space with splendid effect, the beds bordered by grass walks, the bushes excellently arranged, and the whole design touched off with pergola, garden seat, and background of other flowers and lattice—a restful, chaming bower. A few years ago Mr. Nadoo was one of the leading promoters of the Campbellford lacrosse team and his interest in the game allowed little thought for such a gentle hobby as growing roses, but it is altogether likely that he obtains from them more pleasure, for himself and his family, than from the strenuous and intensely masculine, he-man diversion of lacrosse. He is entitled to the quiet joys of a rosarian, and he will probably be eventually numbered among the members of the Ontario Rose Society. Even the coveted distinction of producing the finest rose in the province may come to Campbellford in competition with the conservatories of Toronto and Hamilton capitalists. For the present, Mr. Nadoo has transformed his garden into a place of soft splendors reflected by the feauties of form and color perfected in the roses of England and France.

A large number of sorrowing relatives and friends gathered at the home where the service was held under the auspices of A.F. and A.M. Rev. T. H. RANCHERS FACE FOOD SHORTAGE

CATTLE AT LARGE.

WILLIAMS LAKE, B.C., July 16 (Canadian Press).—Ranchers living in the Springhill district that was in the path of a recent cyclone are virtually isolated from the outside, and there is a real dangere of food shortage, according to reports received here yesterday.

Roads are said to be practically impassable with heavy timber and other debris scattered throughout the area. The crops, seriously damaged by the hail that followed the twister, are now being eaten by range cattle and horses that are roaming at large. The fences protecting the grain fields and the trails are in such condition that farmers have been unable to get their machinery into the fields.

Efforts are being made to bring in food supplies from the 100-Mile House store.

THE ELECTORAL MACHINERY.

The report from Ottawa that the returning officers appointed by the former Government are to be discharged by the new administration, and replaced by party supporters, should occasion no surprise.

The control of the patronage represented in the appointment of election officials has always been considered important from a strategical viewpoint and so long as we adhere to the present methods and take no steps to put the electoral machinery outside politics it may be expected that the party which holds the whip hand for the moment will take advantage of its opportunity.

The whole system of conducting elections in this country needs to be changed, in order that we may be spared in future the manoeuvring and fighting for the control of the machinery that has been so prominent recently.

The whole election staff should be completely independent of political favours and free from political control.

It should be non-partisan and efficient so that there need never be the slightest reason to doubt in any case the results of the election.

PRODUCED IN CANADA.

It is expected that Peterboro manufacturers will have exhibits at the National Produced-in-Canada Exposition, which is to be held in Montreal, October 9 to 16th.

The "Produced-in-Canada" Association is supporting this enterprise as an other step toward furthering the sale of all Canadian products by educating our population to realize the excellent quality of Canadian products.

Leading firms in all industries are behind the movement, and it is expected that at least 125,000 retailers and consumers will attend the exhibition, affording an excellent opportunity to advertise the fine nature of Canadian goods.

The stimulation of a preference for products made here at home, thus providing orders for Canadian manufacturers and employment for Canadian workers, is such a desirable object that there should be a general desire to assist in this national exposition, which will give an unique opportunity to create better business among Canadian manufacturers.

Despite our favourable trade balance, we are still buying foreign goods that could be as efficiently and satisfactorily manufactured at home, and the Produced-in-Canada Exposition may do something to materially offset this condition.

THE FIRE FIENDS' TRAIL.

The monetary loss occasioned by forest fires has frequently been stressed when efforts have been made to arouse the public to the necessity of being more zealous in protecting our timber wealth.

There is a more tragic side, however, which is sharply delineated by the news that a party of tourists was trapped on the Banff-Windermere highway by a forest fire and four lives were lost.

The fires spreading through the wooded districts of British Columbia and Alberta are doing immense damage to valuable timber limits, have temporarily halted logging operations and are threatening the safety of outlying communities.

Once fairly under way, a forest fire spreads with terrible rapidity, and carries devastation over large areas in a short space of time.

That is why those who go into the woods on pleasure bent or whose occupatin calls them there are being constantly urged to be on their guard.

A camp-fire left burning, a carelessly looked after "slash" fire on a settler's property, a burning match tossed into the tinder-dry moss of a forest, may mean property loss of millions of dollars, and perhaps, as in the case just reported, the sacrifice of human lives.

Always be careful—in the forest as well as on the street, or at the wheel of your car.

SAVE IT FROM GROUPS.

From Montreal and other centres come reports of the likelihood of Labour candidates being entered in various ridings in the coming election.

Labour, of course, has every right to put candidates in the field if it wants to, but there are many people who feel that the fewer the political groups in the next Parliament the better it will be for the general good of the country.

The expeience we have had in Ontario of group government and the development in the Federal House have caused a widespread desire for a return to the old two-party standard and the hope that one party or another will have a clean cut majority over all after the election.

Labour may feel that there are problems coming before the Federal Parliament in which it is directly interested, but it is by no means clear that the Labour organizations could not exert more helpful pressure in the solving of these problems from outside than through the presence in parliament of a few representatives.

The "good old days" of straight party politics had many weaknesses but at least the country could count on a measure of stability in the conduct of public affairs.

BUSY AIRMEN.

Working with that modesty and lack of public trumpeting so characteristic of the best type of soldier the officers and men of the Royal Canadian Air Force have quietly undertaken many forms of constructive public service, says the Ottawa Journal. If the whole truth were known these services would be worthy of comparison even with the outstanding record won by this wonderful force during the world war.

A recently published Government report bears eloquent testimony to their lastest activity. In co-operation with the Department of Agriculture a determined campaign has been carried on to curtail the ravages of wheat rust, one of the worst menaces facing the Western farmer. Last year the birdmen secured evidence that the rust spores are carried high in the air for considerable distances and they also discovered that it was possible to limit the spread of rust by "dusting' wheat fields with sulphur. This summer they wil continue their investigations and will collect further information looking to the curtailment and ultimate control of this destructive agency, which limits the prosperity of the Western agriculturist.

Although hampered by continuously curtailed Government appropriations much other excellent work has been accomplished. Huge areas of rich forest land have been salvaged from the fire fiend by constant aerial patrol; the almost incaluable wealth of the British Columbia fisheries have been safe-guarded; intensive surveys have opened up the most productive areas for new settlers; mails and supplies have been carried to the outposts; a great chain of wireless station have been established across the continent and a score of Government departments have been materially assisted in their constant battle against destruction and waste.

Without exaggeration it may be said that while other countries have done little but intensify their air forces as agencies of future destruction Canada's airmen have saved this country millions of dollars by acting as a real preventive and constructive agency.

IMPATIENT YOUTH.

Hon. Edmund Bristol, late member of Parliament for Toronto East Centre, announces his retirement from the politcal arena. Friends of the honorable gentleman will not be surprised at his action. For several years, he has exhibited signs of weariness. In the session that preceded the landslide of 1921, Mr. Bristol was seldom in his seat. This charge was used against him by the Liberal press of Toronto and by his opponent, Mr. Norman McEachren, one time Windsor contractor. The member weathered the storm with a reduced majority and in the sessions that followed his attendance in the House was fairly regular.

In justice to Mr. Bristol it must be said that he was more often in his seat during the life of the late Parliament than were some of the younger representatives. The retiring member for Toronto East Centre never lost an opportunity to strike a blow at the Chicago "water grab." If he did nothing else this session his activities in that respect will stand to his credit on the pages of Hansard.

It is more dfificult, however, to understand the mental attitude of some young members who entered the House on January 8 full of enthusiasm and were tired of the grind before three months had passed. In the last Parliament there were many such representatives. They plunged into life at the Capital for the first time. No doubt some of them went to Ottawa with extravagant expectations impossible of fulfillment. Others were forced into politics and proceeded to their legislative duties with a measure of reluctance. They soon learned that the ponderous wheels on Parliament Hill could not be forced beyond a certain, sedate speed. Some of them became disgusted and pined for their faraway homes—their wives and families. They retired to their rooms and wished they had failed of election Others took the situation philosophically. When a dull debate took place they were not in the chamber. A few of them could be found on the excellent golf courses that abound on the Quebec side of the river. Others, it is said, were devoting themselves to the bridge tables of Ottawa society with more enthusiasm than they ever exhibited when regarding that deal table upon which reposes the mace.

Some men take to political life like ducks do to water. Others think they will like it and are soon disillusioned. The politician who succeeds and intends to remain so long as his constituents will permit him must be blessed with a peculiar sense of humor. If he takes things too seriously at the start he is apt to become discouraged and his country may lose the services of an able man. In the last House there were several representatives of great promise who declared after dissolution that they would never run again. Whether they think better of their decision after they reach their homes remains to be seen. At any rate they left Ottawa thoroughly tired of the shuffling, finessing and procrastination that marked the progress of the ship of state.

There is too much delay and red tape about the way business is transacted in the Federal House. There is real room for improvement as the years roll on but it is almost too much to expect that the system will ever achieve that easy going status enjoyed by a municipal council. Canada's Parliament has been patterned after the great British legislature at Westminister. Rules and procedure are practically the same. The chief failing at Ottawa is a weakness towards verbosity which can be checked with ease if the proper means are employed. Young members who feel that the older chaps on the front benches are monopolizing the time of the House should remember that the so-called veterans were once adorning the back seats. They might also recall the words of Milton: "They also serve who only stand and wait."

How many political cadets who left Ottawa vowing they would not seek re-election, will carry out their dire threat? It will be rather interesting to watch them. Parliament Hill has a sinister attraction for the average man who onec sits in the majestic green chamber. No doubt when the weary ones went away they meant what they said, but when the bugle blows again they will probably be first on parade.—Border Cities Star.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

After all the most difficult thing about political cabinets is getting them elected.

It must be a relief to Mr. Ferguson to watch somebody else being pestered about election dates.

Hon. Robt. Rogers was generally picked as Minister of Elections. But that portfolio doesn't appear in the published list.

Mister Baldy Robb's friends are asking for his release. And from the Government now in power the answer will undoubtedly be, "Try and get it."

CHICAGO GRAINS

CHICAGO, July 16 (Canadian Press).—Notable strength developed in the corn market yesterday based largely on active buying associated with reports about backwardness of corn growth. Field advices indicated that the corn is late in many sections—Northern Illoinois especially being represented as three weeks behind normal. Closing quotations on corn were firm, 1 5-8 to 2 5-8 net higher, whereas wheat finished easy 3-8 to 7-8 off, oats at 1-8 to 1-4 to 3-8 up, and provisions 3-8 decline to a rise of 15c.

Most of the advance in the corn market came near the end of the day. Purchasing on the part of speculators took an aggressive turn at that stage and forced prices rapidly upward. Orders which automatically went into operation to stop losses for previous sellers did much to accelerate the rise in the market. Before the ascent could be checked December delivery established a new high price record for the season. Profit taking was heavy but the market showed only slight recession from the day's top figures. Oats borrowed firmness from corn.

Beneficial showers in Canada tended to ease down the wheat market. Besides, something of a reaction was looked for in view of the recent 15 cent a bushel climb of values. There was talk current, too, that exporters were re-selling at the Gulf of Mexico. In addition, hard winter wheat from Illinois points began arriving in Chicago yesterday, the forerunner of an expected liberal run.

Increasing stocks of lard led to selling which made the provision market irregular.

EGG MARKETS

OTTAWA, July 16 (Canadian Press).—Egg markets remain generally quiet with no pronounced changes reported yesterday.

Montreal—Dealers are paying delivered for ungraded eggs, extras 31-33, firsts 26-30, seconds 21-25. Prices to retailers, extras 38, firsts 30-32, seconds 28-29. Sales are being made in a jobbing way, extras 37, firsts 29, seconds 27.

Winnipeg.—Receipts were steady for the first part of the week with sales on all grades slow. Dealers are quoting country shippers delivered, cases returned, extras 25, firsts 23, seconds 18. At Brandon dealers are paying country shippers delivered, cases returned, extras 24-25, firsts 22-23, seconds 17-18. Receipts are light at Brandon. Prices to retailers at Winnipeg, extras 35-36, firsts 30-32, seconds 26. Prices are lower on live broilers with 1 1-2 to 2 pound birds bringing 21, 2 pounds and over 25, and under 1 1-2 not wanted. Prices on fowl are unchanged.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, July 16 (Canadian Press).—Extreme dullness marked the export trade in Canadian grain on the Montreal market yesterday owing to the fact that foreign buyers failed to respond to the higher prices asked by local exporters. The domestic market for car lots of oats was moderately active and firm.

Owing to the recent strength in the Canadian cash wheat situation in Winnipeg, a stronger feeling developed in the local market for spring wheat grades of flour and prices were advanced 50 cents per barrel. The volume of business transacted was fair. Prices for winter wheat grades were well maintained under a fair demand.

While the undertone to the millfeed market was strong, there was no change in prices, but an upward revision is expected in the near future. The trade was fair. The volume of business transacted in rolled oats small, but the tone was steady.

The demand for all grades of eggs was limited, but prices ruled steady. The receipts were 1,847 packages.

Considerable business was done in new crop potatoes and prices were firm. American No. 1 grade were quoted at $6 per barrel.

The demand for butter was limited to small lots and sales of No. 1 pasteurized creamery were made at 31c to 31 1-2c per pound. The receipts were 4,216 packages.

The cheese trade was extremely dull and prices were fractionally easier. The receipts were 6,811 boxes.

The trade in beans was quiet, but the tone of the market was steady and prices were unchanged. Car lots of choice white hand-picked were quoted at $2.25 jer bushel, and smaller quantities at $2.35 to $2.45 per bushel.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

WHAT IS POETRY?

Poetry is the voice of the gods, too often unheeded.

Poetry is the way you would like to describe your feelings after getting that name on the 'dotted line.'

Poetry has the power of making your wife seem beautiful when she has a toothache.

It is a soothing melody, or a rampant march.

Poetry is a feast, a prayer, a journey, an individual—indeed, a good one with whom to be acquainted.

Learn to see in another's calamity the ills which you should avoid. —Syrus.

DR. FRANK CRANE'S DAILY EDITORIAL.

NEITHER AND ALWAYS.

By Dr. Frank Crane.

"It is when we are young that we say, 'I shall never' and 'I shall always,' not knowing that we are only time's atoms in a crucible of incredible change. An old man scarce dares say 'I shall never,' for he knows that if he searches he will find probably that he has. 'All, all is change.'"

Paderewski the other day said that he does not like the two words, "never" and "always." He said that it was not safe for him to say that he would never return to politics and that he would always give his life to music.

The older a person gets the less he is inclined to say "never" and "always."

The years are long in youth. They grow shorter as we grow old.

Things are fixed in youth. They are eternal and immutable. As we grow older we see that everything changes.

All this telling youth about long life and securing a happy old age is largely useless, because to youth all such matters are problematical.

It is in youth that we make promises never to do things or always to do them.

As the years grow upon us we become more cagey and we reflect that there are few things that we always or never do.

Youth is orthodox. It believes in fixed things. Old age is the heretic. It sees things fluctuate.

That is the reason that old age as a rule is more tolerant than youth. The grandfather is more likely to have the point of view of the child than is the father. He sees that most things do not matter and that time cures most evils.

He knows that most of the troubles of humanity are such as never come and most of the problems are such as work themselves out in time.

The passage of the years leaves us, or ought to leave us, more tolerant of the frailties of humanity.

HOW DO YOU SAY IT?

(By C. N. Lurie.)

Common Errors in English and How To Avoid Them.

THE GRAMMAR AS THE EDUCATED MAN'S "BIBLE."

The McClure Syndicate, Inc.

"A book of English grammar," says the writer of a letter to a newspaper, "is the bible of every American professing to be educated.

"Grammar is not an illimitable subject, such as many other studies that engage people in leisure moments. And it is the foundation of our education. Only by thoroughly mastering it—by no means a fearful task—can anyone hope to understand any other subject clearly or to transmit his thoughts clearly and universally. Adults should frequently refresh their remembrance of the unchanging rules of grammar."

But the letter writer criticizes some of the terms employed by grammarians. He asks:

"Why not clearly and plainly call the imperative the command mood, the indicative, the simple or normal mood, the subjunctive, the contrary-to-fact mood, the accusative, the objective case, the dative, the receiver case, etc.? Highfalutin terminology makes an unnecessary puzzle of education and causes every student to lose interest."

TRADE UNION CONGRESS AGREES TO RAISE FUNDS TO ASSIST STRIKING MINERS IN BATTLE AGAINST EFFORT TO EXTEND WORKING DAY TO EIGHT HOURS

Expectations of Government and Owners That Men Would Return To Work After Passage of Bill, Are Not Realized.

BISHOP'S PROPOSAL NOT PRACTICABLE.

Sir Adam Nimmo, Vice-President of Mining Association Declares There Are But Two Alternatives—Longer Hours Or Reduced Wages.

LONDON, July 16 (Canadian Press).—Peace in the coal fields is not yet in sight. The Government and mine owners have been confident that after the eight hours' bill was enacted the miners would flock back to work. This confidence has not been realized for there is no sign of the men resuming, except in very small numbers.

The feature of the day was the announcement that the Trades Union Congress has agreed to give all possible assistance to striking miners. The Congress will raise funds to support the miners in their struggle against longer hours and reduced wages.

Religious and other bodies have been endeavoring to find some new way out of the deadlock. A suggestion advanced by several bishops was that of a truce of four months be declared, during which the miners would work at the old wages and hours, while new terms were being negotiated. This plan, however, would have involved continuance of the subsidy by the Government costing about £2,000,000 per month, and was therefore not acceptable to the Government.

Mine Owners Stand Still.

From the side of the mine owners clearly no concession is coming. Sir Adam Nimmo, prominent coal owner and vice-president of the Mining Association, which represents the owners, in a public speech yesterday insisted there were only two alternatives — either reduced wages or increased hours.

Sir Adam declared that the mining industry is in the grip of economic forces of exceptional severity, and even if the strike lasted six months the miners' demands could not be met. The mine owners had already gone to the utmost limits of generosity in offering to maintain wages on an eight hours' basis, and he contended that mining was a private enterprise which should not be interfered with by either Government or miners.

To Hold Conference.

Much hope had been entertained of new developments by reason of the Trades Union Congress invitation to the Miners' Federation for a conference. Since the calling off of the general strike, there has existed bad feeling between these two bodies. Their representatives met yesterday, however, and the conference would appear to prove what has been maintained by the Labor party that the passage of the Eight Hours' Bill has concentrated the ranks of Labor against the Government. An official statement issued subsequently embodies the announcement of the promised assistance of the miners by the Trades Union Congress, thus showing that friendly relations had been re-established.

It is reported that there was much plain speaking and a thorough clearance of the atmosphere at this conference, which is to be resumed to-day, and although hopes are high that the trades union men may be able to influence the federation to accept some compromise, it is difficult to see at present how peace can come with all parties standing out against any concessions.

In the meantime, Premier Baldwin had another informal talk with his colleagues last night on the deadlock, which the Government is only too anxious to terminate.

CAPTAIN WRIGHT GETS DAMAGES

Traducer of Gladstone Wins Action Against Bath Club.

WAS EXPELLED.

LONDON, July 16 (Canadian Press).—Captain Peter Wright, who was expelled from the Bath Club last year, for imputations against the late William Ewart Gladstone in his book, "Portraits and Criticisms," yesterday was awarded damage of £1,006 for loss of club amenities and £25 for injury to his reputation.

The testimony in the case did not go into the merits of his aspersions upon the famous statesman, whose son, Lord Gladstone, is a member of the Bath Club. In summing up, Justice Horridge said of Gladstone:

"... occupied a great public position and his family must put up with all proper criticism of him, as a public man, and on his private character, so far as it reflects upon his public position."

Of the Bath Club's committee, the justice said:

"They have violated the first instincts of justice. They have turned this man out without ever giving him an opportunity of putting his case before them."

Of Lord Gladstone's letter, in which he called Captain Wright "a liar, a coward and a fool," for his aspersions on the elder Gladstone, the justice said: "The jury may think it the language of the pantry and that the use of such language was justifiable."

LARGE MAJORITY PASSES BILL GRANTING KING ALBERT POWERS TO PASS MEASURES TO SAVE FRANC

Authority Is Vested in Monarch For Period of Six Months.

WAR TIME BREAD.

Railways, Telegraphs and Telephones Handed Over For Operation By Private Companies.

BRUSSELS, July 16 (Canadian Press).—King Albert, by virtue of an overwhelming majority in the Chamber and a unanimous vote in the Senate, in which Socialist deputies and senators concurred, has become the financial dictator of his own kingdom for a period of six months. Premier Jaspar yesterday put the full powers bill granting the King authority to institute by decrees measures to save the franc, through both Houses inside of an hour.

During the short debate on the bill, the exchange market was highly nervous and showed fluctuations. The official closing figures of the franc was 211 to the pound sterling and 43.50 to the dollar.

A decree will be issued within a few days providing for the use of bread very similar to that used in war time. The railways, telephones and telegraphs will be turned over to private companies for operation.

King Albert is expected to be a good natured dictator, and M. Theunis and M. Farncqui, both of whom are very prominent financiers of Belgium and well known in the United States, will be the real powers behind the throne.

Money Withdrawn.

Some idea of the crisis which the country has passed through and the lack of confidence among small investors and workingmen is to be found in the announcement that between July 1 and 13, while the franc was tumbling rapidly, more than five million francs were withdrawn from the public savings bank in Antwerp alone.

The foreign exchange market will be one of the first features of the present situation to be attended to by the royal dictator. In the future, in order to obtain foreign currency for imports, bills of lading, as well as invoices, must be presented.

Financial Commission.

The Financial Commission instituted by the Government, which M. Theunis, banker and former Premier, is president, held a meeting as soon as the full powers bill was passed, and examined various measures for supporting the franc and to prevent illicit dealing in foreign exchange. These will be submitted to the King for promulgation within a day or two.

The commission also studied the proposition of a group of Dutch bankers, desirous of assisting Belgium to redeem the franc, embracing a loan of five million guilders under favorable conditions and it is likely the offer will be accepted. (A guilder is worth about 40 cents).

The latest returns of the National Bank show that during the week ending July 8, 975,000,000 treasury bills were discounted, an increase of 75,000,000 francs over the previous week.

A number of people from the Saskatchewan colonies are also desirous of moving and will be prepared to join their newly arrived fellow countrymen from Russia if satisfactory arrangements can be made.

CHARLES NADOO'S ROSE GARDEN A CAMPBELLFORD BEAUTY SPOT

Business Man Has 175 Choice Varieties—Steals Time From Store.

HIS SECOND YEAR.

(By T.H.T.)

CAMPBELLFORD, July 16. — Rosarians of the district will be interested to hear of a comparatively recent and keenly enthusiastic recruit to their ranks in the person of Mr. Charles Nadoo, whose rose garden is probably the most beautiful spot in Campbellford. This is his second summer's experience in the growing of roses, and so completely have they captivated him that he steals time from his busines to devote to their care and culture.

Mr. Nadoo has about one hundred and seventy-five bushes, most of them hybrid teas, with a few teas and hybrid perpetuals included, perhaps to embrace their categories or families in his first selections. Even fifty plants will yield a wealth of bloom and delight the small gardener, but more than three times that number, as in Mr. Nadoo's trim beds, produce a profusion of flowers and fragrance that will be a continuous delight until the frosts nip their buds long after summer is gone. In their first full blooming they have presented a charmingly colorful picture with tones ranging from white to deep crimson, and especially rich in the intermediate apricots, corals, lemon-yellows and pinks.

The identity and distinct individuality of roses offer one of their most appealing features. They are known and marked out by their names, and although some varieties have such a close restmblance that they may defy experts to distinguish them at sight, many of them, even of one color group, become familiar to all

ARNOLD BENNETT

Talyks About the Price of Economy.

Copyright McClure Syndicate.

First I wish to make a point about the man who indulges in the practice of economy. (Call it meanness if you like to be hard on human nature.)

There is a triple pleasure in being economical. You know all the time at the moment of every act which forces denial on yourself (and often on others) that you are strengthening your character (and occasionally the character of others) and proving to yourself that you possess the grit to carry out what you have set out to do. There is secondly the pleasure of saving money which is a very genuine pleasure. (Ask the spendthrift who by some freak of chance one day saves a bit if that day is not the proudest day of his life.) And thirdly there is the pleasure of merely yielding to habit. To yield to a habit any habit gives satisfaction, and the more fixed the habit the keener the satisfaction.

But the practice of economy brings also a reward greater than any of these pleasures. People laugh at a mean man (behind his back) they vituperate him they pity him; they even say that meanness is the worst of all vices. Nevertheless below such surface feelings is a deeper feeling a feeling of esteem for the mean man; there is even a feeling of envy. They would like to be and to do likewise but are too weak for the endless job.

Now meanness is usually an affair of small things twopences or sixpences here and there all day and every day. A single generous act will quite erase the memory of the exasperations caused by a thousand petty acts of meanness. And forget not that it is the financial results of a hundred petty acts of meanness which enable the mean man to perform the one act of large generosity. If a man saves a daily shilling by cheapening his lunch in a way that offends you he will in a few months have the money to offer you the finest lunch that a big city can offer—without in the least inconveniencing his purse.

Now you are requested to apply the above considerations to the case of the typical Scotsman. He is undoubtedly in small things what the Englishman would call mean. For even he watches lynx-like over the two pences. It would be absurd to refer to sixpences. His sixpences take care of themselves. Sixpence is a mighty and a precious sum; he keeps his silver in a separate pocket; and when he has saved three twopences by trivial meanness he turns them into sixpence puts the sixpence into the separate pocket and imprisons it there until he can find a spare moment to run across to the Bank. Thus he is continually building up material happiness—which has a lot to do with spiritual happiness.

And the power of his example has had an enormous influence upon the spendthrift English race. A young Englishman takes to taxis as a duck takes to water—or would do did not the restraining force of pattern Scotsmen thrust him against all his instincts into a bus.

It was the Scotsman who imposed upon the English their really astonishing meanness about telegrams which meanness causes Americans to marvel more than any other phenomenon on this island. Englishmen and Scotsmen alike will sacrifice clearness to a penny in despatching a telegram. Yes they will rejoice exceedingly if they can contrive to strike out one word in a message ordering ten thousand pounds worth of goods.

Withal are Scotsmen mean when it comes to large things? Are they unluxurious? Are there no princely mansions round about Glasgow Edinburgh Aberdeen and Dundee? Are the first-class sleeping-cars from the North to London ever empty? not the largest and finest hotels de luxe in Britain situate north of the Tweed? Is it not a Scotsman who has practised public benevolence on a grander scale than was ever before known in the history of the world? Do not Scotsmen buy more books and pictures than Englishmen? All these questions are no sooner asked than answered—and they can only be answered in one way.

As for hospitality I will simply say that whenever I go to Scotland I am invariably entertained regardless of cost. In England an author is naught. In Scotland he counts nearly as much as a minister of the Presbyterian church.

Scotsmen undoubtedly said to each other in the beginning and are still saying to each other:

"We are a small nation; we live on a harsh and ungrateful soil; our natural resources are insufficient for the proper furtherance of our ambition. What therefore must we do? Plainly we must advertise ourselves."

Scotsmen not Americans were the first advertisers. And it was solely in order to advertise themselves that they hit upon or invented their national characteristic. Scotsmen are not really mean either in small things or large. But they felt the necessity of advertisement and with their Scotch canniness they perceived that there is and can be no advertisement equal to a national characteristic which at once commands esteem and envy and is very economical. All other advertisement costs money and usually large sums of money. The Scottish advertisement is obtained gratis. The Scotsman goes about advertising himself, and every time he advertises himself he saves twopence. The Scottish advertisement is indeed the most marvellous device in the whole history of trade.

Scotsmen are bound together in the exploitation of the national characteristic which they have deliberately and of malice aforethough created for themselves. When a Scotsman succeeds he finds room for another Scotsman—he has little use for Englishmen—and in turn that Scotsman succeeds and the second makes room for a third, and so the chain runs on. Scotsmen rule the seas, for every captain of a ship is intimidated by a Scottish engineer, who by the way will have none but Scotsmen in his engine-room. Scotsmen rule public opinion, for Fleet Street is firmly held by Scotsmen who are everlastingly sending to the north for Scottish colleagues. Scotsmen in fact rule the British Empire, which is at least as much their achievement as the achievement of Englishmen. See an Englishman in command of some outpost of civilization, and ten to one he will prove to be a Scotsman, shrewdly working away at advertising his nation by means of his allied national characteristic.

I am informed, and I have seen or myself that there are numerous Scotsmen now recklessly spending large portions of their ample incomes in the attempt to disapprove that Scotsmen are mean. So far as I am concerned they are wasting not only their money but their efforts. I know that Scotsmen are not naturally mean. They are only unnaturally mean. They are mean against their nature and in pursuance of an end. Their meanness is what naturalists would call an 'acquired' characteristic. Moreover the spendthrift Scotsmen will never succeed in their patriotic but mistaken attempt. Nothing is harder to lose than a label. And nothing is harder to lose than a sound habit long practised. Scotsmen will always, quite wrongly, be thought to be really mean. That is the price which they pay for empire.

CAR RAIL HURLED HALF A MILE

This fragment of car rail, about 12 feet long, was blown half a mile across the valley from the Naval reservation, and buried itself in the ground of the Picatinny arsenal within 50 yards of the powder storehouse seen in the background.

GOOD NIGHT STORIES

By Blanche Silver

MRS. BROWN BEETLE MEETS THE BACK SWIMMER.

Mrs. Brown Beetle put on her little brown bonnet, and picking up her market basket started off to the market place.

She took the short cut down by the old mill pond, and when she reached the bank she spied a bug out in the water swimming around and around.

Could it be possible that's our new neighbor?" she asked herself. When the little fellow in the pond stopped for a second and she got a good look at him, Mrs. Brown Beetle threw up her front feet in horror.

My goodness, he's on his back! It's bad enough to be on one's back on dry land, but in the water it must be terrible. Goodness!" as the bug twirled around and around again and again, and, without waiting to call to the bug, Mrs. Brown Beetle ran to get someone to help her drag him out.

Oh, come quick!" she called as she passed Tilly Tumblebug, one of the beetles is drowning. He's on his back out in the pond," and grabbing Tilly Tumblebug's feeler she pulled her down the path.

They met Miss Ladybug, who threw up her front feet in horror when Mrs. Brown Beetle told her someone was drowning.

It's terribly uncomfortable to be on one's back," cried Tilly Tumblebug, but just think of trying to swim on your back. Oh, hurry, hurry,

"Come quick! He's drowning!"

we must help the poor thing!"

How foolish for we ladies to even think we can help anyone out in the water," cried Miss Ladybug. You can't swim, Mrs. Beetle, neither can Tilly Tumblebug, and I know right well I can't. Who is there that can swim?"

Well, I can't swim," cried Johnny Grasshopper, but I'll hop out there and tell him we have sent for help."

"A fine idea," cried Mrs. Brown Beetle, and away the four friends hurried to the bank of the pond.

Johnny Grasshopper lost no time in talking, he jumped right out to a weed near the struggling bug and called to him.

Hold on, don't lose heart: we've gone for help. We'll have you out in a second or so."

Who are you talking about?" asked the bug, without even so much as turning over. Who are you going to help out?"

Why, you," replied Johnny Grasshopper. Mrs. Brown Beetle saw you drowning and she ran and told us. They have gone for Mrs. Spider. She'll spin a web so someone can set you rightside up in a jiffy."

Now that's certainly nice of you," chuckled the swirling bug, but, if you don't mind, I'll take care of myself," and he swam to the bank beside the astonished meadowfolks. It sure goes to show I'm amongst friends, and I thank you one and all. But I'm not drowning. I'm just doing my exercise, you know."

What! on your back?" exclaimed Mrs. Brown Beetle. How horrible!"

Well, you see, I'm a Back Swimmer," chuckled the bug. I have spent all my life in the water. I always swim on my back just as you saw me. It's nothing to do when you learn how to hold air bubbles like I do. But I thank you for your interest," and, shoving his hind feet against the bank, he whirled away into the water, still on his back.

The meadow friends stood and watched him until he disappeared in the weeds, then they all went home.

THREATENS WOMAN.

TIMMINS, Ont., July 16.—Two sticks of dynamite with fuses and detonators attached and a loaded revolver were found in the possession of Confiani Lugi by the Timmins police yesterday after a complaint had been laid against him by a neighbor after she had been awakened by Luigi in the middle of the night and confronted with the gun.

It is alleged by the complainant that she was awakened by a persistent tapping on the window and saw Luigi, who threatened to murder her and blow up the house. The local police were immediately communicated with, and after an eight-hour search the prisoner was located, hiding in a shack about a mile from town.

A note scribbled on wrapping paper was found on the accused written in Italian, telling his friends that by the time they received it he would have done the deed and committed suicide. The accused appeared before Magistrate Atkinson yesterday and was remanded for a week.

ACIDS IN STOMACH CAUSE INDIGESTION

Create Gas, Sourness and Pain—How To Treat

Medical authorities state that nearly nine-tenths of the cases of stomach trouble, indigestion, sourness, burning, gas bloating, nausea, etc., are due to an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach and not as some believe to a lack of digestive juices. The delicate stomach lining is irritated, digestion is delayed and food sours, causing the disagreeable symptoms which every stomach sufferer knows so well.

Artificial digestents are not needed in such cases and may do real harm. Try laying aside all digestive aids and instead get from any druggist a few ounces of Bisurated Magnesia and take a teaspoonful in a quarter glass of water right after eating. This sweetens the stomach, prevents the formation of excess acid and there is no sourness, gas or pain. Bisurated Magnesia, (in powder or tablet form—never liquid or milk) is harmless to the stomach, inexpensive to take and is the most efficient form of magnesia for stomach purposes. It is used by thousands of people who enjoy their meals with no more fear of indigestion.

Tennis great game if not overdone

NEVER PLAY WHEN THE DAY IS TOO HOT

Now that the weather will soon be favorable for outdoor exercise, it is time to look forward to the recreative sports that afford us necessary stimulation and give us the opportunity to be out in the air and sunshine.

One of the most enjoyable sports is tennis. It renders much more from a physical standpoint than most methods of exercise and offers competition which eliminates the monotony and requires skill which makes the game so fascinating. While tennis used to be considered a rather vigorous form of exercise for women, there is no conceivable reason why they cannot participate in this game and derive benefits if they take the necessary precautions not to overdo.

Stout people particularly should avail themselves of this form of exercise, as it is an excellent way to lose superfluous flesh and tone up the muscles.

The slender person will also obtain good results as running around in the open air causes one to take deeper inspirations, adding more oxygen to the system, forcing the sweat glands to function, and helps the eliminating organs rid themselves of acids and poisons.

There are rules that should be observed in order that we obtain the best results from tennis as an exercise and sport. We should never play this game to a point of exhaustion, which is a common fault with the real tennis enthusiast.

When playing a match, it is liable to become so interesting that we rarely feel ourselves getting fatigued; during the very hot days we should be very careful not to overdo, as it is very easy to become prostrated when the temperature is high and we are running around. The best time to play is in the morning or late afternoon.

Another important rule is that we should always give ourselves at least two hours after eating before we start to play.

For a beginner, I suggest nigh shoes. These afford good support for the ankles. If low shoes are worn, be sure to wear ankle supports. You should also wear heavy socks, as the perspiration will be absorbed and your feet will not slip around in the shoes, as often happens when we have on light stockings, thus causing blisters and sore feet. For those with tender feet I suggest putting a handful of rock salt into a pail of water and allowing the feet to soak for a half hour. This will have a tendency to harden the skin and tissue.

I have an illustrated chart of twelve exercises which I will gladly furnish free upon request to any of my readers who will send a self-addressed stamped envelope to McGovern's Gymnasium, 5 West Sixty-sixth Street, New York City. These exercises are too lengthy to put into this small article.

Diet for Average Person

BREAKFAST: Fruit, bran or graham muffins, cocoa or a coffee substitute. Two glasses of water between breakfast and lunch.

LUNCHEON: Some soup, vegetable salad, dark bread, glass of milk, alternating with boiled or poached eggs. Two glasses of water between lunch and dinner.

DINNER: Lean meat, fish or chicken, a green vegetable, baked potato; be sure to eat the skin, and for dessert fresh fruit in season, nuts or crackers and cheese. Weak tea, cocoa or chocolate.

THE HALL STORE

KING'S WHARF NEWS.

KING'S WHARF, July 16.—The recent rain was very welcome to the farmers, and was badly needed. The roots were not growing, and everything looks fine now.

The men are all working on the roads around here now. They are grading the 13th Concession, and they are crushing stone on the 12th. The roads were in very bad shape, and it will be a great improvement when it is completed.

On Thursday our cheese-maker who draws the milk on this line had his truck broken while going up the hill near the lake, which is in very bad shape with stones. He broke the main crank-shaft and connecting rod. For the last two days the people have to draw their own milk until the truck is fixed.

The patrons of the factory are well pleased with the return for their milk, and a large amount is being received there daily.

Barn Raising.

On Thursday last some sixty men gathered at the home of Mr. Morgan O'Neill and raised a very fine barn in place of the one burned by lightning last year. It was a grand day, and the barn was up in a short time. After it was up Mrs. O'Neill and a few ladies served an excellent supper on the lawn. The barn is going to be a fine one when completed, and will have a steel roof. Mr. Joseph Gooselin is the carpenter.

The same afternoon Mr. Albert Carroll rose a fine barn for Mr. Jesse Rix, whose barn was also burned by lightning last fall, the same night as Mr. O'Neill's. Some fifty men were there, and after the barn was up the ladies served a sumptuous supper.

Moved by Mrs. Frank Brown and seconded by Mrs. J. T. Drope that Mrs. H. McCracken, Mrs. James Webb and Mrs. William Coyle, be the committee with the wardens to assist Mr Weir in securing help to have the church remodelled and decorated.

BETHANY NEWS

BETHANY, July 16.—On Friday evening, July 9th, the first annual garden party of the United Church was held on the church grounds. Owing to the intense heat and the threatening appearance of the sky, the tables were laid in the basement of the church, and from about half-past five until nine o'clock the ladies were kept busy attending to the wants of the immense crowd which had gathered from every direction. Pies, cake, salads and sandwiches were to be had in an abundance, and the people were quickly waited upon.

An interesting play, entitled "Willowdale," a play of country life in three acts, given by the Dramatic Club of Cavan, was held in the Town Hall. It was the intention of the committee to have the play staged on the lawn of the church, and much time had been spent erecting a platform for the occasion, but as the evening drew on the storm could be seen advancing and so it was decided to cross the street to the Town Hall and stage the programme there. The large hall was rapidly filled, but the heat was so intense that many had to leave before the curtain lifted. However, those remaining gave the best of attention to the actors, even though by this time the storm was raging outside. All discomfort was taken in good spirits, and the rain was greatly welcome to all.

An interesting game of softball between a ladies' team from Peterborough and the village team was played on the Athletic Park.

The village band was also in attendance.

Taken altogether, the ladies of the church were well satisfied with the proceeds of the evening.

LAKEFIELD GIRL RECEIVES PRIZE

Miss Helen Porter Has Highest Marks in Entrance Examinations.

LAKEFIELD, July 16. — Lakefield's quota to the Entrance class once more made a record among the schools of the County, which brings honor to the village and reflects great credit on Miss Duff, who has a record which is unique in this province for success with Entrance pupils. Careful grounding and attention to detail and individual attention have been strong factors in her success and have had the effect of putting the Lakefield School on a high plane among village schools.

Once more the county prize comes to Lakefield, being won by Miss Helen Porter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Porter. This is the second time that the county prize has come to the Porter family, as Gordon won it four years ago.

Twenty-three pupils from the Lakefield School wrote on the examination, and twenty-one passed, five with honors.

Honors. — Irene Darling, Elva Hendren, Lawrence Marsden, Helen Porter, Emeric Robinson.

Orange Parade

On Sunday evening, the members of L.O.L. No. 122 Beresford Lodge paraded to the Regent Street Church, headed by the Citizens' Band. The parade was one of the largest in the history of the local lodge, practically every available member answering the roll call. Rev. S. A. Kemp preached an able sermon from the text "Quit you like men, be strong," reviewing the history of the Order from its beginning down to the present day, with the changing conditions altering the outlook of members on certain things and making them broader and more tolerant of those who did not agree with them in all things, but retaining stronger than ever two of their great principles—an unwavering loyalty to the dear old Union Jack and that that flag stands for and also an unshakeable faith in the open Bible.

The Order stood for Christian ideals and British fair play, and is a strong power in Canada to-day.

Mrs. MacMillen sang a solo very sweetly during the service. At the conclusion of the service, the procession reformed and paraded up Regent Street to the "V", where they turned south on Queen Street and on to the lodge room. It was, to say the least, an impressive spectacle, the quiet and dignified parade, the men in black or blue suits, and the customary silk hat and wearing the badges and sashes of their Order. The band acquitted themselves splendidly and presented a smart appearance in their "nifty" new uniforms.

There was a large delegation from here to the celebration in Lindsay on Monday including the Citizens' Band and a large number of Beresford Lodge, N. 122. With the band playing a stirring march, the members of the lodge, marching like veterans, proceeded to the C.N.R. station, there boarding a special train for Lindsay. They returned about nine in the evening and were optimistic in lightly passing over the bad weather of the morning and speaking of the glorious afternoon.

The strawberry season is in full swing and the demand is tremendous especially for the locally grown product and every owner of a strawberry patch in this locality is apparently sure of a home market. One local dealer received on Saturday afternoon 300 boxes and in less than two hours he had less than 50. More berries came in during the evening and were snapped up. All the dealers are doing a record business. The crop is large and the berries very sweet and of good size.

ST. LAWRENCE PLAN INTERESTS MID WEST

Will Provide An Outlet For Middle Western States.

TORONTO, July 16.—The proposed development of the St. Lawrence is not only occupying the attention of many Canadians, but members of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce European delegation, who passed through Toronto last evening on their way to Quebec, from where they sail on the Montroyal, evinced considerable interest when interviewed by The Globe. "We are for the development of the St. Lawrence waterway project, since it provides an outlet for the Middle-Western States," said W. B. Weisenburger, chairman of the Tour Committee. "In fact, we are interested in the development of all inland waterways, and, while we are in England, we intend to study the canal systems there, particularly the Manchester ship canal. Of course, our immediate interest in St. Louis is the development of the Mississippi."

Unaffected By "Steal."

Regarding the diversion of water from the Great Lakes at Chicago, Mr. Weisenburger refused to commit himself except to say that it had little or no effect on St. Louis. He believed that some cities closer to Chicago were adversely affected by the drainage canal, but he confessed that he was not well informed on the subject. According to Mr. Weisenburger, the United States Government has already undertaken the deepening of the Mississippi to provide for an increased traffic to the Gulf of Mexico. "The Government is already operating fleets of barges on the river and besides carrying freight to the Gulf, they take a good deal to Chicago," he explained.

CONFIDENCE STUNT POPULAR IN STATES

Fake Doctors' Game Common Among American Fraud Artists.

OSHAWA, July 16—Information obtained here yesterday shows that the confidence game which two fakers are alleged have worked on Mrs. John Puckrin, of Audsley's Corners, East Whitby, mulcting her of $900, is one that has been popular lately among American fraud artists. So far as is known, it has never been worked in Canada previously.

According to C. H. Tuck, local optometrist, the same stunt was pulled recently in Red Wing, Minnesota. Two strangers appeared there one day, and proposed to cure an old lady of "cataract" for $500. A liquid was dropped in her eyes, and the pair said they would return again in a few days. Having no money in the house, the lady gave a bank certificate of deposit for $686. The doctors handed out $186 in cash and took it, but payment was stopped at the bank before it was presented.

The same couple are said to have been active near another Minnesota town, where they had a narrow escape from arrest. The game has also been worked in San Francisco, where the marauders were brought to justice. Following the complaint of an old lady who had been their victim, they were compelled to restore $500 to her, and were also fined $600 apiece and given suspended sentence. Police are still hopeful of tracing the men who deceived Mrs. Puckrin.

ROB SILK FACTORY.

Four Masked Men Bind and Gag Watchman—Make Getaway.

PATERSON, N.J., July 16.—Four masked men entered the Famous Piece Dyeing and Finishing Company factory here yesterday, bound and gagged the watchman, and stole silk valued at between $8,000 and $10,000.

The watchman, Otto Zerull, aged 69, of No. 200 Vernon Street, Clifton, N.J., told the police the men held him up, struck him on the head with an iron pipe and then bound and gagged him. Employees of the burglar alarm found Zerull unconscious. They investigated at the factory when Zerull failed to pull the alarm box at 4 o'clock.

The robbery was accomplished within fifteen minutes.

BISHOP'S PEACE

Conservative, in the Walsend bye-election.

The Premier emphasized that a reduction in mining costs must be effected by some means, and expressed hope that something in that direction must be effected through the various reconstruction schemes recommended in the report of the Royal Coal Commission.

"But these reorganization schemes cannot have full effect for some time," he continues. "Meanwhile the Commission has definitely recommended some sacrifice on the part of the men."

"When once I get any indication from those who have authority to speak in behalf of the men that they are prepared to consider such temporary sacrifices on the part of the better paid, I can assure the electors that the Government will do all it can to obtain a full discussion of any reasonable proposal."

at some time in the future.

The miners have had to abandon their attempt to secure an embargo on the movement of coal by railwaymen and dockers, whose unions turned down the miners' appeal for such action.

"It is my sincere hope and belief that the crisis in the coal industry may be solved before much more time has elapsed on the basis of mutual interest and good will," writes Premier Baldwin in a letter endorsing the candidacy of Sam Howard,

ADVERTISE IN THE EXAMINER

DAILY BOMB SHELLS ARE STILL BURSTING

Woman Seen in Culver City Said To Have Been Mrs. McPherson.

LOS ANGELES, July 16 (Canadian Press).—Reports that Kenneth G. Ormiston, Angelus Temple radio operator, had been in Taylorville, N.C., has caused the authorities investigating abduction story of Aimee Semple McPherson's to extend the search for Ormiston to the eastern part of the country.

Ormiston was identified yesterday at the grand jury hearing as the man who appeared at Salinas, May 29, with a woman answering Mrs. McPherson's description. The grand jury recessed until Tuesday to permit the authorities to continue the hunt for Ormiston.

The daily bombshells in the Aimee Semple McPherson kidnapping investigation began to burst earlier than usual yesterday, when Captain of Detectives Herman Cline flatly denied the statement credited to Mrs. Minnie Kennedy, mother of the evangelist, that she had properly turned over to police the telegram from Oakland, Cal., which stated that Mrs. McPherson was alive and well, dispatched from the northern city three days after the evangelist disappeared.

"I am prepared to go before the Grand Jury and contradict Mrs. Kennedy's statement," was the terse reply attributed to Cline in response to the assertion that police had been given the telegram at once.

Shortly after a flurry had been caused by this latest development in the situation, the grand jury reconvened for what was first expected to be the last day of the investigation. A waiting list of a score of witnesses caused considerable doubt as to whether the case could be completed before nightfall. Among those who arrived early at the hearing was Milton Carlson, noted handwriting expert, who was reported to be prepared to testify that the writing on the filing blank of the Oakland telegram greatly resembles that of Kenneth Ormiston, ex-radio operator of Angelus Temple; Captain of Police Bernard, of Culver City, and Mrs. Bernard, were outstanding among the group of witnesses. Captain Bernard was the first to intimate that Mrs. McPherson had not been drowned at Ocean Park, as at first believed, when he appeared the day after her disappearance with the allegation that he and his wife had seen the evangelist and another woman driving through Culver City at about the time the disappearance was reported.

Culver City is a community about half way between Ocean Park and Los Angeles, on the main highway to the beach city. Frank Langan, proprietor of the hotel at Ocean Park, where Mrs. McPherson changed to bathing attire before the now historical swim, was another prominent witness.

Double of Mrs. McPherson.

Six unnamed witnesses were also reported in readiness to tell the jury that Mrs. McPherson had a "double" who was mistaken for the evangelist in Northern California and other places where Mrs. McPherson was reported seen. This "double" is said to be Mrs. Elsie Broadwell, and she was also reported to be in seclusion in the Hall of Justice, ready to appear before the tribunal. Mrs. Sylvia Oberman, who was swimming at Ocean Park the day Mrs. McPherson disappeared, was reported to have told the jury that she saw a man who limped hand Mrs. McPherson a note on the beach shortly before she disappeared. Authorities are attempting to connect Ormiston with this supposed occurrence since the latter is lame.

The search for Ormiston still continues unabated. Attorneys for Mrs. Kennedy and Mrs. McPherson yesterday morning issued a statement asserting that despite weeks of effort by the best detective talent available, Mrs. McPherson's story had withstood all attempts to tear it down. The evangelist herself continued to assert the accuracy of the story over her radio at Angelus Temple. Her thousands of followers also offer vehement denials that it has been shaken by the widespread investigation.

Aimee Semple McPherson was recalled without warning by the grand jury late in the afternoon. She was sent for following the appearance of O. E. Pape before the jury. Pape is the man who stated several days ago that he saw a woman resembling Mrs. McPherson come out of the Club International at Ague Prieta, Mexico, the night before she made her reappearance.

At that time he stated that the woman supposed to be Mrs. McPherson left in a blue sedan accompanied by three others, one of whom greatly resembled H. D. Hallenbeck, builder of Angelus Temple.

It was believed that the jury planned to have Pape identify Mrs. McPherson before them as the woman he saw, or to refute the theory that she was the one in question. It was rumored that Hallenbeck would be subjected to a similar test before the jurors.

Mrs. McPherson was identified as the woman who accompanied Kenneth G. Ormiston, former radio operator at the Temple, when he drove his automobile into a Salinas garage early on the morning of May 29, eleven days after the evangelist had disappeared at Santa Monica. Joe Ryan, Deputy District Attorney, declared when he appeared as a witness at the close of the County Grand Jury session late yesterday.

O. Vick, of Culver City, and his wife also confronted Mrs. McPherson before the jury yesterday and positively identified her as a woman they saw in an automobile passing through Culver City in the direction of Los Angeles from Ocean Beach at about 3 or 4 p.m. on the day the evangelist disappeared while bathing at Santa Monica.

HON. G. N. GORDON ADDRESSES KIWANIS

Jews Are Most Remarkable Race World Has Seen, Says Speaker.

Hon. George N. Gordon was the speaker at the Kiwanis weekly luncheon at noon and he took for his subject "The Scattered Nation."

"The Jewish race is beyond doubt the most remarkable race that the world has ever seen. They have been cast aside for years, separated, and persecuted, but they are still a wonder. They have developed in themselves one of the greatest financial races of the time, for they were first an agricultural people, but they soon found there was more money in trading and commerce. The Jew is never a pioneer but soon follows when the country has been opened up," said the speaker.

"Although they have been subjected to persecution and slavery for over one thousand years, and even have been transported from their homeland, they have remained intact in their customs and institutions. When the Jew lived in Palestine all the land that a family once owned, and had lost by some means or other, reverted to that family again on the Jubilee year, which came every fifty years. We might call this a form of Socialism, but it was the greatest democracy that existed for other nations were governed by an autocracy form of government. The local and municipal government was controlled by the family for people voted as families, and these families made up tribes which in our term of the word are states, and the kingdom was composed of a confederacy of these tribes. The tribes were equal and sovereign within the sphere of their individual concerns.

"The constitution of their criminal courts and their code of criminal laws was most remarkable as only four offences were punished by death. By the English law no longer ago than the reign of George II more than 150 were so punished and today in the English code there are four. The court for trial of these capital offenders was the local Sanhedrim composed of 23 members who were both judges and jurors, prosecuting attorney and counsel for the accused," said Mr. Gordon.

"There was no standing army but the people were aroused to the colors very quickly. Mr. Disraeli termed the Arabs Jews up on horse back. They are, however, the sons of Ishmael, half brothers to the Jews and these are the lowest of the Jewish people in wealth, power, intelligence and religion, though said to be superior to their Gentile neighbors in each. It is a notorious fact that they have always suffered less from pestilential diseases than their Christian neighbors. They are practically exempt from consumption and all diseases of the respiratory organs. The average duration of Gentile life is computed at twenty-six years; that of the Jew according to a most interesting table of statistics is full thirty-six years. The reason of this is that the Jew follows their law of moral conduct.

In height they are nearly three inches lower than the average of other races; the width of their bodies with outstretched arms is one inch shorter than the height; whilst in other races it is eight inches longer in the average. But on the other hand the length of the trunk is much greater with the Jew, in proportion to their height than with other races.

Their social life is, if possible, still more remarkable; there is neither prostitution nor pauperism and but little abject poverty among them. Their average education is by far ahead of the nations by whom they are surrounded. All the adult Jews can read and write and compute figures. Of the four great human industries which conduce to public health, agriculture, manufacturing, mining and commerce as a general rule they engage only in one and also manufacture a little clothing for the body," said the speaker.

"We do not forget the time in the past when the peace of the whole world hung upon the Jewish prime minister of Britain. The single family of Rothschilds, the progeny of a poor German Jew, who three generations ago sold curious old coins under the sign of a red shield, are now possessors of greater wealth and power than was Solomon's when he could send 1,300,000 fighting men into the field.

The impudence of the low breed Jew is not one whit more detestable than the impudence of the low breed Gentile, children of the shoddy, who, by countless thousands swarm into our doors opened for them by our democracy."

Stealth

"This habit he learned by persecution for he dwelt everywhere in fear and trembling and had no assurance of his life. He was ever ready to leave because for at any moment he might be compelled to choose between leaving and death. He built no house for at any time he and his little ones might be thrust out of it or perish.

The speaker concluded by saying, "That Great Britain was the only other scattered nation, but she did not break from within—she scattered from without, for her core still remains sound. She is a pioneering nation for she has established colonies in every clime. The law of the United States is based upon the common law of England, but the President has more power than the king, for he can veto things that the king would not. The king takes the advice of the representatives of the people, but the president does not have to.

G. A. Gillespie spoke a few words urging the members to attend and support the Chautauqua. The visitors of the day were Rev. MacDonald of Knox United Church; George Thomas of West Toronto; Kiwanian Fred L. Hall of Ohio; Kiwanian W. H. Richardson of Ohio; R. Dutton, Toronto; T. J. Chaffey, Toronto, and G. A. Gillespie and J. J. Duffus.

FRENCH GOVERNMENT.

Will Insist Upon Ratification of Washington and London Agreements.

PARIS, July 16. — (Canadian Press.)—Government will insist upon the ratification of both the Washington and London debt funding agreements before parliament adjourns for its summer recess, Finance Minister Caillaux told the Chambers Finance committee today.

"Without these ratifications," he added, "there is no possible chance of obtaining credits for stabilization of the franc."

ATTEMPTED MURDER.

Niagaar Falls Man Fires Five Shots Into Wife's Body.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., July 16—Watching for his wife, Bertha, 18, to pass, Arthur Ryan, 27, sat in a local garage until she passed last evening, when he pounced upon her and fired five shots into her body, all taking effect. Running from the scene of the crime, Ryan went to the back of the lot and fired two bullets into his own body. Both are in hospital in serious condition. The woman has three bullets in her breasts and two in her hips, and Ryan has one wound through the body just below the heart and one in the arm.

When he caught her he fired one shot at her. She dropped and he grasped her and dragged her into a side driveway and fired the other four shots into her. She was rushed to the hospital and the police notified.

Sergeant Dart was assigned to the case and visited the usual haunts of Ryan, and finally found him where he had climbed into a haymow. Single-handed and knowing that he had a desperate man to deal with, Dart climbed through the narrow hole, calling on Ryan to put up his hands. Ryan submitted and was brought to the station, then removed to the hospital, where he is under police guard. Until X-rays are taken the exact condition of the pair cannot be known.

The woman has been living apart from her husband for four months and with her parents. Ryan has been trying to get her to return to him, and he is believed to have been enraged because of a non-support action she was about to take against him. There are two children.

ADOLESCENT ACT ENFORCEMENT UP

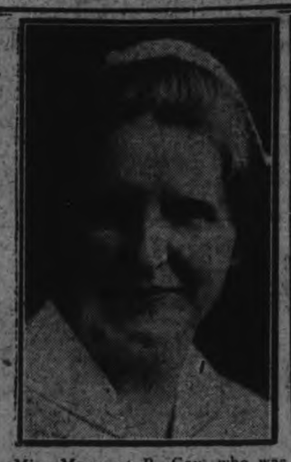
TORONTO, Ont., July 15.—(Canadian Press.)—A case of apparent hardship in connection with the working out of the Adolescent Act in city schools was cited by a trustee. He told of one young girl who was just under 16 years of age. She came to the city to live with her aunt, and secured a position in a departmental store. The education authorities stepped in and proposed to make her go to school for three months until she was 16 years old. She lost her job and had to return to the country.

That the board must enforce the Adolescent Act was the view of Trustee Plumptre. "The attendance officer shouldn't be merely someone who will go up and down the streets gathering in the children, but one who will be guide, philosopher and friend to them, to direct them into proper lines of training," declared Trustee Groves.



Miss Margaret R. Gay, who was recently awarded the George H. Cotér gold medal in practice and theory of dietitics on the occasion of her graduation from Vancouver General Hospital. MINES SUMMARY.

Boston Creek.

GOLD HILL. — Shaft has now reached a depth of 700 feet and present programme calls for picking up the downward extension of the ore located on the 600. When this ore is reached the intention of the company is to do considerable more opening up of the vein at this level than was carried on at the 600. The vein on the 600 showed a length of some 45 feet when work was stopped.

BARRY-HOLLINGER. — Good progress is being made on the enlarging of the mill and unless some unforseen circumstance crops up the mill should be running again the latter part of the month. The shaft has now reached the depth of 1000 feet, where sinking will be stopped for the present and crosscutting started. It will be interesting to see what results are obtained at these lower levels, which are the deepest in that district.

MINES SUMMARY

Teck Hughes

KIRKLAND LAKE, July 16.—As regards new mill, plans are all completed and will be gone on with just as soon as power charges are arranged. They are going ahead with their mill plans and for production on a scale of at least three times that at present. This means Teck Hughes, now producing at the rate of $1,400,000 a year, will, when present programme is carried out, produce at the rate of approximately $5,000,000 a year, equivalent to 100 per cent on their issued capital. They are good for this and we expect to see the present programme realized within two years.

Wright Hargreaves

Wright Hargreaves is coming into a very rosy position in regard to ore reserves. Early in July should see the raise in shaft on No. 2 vein completed. With new work going on on No. 1 shaft they will have that property in excellent position for big tonnage. There is no talk yet of materially increasing this tonnage but we feel certain that another six months will see a very material increase. All arrangements being made are somewhat similar to those at Teck Hughes.

Tough-Oakes Burnside

Have now developed on the 1225-foot level, east of the diabase dyke, sufficient commercial ore to make a mine of no mean size. The management is rather reticent in giving out information as conditions in this broken-up area are so uncertain. However, the ore is there. We will have news most any day now on the 1400 foot level which should be into the downward extension of the ore on the 1225. Then we will have two good levels in commercial ore which can be sent to the mill, and which will undoubtedly help production materially. Last month Tough Oakes produced $30,000 approximately, which is well ahead of all their charges. With the new ore coming from 1225 and 1400, which should arrive this month, we look for a still better production.

Lake Shore

Tonnage here cannot be increased materially until present shaft is enlarged. This may be done through a winze from the 1000 foot level, but we think could be preferably done from a winze through the 1000 foot level at the main shaft and an enlargement made of the main shaft at the same time.

Kirkland Townsite

Down to 550 feet and have started crosscutting. We like this property for its location, as well as for the way they are going at their work.

Crown Reserve

At present shut down. We cannot see where this property has a chance until it lowers its overhead very considerably and also locates some high-grade. An honest attempt has been made to develop a mine, but there still lacks a high-grade shoot necessary to bolster up the low-grade. This is one property that has a splendid chance of coming across provided they get the high-grade necessary to sweeten the low-grade already developed.

Macassa

The 10-drill compressor is now in operation. This will enable the management to proceed with their underground development at a much greater rate of speed. This property has excellent chance along the main break of Kirkland Lake District. We look for important news on this property.

General Motors Common Breaks New High Record

NEW YORK, July 16 (Canadian Press))—Bull movement in stock prices which has been held in restraint for several days by heavy profit taking and sporadic bear selling, broke out anew today, under leadership of General Motors common, which crossed 1163 to a new record high level with large blocks of stock taken nearly five points above yesterday closing level. Lower call money rates stimulated buying movement.

Non-ferous metal shares responded to a stiffening of the commodity prices, several of them touching their highest levels since the march break. Buying of Rails was confined to few issues, New Haven touching highest price since 1917 on reports of substantially increased earnings.

Noranda Gold Strongest At Standard Exchange

TORONTO, July 16 — Noranda featured moderately on the active and strong session of Standard Mining Exchange today, closing 25 cents higher at 16.90 after touching 17.00 mark for the first time in the current movement. Keeley registered advance of four cents per share in the silver list, closing at 1.64 while Castle Trethewey and Capitol each gained a point to 1.50 and 39 respectively. Crown Reserve was up half at 11. McIntyre jumped ten cents to 25.00 and Gold Hill also showed strength closing at 62 for net gain of two cents.

Gold Mines Lead List At the Toronto Exchange

TORONTO, July 16. — International Nickel and Noranda Gold mines featured trading of the Toronto stock exchange to-day, both in strength and activity. Nickel closed at 391 3-4c for net gain of one point for session, while Noranda made a jump of 38c to close at 16.95 after opening off 7 cents and reaching high of 16.99.

Remainder of the list was dull and featureless. Massey Harris common gained point to 59; Brazilian traction was up 1 3-4c to 101¼ and Consumers Gas ½ to 171. Page Hersey common was 1-8 lower at 48 1-8 and the preferred was down.

THE OLD HYPOCRITE.

Without answering anything I said to him, Doctor Flint said in a very nasty tone of voice, "I cannot understand, Miss Dean, why you did not speak to me about the bottle. You must have seen it had a poison label."

I looked straight into his face and bowed my head.

He chose also to ignore that, although he colored a bit.

"I must tell you that it certainly looked rather suspicious to me when Mr. Robinson told me that you had given that bottle into his hands. Surely you must know that I was the one to take charge of it?

I was so angry that I could hardly speak, and then I smiled inside of me. I couldn't help it, for I had a sense of power, which to me was the most thrilling emotion I ever had.

That old hypocrite was accusing me of the very thing I was intending to do. He was intimating that I was going to blackmail Mr. Robinson.

I expected through that bottle, although at the time I picked it up I was perfectly innocent of any such thought, to make Mr. David Robinson pay over to his stepdaughter 120,000 for what it and its contents meant to him. But I was not going to let that Judas browbeat me.

"I didn't think anything about it, Doctor Flint. When I came into the room after I had eaten my lunch a nd found Miss Cleaver on the floor in a convulsion, it did not take me a second—although I am not a doctor or even a nurse—to come to the conclusion that she had taken poison.

"You certainly were not so anxious to save her life as you were to get her out of the store, for you must have known that every second that you were talking over the telephone meant everything to her. It was then that I found the bottle and I don't mind telling you that the reason I did not show it to you was because when you came back from the telephone you were so afraid that I would get on to something that you sent me out of the room as soon as possible.

"I don't think, however, that I realized that I had the bottle in my hand until I got into the elevator. When I reached my station in the store Mr. Robinson came up to me and ragged me because I had been away from it for two hours. Of course, I was very nervous over Miss Cleaver and I felt very sore on the subject. I wanted to make Mr. Robinson have a few of those 'disagreeable moments' that you intimate Miss Cleaver gave to the Morton Department Store by dying, and so I answered him."

TOMORROW: A Clash of Wits.

LOVE LETTERS THAT MADE HISTORY

(By Joseph Kaye.)

MIRABEAU AND SOPHIE MONNIER.

Mirabeau's first period was a turbulent one. The future celebrated French orator and revolutionary backer engaged in one escapade and quarrel after another, culminating in his seduction of the young wife of the Marquis of Monnier. It was rather a despicable act, even though Sophie was not yet twenty and her husband seventy, for Mirabeau was admitted into the family circle with gracious hospitality.

Sophie and Mirabeau fled to Holland where they lived for a time in poverty, until Mirabeau was brought back to France and imprisoned, under sentence of death for his affair with Sophie.

The following is an extract from a letter written to Sophie from prison. It is begun with tender and sad allusions to the child of their love and imploring Sophie not to yield to morbid thoughts in her trouble. Believing his end had come he wrote

". . . ah, if in the bosom of the earth where I am returning I could preserve this celestial spark, this sensible soul, the forces and the energy of which were concentrated by you, I could hope to reunite with me some day my sweetheart and my child . . . I know not, my Sophie, I know not. I cannot think that my love shall not live as long as there shall exist a particle of my being. Be it allusion or be it reality, the soul of Gabriel (Mirabeau) and that of Sophie, their incomparable tenderness seem to me indestructible . . . Oh, if in a realm of eternal felicity, shielded from calumniators, fanatics and tyrants, we were reunited to love each other again, and to adore you! God, All Powerful God, render unto me my sweetheart: forgive me as a reward for her virtues. . . . Cast, cast a look of clemency on the one that my error has seduced! Enlighten her, protect her, give to her the strength to resist the sentiment of my loss, to discover the truth, to reveal it to my daughter and to deserve to become an object of Thy mercy.

"Oh, think unceasingly of the one who shall die while pronouncing your name, who cherishes you with the most faithful and tender love, who never failed at any moment of his life, not even in idea, to keep the sentiments that he had sworn to you, exacts from your tenderness and, if he dare say, from your gratitude that you live for your daughter, who is mine.

Gabriel."

But Mirabeau did not die. After three and a half years of imprisonment, he pleaded for a revocation of his sentence and such was the power of his oratory that he won his cause.

A new chapter of life brought a new vision and he saw in Sophie a different woman—one who did not meet his ideals. He deserted her and she consoled herself for some years with another man and then did what Mirabeau had so passionately exhorted her not to do in the above letter—committed suicide.

Plaits in the skirt and fulness on the shoulder play fulness two ways in a frock of pistachio-green crêpe de Chine with the collar and wristbands of a light shade of pinkish beige. This is an excellent type of dress for the business woman. You can make it of printed crêpe de Chine which does not spot as readily as the plain colors, protect it in the office with a good-looking smock and on the train or public conveyances with a straight coat of plain-colored crêpe Roma. A fairly light blue-and-white polka-dot print frock and a navy-blue Roma coat lightened by a hat of the lighter blue would make a smart Summer outfit.

HOROSCOPE

"The Stars Incline, but do not Compel"

FRIDAY JULY 16 1926.

Astrologers read this as a day of contrary planetary influences, in which wise inhabitants of Earth should be cautious in all their decisions.

The Moon is in adverse sway making for a tendency toward selfishness and injustice. The trend of this period will be toward accented individualism.

There is a sign of fair promise to those who seek employment but it is well to use reasonable persistence as positions may not be easily attained.

Jupiter today frowns on business initiative and the rule may cause pessimism concerning commercial conditions.

While there is to be a strong impulse in many lines of trade the advantage is to be with big corporations.

Combinations and new methods of co-operation are indicated by the stars which presage world demands on manufactures.

Banks now may come under an aspect that encourages envy and suspicion on the part of persons who have lost money.

Again governors of states and other men in high positions may suffer from unjust judgment and many disturbing political conditions.

Corruption and double-dealing on the part of many public servants will be uncovered, it is again prophesied. Institutions of states and counties will furnish material for newspaper sensations.

While this configuration prevails the mind should be closed against all depressing thoughts, for there is an aspect making for mental conflicts.

Increase in the number of suicides and sensational deaths is prognosticated. The use of drugs and stimulants will be found to underlie many tragedies at this time, if the stars are wisely interpreted.

August is to be a month in which European powers face great troubles and many international complications may be expected.

Persons whose birthdate it is should avoid over-reaching ambition in the coming year. Friends probably will give advice worthy of notice.

Children born on this day probably will show remarkable business sagacity. Both boys and girls may be endowed with unusual foresight, but many of these subjects of Cancer are rolling stones.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

(By Mildred Marshall.)

Facts about your name, its history; its meaning; whence it was derived; its significance; your lucky day, and lucky jewel.

GRACE.

The McClure Syndicate Inc.

The origin of the name of Grace is curious and somewhat imaginative. Several versions of its real derivation may be eliminated and the contention that it really comes from the Latin gratia meaning favor or bounty accepted. It is through this interpretation that the Greek Charities have come down to us as the three Graces. Gratia was used by early Italian writers for divine favor hence the theological meaning of grace.

The English name Grace is intended as the abstract theological term and was adopted as the time of the Reformation. Its continuation is thought to be due to its popularity with the Irish who think that it resembles their Graine (love). Grace and Gracie are both very popular in England and Ireland. Spain likewise has Engracia in honor of a maiden cruelly tortured to death at Zaragoya in 304 and Italy knows Graycella through Lamartine's pretty romances.

The most celebrated Grace was Grace O'Malley also known as Graine O'Malley a notable sailor chieftainess of the Southwest Coast. Once she came to visit Queen Elizabeth and when the two high-spirited women were together the semi-barbarian was more than a match for the civilized queen. She scorned Elizabeth's gift of a lapdog and offered the queen her own infant son born on the voyage saying that the queen was welcome to educate him as he would never make a man of spirit since his father came of bad stock.

The amethyst is Grace's talismanic stone. It promises her immunity from harm and disease especially if it be set in gold. To one of high strung nature it has power to sooth and calm and enforce even temper. Saturday is her lucky day and 4 her lucky number. The primrose is her flower.

"What colours are being worn this year?" says Mrs. Highbunk to Mrs Parisfuss, the swanky ladies outfitter

"Ah yes Madame," says the expensive Oracle as he twists his waxed moustache and figures new ways of adding to the price, "let me see; ah, yes the biggest inventers of ideas, the chief creators of original dress, in Paris, of course, have decided that black and red is to come out this year. Oh, yes, Madame, it is the very latest. Let me add, Madame, that these designers never offer anything old in the way of ideas. They have decreed that black goes well with red, and, for those who like a touch of individuality, a little orange trimming."

Mrs. Highbunk should have been named Mrs. Gobblebunk, for she jingles her money bag with delighted satisfaction, and beams a smiling praise upon the dapper little wax-wit who hands out the very latest colour laws from Paris.

The same Mr. Parisfuss is no fool. He is giving Mrs. Highbunk a service in styles. He knows what will go well with her sort of personality. He does not tell her all that, but he delivers the goods; he suits her; he makes her look like a million dollars; he knows what colours go well together.

Paris never made an original colour rule in its whole life of designing. All Paris does is to go out into the woods and fields and look at the flowers and birds and try to do likewise. And what a mess the Chief designers make of mixing colours, at times. They try to do what nature does, but they, in some way or other, fail to do it with the same finish.

Mrs. Highbunk came out in black, trimmed with red of a most brilliant shade, and a touch of orange here and there. She was a stunning example of dressing art. And in driving along the lakeshore drive, a marsh was passed. The marsh was peopled with Red-winged Blackbirds, glistening in the sun, their jet-black, glossy suits set off with flaming red shoulders trimmed with light orange. Mrs. Highbunk saw through Paris with a jolt. Some way or other her outfit fell short of this natural perfection, and, in the presence of the birds, she could have yanked Mr. Parisfuss's waxed moustache with considerable satisfaction.

INDUSTRIAL DENTAL CLINICS.

'Jack's as good as his master' may smack just a little of braggadocio in view of the fact that they do not share and share alike. There is, nevertheless, a mounting tendency in the industrial world for the master to pass a little of the cake to Jack along with his bread.

Many great industrial institutions can be readily recalled where the welfare of the worker shares equally with the profit side of the ledger, the concern of the respective managements. Nor is this concern wholly philanthropic, for, increasingly, industrial leaders are coming to recognize that what makes for the happiness and efficiency of the individual toiler, is also a potent factor making for industrial efficiency and wealth.

It is truism that health is the 'sine qua non' of both happiness and efficiency, and the employer is being educated to see that the factors conducive towards the health and general welfare of the toiler, are not alone negative—such as provision being made for hygienic working conditions, but are also positive—as providing him with medical and dental services.

Thus it has come that in many industrial concerns, these services are being made accessible to the employees through the good offices of their managements. While in the main the acceptance of such services is a purely voluntary one on the part of the worker, yet he has been quick to take advantage of the opportunities herein provided.

Citing one record: 'In inspecting the mouths of workers it has been found that not ten per cent had good teeth, while at least fifty per cent, to put it conservatively, had definite dental disorders, and the condition of their health was one of more or less impairment according to the extent of the trouble or the length of its continuance.'

Now, dental examinations will reveal a larger class of people whose mouth conditions appear normal, but who, nevertheless, are suffering from the absorption of poisons traceable to teeth that are apparently sound. It is here that this question touches the worker who, while subject to such conditions, yet suffering no pain, is quite ignorant that anything is the matter.

From the viewpoint of the management, not only is there to be considered the saving in the number of working days lost due to sickness, whih, in the average industrial concern, reaches an amazing total in the course of a year, but also the gain in output per man through reducing the margin of inefficiency due to ill-health.

As for the worker, the benefits accruing to him from the services under discussion, are too obvious to need elaboration.

'It blesses him who gives and him who takes.'

UNCLE WIGGILY

Today's Bedtime Story

By Howard R. Garis

UNCLE WIGGILY'S MERRY GO ROUND.

Copyright 1926 by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

She wanted a yeast cake to make a loaf of nut bread of which both Johnnie and Billie his brother were very fond. Billie might have scrambled to the store and then the accident would have happened to him but it was Johnnie's turn to go so it happened to Johnnie. For I may as well tell you before we go any farther that it was a sad accident that befel poor Johnnie.

His tail was run over by an automobile driven by a bulldog gentleman. Not that Johnnie would have been hurt any less if the auto had been driven by a Lady Bug. But I'm telling you the truth.

Johnnie was hurrying back with the cake of yeast for his mother to use in baking the loaf of nut bread when all of a sudden as the squirrel boy was crossing the street along came the auto and nipped off his tail.

Oh no not exactly nipped it off as the blackbirds nipped off the nose of the maid who was in the garden hanging

The tip of Johnnie's tail WAS RUN OVER.

"Oh! Oh! Oh!" he cried chattering fully and he almost dropped the yeast cake but no quite and over to the sidewalk he scampered and there he stood leaning against a tree and crying: "Oh my tail! My beautiful fluffy tail is all gone!"

"Oh n all gone!" barked the bulldog gentleman who stopped his auto and jumped out a open as he had seen that Johnnie was in. "You tail isn't hurt much—just the tip is squashed a bit. And it will grow on again."

"Do you think so?" asked Johnnie anxiously. For you know without his big bushy tail a squirrel cannot jump from tree to tree. Their tail balances squirrels and steadies them so they won't fall.

"Yes you'll be all right my squirrely chap" said the bulldog kindly. "I'm so sorry it happened and I'll stop around and see you tomorrow."

Johnnie limped into the house and soon Uncle Wiggily and every one in Woodland had heard about the accident. All the animal boys and girls called to see their playmate and tell him how sorry they were.

"Oh it isn't so bad" said Johnnie when his mother had tied a rag on the sore place. "It isn't as if my tail was all cut off. But I can't go swimming in Uncle Wiggily's duck pond ocean I guess."

"No indeed!" said Uncle Wiggily. "The salt I put in the duck pond to make it like the seashore would smart your sore tail Johnnie."

"But what can I do to have fun?" sighed the little squirrel chap sad like. "All the others are going in swimming" and he could see them splashing in the make-believe ocean as he sat on his porch.

"Ha! I know how I can make some fun for you" cried Uncle Wiggily. "I'll build you a merry-go-round and you can ride on that for there will be no salt on it to make your sore tail smart."

"Indeed he can for I'll help him!" barked the bulldog gentleman who had run over Johnnie's tail though without meaning to. "I am in the merry-go-round business—I set them up at seashore beaches for boys and girls to have fun on. I'll bring one here especially for Johnnie since it was my fault that he was run over."

"That will be great!" said Uncle Wiggily. Then he and the bulldog gentleman brought to the duck pond ocean a cute little merry-go-round just the right size for animal boys and girls and there was a golden elephant made of wood for Johnnie to sit on and ride in a circle.

There was music with the merry-go-round too and when it started going playing jolly tunes all the animal boys and girls rushed up out of the water and jumped on to ride with Johnnie.

"I'm sorry you had your tail run over" laughed Baby Bunty as she sat on the back of a wooden lion and rode around "but I'm glad we are having fun." And Johnnie said the same thing and next week his tail was all better.

So if the lump of butter doesn't roll itself up in the pancake and go to sleep instead of letting the knife and fork slide down hill I'll tell you next about Uncle Wiggily and the lemonade.

Troubles They Never Had

Lyrics Of Life

(By Douglas Malloch.)

THE QUIET HOUR.

I do not ask that all the day
With thoughts of me you shall employ.
I know what problems fret the way,
I know life's trouble, know it's joy,
I only ask that when your mind
From busier things may quiet find.
From toil released, from worry free,
That in that hour you think of me.

I know the day, the day's concerns,
I know the burdens men must bear,
How man must work for what he earns,
And all the load of business care.
I know you walk a world more wide
Than mine, and I am satisfied
If such a quiet hour may be
If in that hour you think of me.

For men go forth as men went out
In other days to other strife,
And, with the battle all about,
There's little time for house or wife.
But now and then a moment comes
When roar no guns, when roll no drums,
And, oh, I pray, whene'er it be,
That in that hour you think of me!

Tomorrow: THINGS OF MINE.

YOUR HEALTH

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D.,
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

MONOTONY IN WORK LOWERS VITALITY.

Not long ago I heard a candidate for office making a political speech. It really was a remarkable speech. He was referring to the conditions of labor and the tremendous strides made in the industrial world in the protection of labor.

The candidate paid his respects to employers and employes in their efforts to co-operate for the community good. Then he spoke as follows

"But the change and the growth have been so rapid that the adjustment to the new conditions has been comparatively backward. The driving pace of massed production has necessarily shortened the laborer's working hours. We are facing either one of two further changes, namely, either a further reduction in the working hours or a diversification in the laborer's work. It has been found that the human machine cannot work at top speed at one job without change day in and day out except at the risk of physical or mental breakdown or both.

There can be no doubt that some of the industrial demands are such that many employes are forced to do over and over again the most monotonous jobs in the world.

I remember writing an article two or three years ago about "Nut 48." This man had just one thing to do. He screwed on the forty-eighth nut in assembling the automobiles in the factory where he was employed. From early morning until late at night his job was to apply nut 48.

I don't need to tell you that such monotony in industry is deadening. It destroys initiative. It is discouraging in every sense.

Far be it from me to interfere with the efficiency, or the alleged efficiency, of any industry. I am convinced, however, that this candidate for high office stated a very true thing when he said that diversification in the laborer's work is essential to further progress in industry.

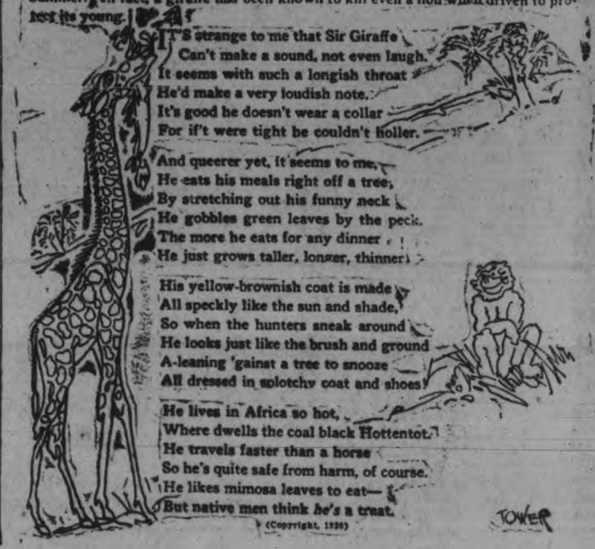
You cannot handle the human machine as you do a mechanical device. It has a soul and a mind. The human machine cannot conform to the operations which can be made for an indefinite period by a machine of steel and wood.

Every employer of labor can well afford to study the question of diversification. There will be no loss of effectiveness by the installation of a plan of diversifying duties. On the contrary, "change of work is play," and the laborer who has variety in his work is sure to accomplish more in the long run than the one who does the same thing through every minute of every day.

Facts About Giraffe

By SHIRLEY RODMAN WILLIAMS

IN disposition the giraffe is not unlike some children. He is quiet and peace loving, never molesting other animals. He will deliberately turn his back and go away rather than fight but, with all his gentle traits, when it becomes necessary, he can fight viciously, using his legs to kick and his head on its long neck as a hammer. In fact, a giraffe has been known to kill even a lion when driven to protect its young.



It's strange to me that Sir Giraffe
Can't make a sound, not even laugh.
It seems with such a longish throat
He'd make a very loudish note.
It's good he doesn't wear a collar
For if't were tight he couldn't holler.

And queerer yet, it seems to me,
He eats his meals right off a tree,
By stretching out his funny neck
He gobbles green leaves by the peck.
The more he eats for any dinner
He just grows taller, longer, thinner.

His yellow-brownish coat is made
All speckly like the sun and shade,
So when the hunters sneak around
He looks just like the brush and ground
A-leaning 'gainst a tree to snooze
All dressed in splotchy coat and shoes.

He lives in Africa so hot,
Where dwells the coal black Hottentot.
He travels faster than a horse
So he's quite safe from harm, of course.
He likes mimosa leaves to eat—
But native men think he's a treat.

Daily Short Story

LARKSPUR AND LILIES

By Ruby Douglas.

She was sitting on a rustic bench tucked away in a blue and white corner of the garden. Larkspur and lilies surrounded her. "It is also a lonesome spot," she added, "when love has hurt you."

Angela never walked in her garden among the lovely colors and fragrance without being poignantly reminded of the days when Tom Wall had shared lifes beautiful things with her. She never stood in the glow of a wonderful sunset, she could not step out into a silvery moonlit night without being stabbed by haunting memories of moments with him who had gone.

"I'm always believing he will return," she said whimsically to herself today. "It seems as if the paths of those who have been as close as we were must cross again."

A soft summer breeze stirred the fragrance of the lilies. She covered her face with her hands. "Oh," she breathed, "nothing so vividly recalls memories to me as a frangrance. Those lilies—"

It had been in this very corner that they had first admitted their love—nearly six years ago. She had seen love become visible in his eyes, like some tangible thing, as he stood watching her among the tall blue flowers of her garden. And she had known then that she, too, loved him.

For two years they had been happy, the two wonder years of her life as she looked back. Then, as they trod carelessly the pathway that should have led them into eternal happiness, they had stumbled. The obstacle was not a hidden menace but one that many had fallen upon before them. They should have seen. It was the old, old rock over which lovers from time immemorial have tumbled into lonely pathways Jealously, it is called, immemorial have tumbled into lonely pathways. Jealousy, it is called.

Neither had been jealous of the friends or associates of the other. Their faith seemed too firm for that. It had been a selfish lack of understanding of just how much a man should mean in a woman's life, what time should be his, what thought, what effort. He had believed with many of his male forebears that when a woman loved she should care for nothing else but to please the man she loved. She should have no thought of further career in life but marriage.

Angela had always been an artist of a sort. She had reached a successful position in the field of decoration—flowers were her inspiration and it was in floral designs for fabrics that she had succeeded.

Tom Wall had felt that this was only a temporary passion of hers and that she would drop her work entirely when she married him. He had taken it for granted, so thoroughly, old-time male was he.

So they had quarreled—a little at first, then violently. Angela would not give up work that involved the gift that had been given her and that her father and mother had fostered and through which she had enjoyed a great measure of success.

"Then," Tom had said, sadly but definitely one night as they stood by the gate, "I may as well leave you to your art—your career."

She had never heard from him again. Friends told her he had gone to France to take up work he had become interested in when he was in the war.

Many of her motifs traced long spikes of larkspur and, mingling with them, Madonna lilies. It was with this motif that she worked in her studio day after day on a floral design for a Canadian silk that was to be exhibited in Paris that autumn. She saw it growing lovely under her hand and she had great hope of its success even in the city of art.

Weeks passed by and she did not hear from the governors of the Paris exposition who had charge of the foreign designs. She began to be discouraged.

On a chilly moonlight night she sat in the window of her studio looking out over the now leafless garden. The late post had arrived and a letter had been brought to her. She had scarcely looked up as the maid had placed it on her table. The maid had long known that she need not expect a nod of thanks or even of recognition when Miss Angela seemed to be thinking in her studio.

After a while she took up the letter. It had a French stamp. In the soft light of her studio lamp she read it. It was from Tom. He had been at the Exposition and had seen her work. He had recognized the flowers from "their" garden. Four years had taught him much of life and loneliness—and the need of her love. How had he ever been selfish enough to want her to submerge a talent that was so wonderful? Could she—would she forgive him? Did she still care?

The letter went on to say many things that were as music to the ears of Angela. He had given her a cable address—so hopeful had he been after seeing that she had made their flowers the motif for a great work.

Angela, far from pensive and thoughtful now, dashed down the stairway and to the telephone. She sent a cable at once to Tom, forgiving him in more words than were necessary.

Incidentally her design took a prize and helped to make famous the Canadian exhibit of silk. But that was only a secondary consideration to Angela.

RAIN QUENCHES ARDOR OF FANS

Champion Had Difficulty in Making Stipulated Weight.

DELANEY LIGHTER.

NEW YORK, July 16 (Canadian Press).—Rain late yesterday quenched for at least 24 hours the fires of enthusiasm that had arisen about the Paul Berlenbach-Jack Delaney light heavyweight championship contest, scheduled for last night.

A few hundred intrepid fans had moved into the arena before the downpour came, rushing for the low-priced seats. They were notified that their ticket stubs would be honored to-night when the program will be staged without change.

Berlenbach, the champion, weighed 174¼ at the officials' tests three hours before the postponement. His manager announced that some hard work had been necessary to bring him to the scales, under the 175-pound limit.

Delaney, the challenger, tipped the beam at 166½, six pounds under what had been predicted, and there was some surprise among his followers although he always has made weight rather easily.

BATTING AVERAGES FOR INTERMEDIATES

Crescents Show Superiority Over Raybestos in Batting and Fielding.

If batting and fielding averages mean anything, Crescents show some superiority over Raybestos in both departments of the game. The averages given are for the four contests played in the City Intermediate loop, and they show several of the younger players well up. Crescents have collected a total of 29 hits and have made 7 errors as against 24 hits by Raybestos and 15 errors. Misplays by the Brakeliners have been very costly.

GORDON CUP GAME ON SATURDAY

Kick-off at Three O'clock—Played on King Edward Park.

The replay cup-tie of the Gordon soccer series takes place on Saturday afternoon between the Masseys, Phelan Cup holders and the Quaker Oats, at King Edward Park, at 3 o'clock.

Last Saturday these two teams battled for 90 minutes and never come to a definite decision. They both scored a goal apiece, while Quaker Oats had a full eleven, the Massey played the game with ten men, but they expect to have a full quota tomorrow.

The player gave a good exhibition of clean, fast soccer in all the previous encounters and the fans will not be disappointed in the Gordon game.

TOURIST DAY.

Havelock Expects To Stage a Big Tourist Day August 4th.

HAVELOCK, July 16—A meeting of the park board was held on Tuesday night for the purpose of making arrangements for Havelock's Tourist Day on August 4th. A committee was appointed to get in touch with the campers at Oak Lake, Belmont Lake, Round Lake and Trent River to get them interested and also to take part in the contests.

A mass meeting has been called for Friday night at eight o'clock to make further arrangements.

Four Legged Fielder In Mercantile League

During the course of last night's Mercantile League game at Riverside Park the ball was knocked out of play. The umpire, R. D. Taylor, signalled to a passer-by to throw it back. When this was done and the ball rolled along the ground a little dog ran forward and, seizing it in its mouth, darted across the bridge in triumph. Another ball was requisitioned and the game proceeded.

BURNBRAE DEFEAT ENGLISH LINE 13-5

BURNBRAE, July 16—Burnbrae again came from behind to defeat English Line 13 to 5 in a Seymour League game on Wednesday evening at the fair grounds. The Line squad were without DeCarroll and Rev. Daniel but assisted by C. McArthur at right and with Jack Cowell playing a useful game behind the bat, they gave the league leaders a scare and led them until the fateful fifth.

Burnbrae's usually steady infield made a host of misplays and garnered in eight errors with a few more that were decidedly not good baseball. Five of these came in the first inning, which together with a passed ball, Cowell's single and Haig's double gave the Line 4 runs. They scored one in the second when Ibey got to first on a throw to catch A. Little at the plate, and came home when E. Godden's hard driven liner went through Eagleson's hands for two bases. This ended their scoring though they threatened in the fourth with two hits, one a double by A. Little who was again caught at the plate while Blakeley was caught between third and the plate on a squeeze play.

Burnbrae evened things in the first innings on four hits, one a double by Shillinglaw, a passed ball and three errors. One single by Hay in the third was all that they could secure until the fifth when Craighead got to first on a passed ball and then the bombardment started. When the fragments of the broken Line machine were picked up Burnbrae had secured nine runs. Ibey's fast beaking curves and drops were too much for Cowell in the poor light and while Ibey really struck out six men in the last inning four of them reached first on passed balls. The Burnbrae hits were hard driven ones and although some were slowly handled by the fielders, yet the winning runs were scored from good solid hits.

Neither of the pitchers walked or hit a batter. Ibey altogether struck out eleven batters while Eagleson fanned six. In the final inning Eagleson retired the side on eight pitched balls, all strikes, fanning two and one out at first from short. He struck out Cowell twice in three trips to the plate, while Ibey did the same to Hume, Burnbrae's heavy batter, in four excursions to the platter. Eagleson led in batting with three hits in four times up.

The League standing now is:

	Won	Lost
Burnbrae	5	0

Next game—Trent River and English Line, ordered by executive to replay an unfinished game from the first of the season on Wednesday evening, July 21st. This is Trent River's home game. Both teams must be on hand in time to play at least five innings or drastic action will be taken by the executive.

A special feature of the Wednesday night game was a triple play by the Burnbrae infield in the third inning. With one down and Maybee on third and McArthur on second, K. Godden drove a hard liner which Shillinglaw picked off just at the ground, and shot the ball to Craighead who doubled McArthur at second. Craighead then threw to Hume catching Maybee at the plate. As the side was retired with the completion of the double play, the triple does not appear in the official score, but the play itself was a snappy one, not often seen locally, and the players deserve credit for their good work.

LOCK WORKS WIN.

Woollens Defeated By Score of 13-4 in Mercantile Fixture.

The Lock Works defeated the Woollens last night in a game of baseball in the City Mercantile League at James Stevenson Park, 13 to 4. The Lock Works men gave their pitcher much better support, and in some of the innings they went on hitting rampages. The Woollens, although playing a good game, were not steady in their support and were not able to hit the ball as well.

Lock Works—Ralph and Hall.

Woollens — Armstrong, Vinnett and Holland.

Umpire—R. Taylor.

EIGHT PITCHERS FEATURED GAME

Philadelphia Wins the Last Match of Series at Cincinnati.

PIRATES BREAK EVEN.

NEW YORK, July 16 (Canadian Press)—In a game in which eight pitchers took a hand, Philadelphia finished the series at Cincinnati yesterday, winning 8-6. The Phillies batted Luque out of the box in the sixth and immediately scored a couple of runs off his relief, Lucas. The Reds pounded Dean hard and forced him off the mound.

At St. Louis the Cards walloped Petty for seventeen safeties and downed the Brooklyn Dodgers, 11 to 5.

The Pirates earned an even break with the Giants in their four game series at Pittsburgh, winning the last game 3-0. Ray Kremer administered the whitewashing allowing but four hits. Smith and Rawling figures in the Pirate runs, whacking out the hits at the psychological moment.

Chicago bunched hits yesterday and defeated the visiting Boston team 3-1, making it two out of three on the series. Stephenson tripled, three singles in the ninth gave Boston its solitary tally.

CLERKS DEFEATED MILLS LAST NIGHT

CAMPBELLFORD, July 16.—The Clerks won last night's softball game, an exhibition affair, from the Mill, 13 to 9. Norham were to play the Clerks, but at the last moment, sent word they could not appear, and the Mill very kindly consented to fill the breach, to avoid disappointing the crowd. They were without Storie, the regular pitcher, and Reeves and Lambert did the heaving. It was a good game of ball, but lacked the excitement of a League fixture.

The line-up:

Rain Prevents Berlenbach-Delaney Battle at New York.

NEW YORK, July 16 (Canadian Press).—Fate laid a damp but kindly hand upon the brbad shoulders of Paul Berlenbach, light heavyweight boxing champion, when rain forced the postponement until to-night of his title bout with Jack Delaney, the French-Canadian contender, last night, as the champion will now have time to make up the weight he was forced to lay off to make the class limit at weighing-in- time yesterday. Berlenbach was too finely drawn when he tipped the scales at 171 1-4, while Delaney was in good shape at 166 1-2. It is estimated the champion will weigh 180 pounds when the bout starts to-night, while the challenger will scale 170.

TORONTO WINS LAST OF SERIES

Miller and Carlyle Each Drive in Two Runs.

PITCHER'S HOMER.

TORONTO, July 16 (Canadian Press).—The batting of Otis Miller and Cleo Carlyle and of Clarence Fisher's steady pitching gave Toronto a 4 to 3 victory over Baltimore in the fifth and final game of the series here yesterday. Miller and Carlyle each drove in two runs. A triple by Maisel and Miller's error gave the Orioles two runs in the ninth. The Leafs gave their best performance of the series, which ended three victories for Baltimore and two for Toronto.

At Rochester the Skeeters pounded out a 12 to 9 victory over the Tribesmen. Twombley knocked a homer.

Reading made it three out of four against Syracuse yetserday by defeating the home team 5-4, despite Dyer's nifty work. The local moundsman fanned nine.

Newark started off well against the Bisons, with three runs in the second inning, and finished well on the long end of a 7 to 3 score. Mamaux sailed smoothly to victory except for a homer in the ninth. The Newark pitcher knocked one himself.

DETROIT TRIM LEAGUE CHAMPS

Gehringer Clouts Home Run With One on Base.

DOUBLES AT BOSTON.

NEW YORK, July 16 (Canadian Press)—Detroit took an edge on the Yankees series two games to one, by coming out on top in yesterday's contest, 7 to 2. Gehringer clouted a home run with Fothergill on base in the fifth. The New Yorkers used Shocker, Hoyt and Thomas. Hoyt's recently injured arm lasted one good inning when he gave way to a pinch hitter.

At Boston successive doubles by Jacobson, Shaner and Rigney in the opening of the second game gave Boston a three run lead and a final 2 to 2 decision over the Cleveland Indians. The Indians took the opener, 4-2. Rigney, Sox shortstop, has accepted 24 chances without error.

Rain caused postponement of the Chicago-Washington fracas yesterday, while the same element robbed Philadelphia fans of a chance to see St. Louis in action twice.

LAWN BOWLERS BEAT ZION

SECRETS OF STARS INSIDE BASEBALL

as told to Billy Evans

BY GEORGE SISLER,
Greatest of First Basemen.

It is a difficult matter to tell a first baseman how he should conduct himself around the bag at all times.

In a great many cases it is hard to figure any set rule for play. Very often managers differ as to how they want their infield to play under exactly the same conditions.

How a first baseman should ordinarily play the bag is perhaps best determined by the stage of the game and the score.

What might be a good scheme in the third inning, when a run behind or ahead, might not be regarded as good baseball in the eighth or ninth session with the same conditions existing.

A situation that troubles a lot of youngsters is when to hold the runner on. The stage of the game, the score, the batter and the number of outs all have a certain influence on the proper play.

The first baseman should always play the bag, hold the runner on, with a runner on first and second base unoccupied.

When there are runners on first and second and a sacrifice is almost certain to be attempted, the first-sacker must play in close for the expected bunt, move in stealthily with the pitch, in a hope to get the runner at third, thereby breaking up the strategy of the opposition.

If your team is out in front by a comfortable margin and there are runners on first and second, one or no outs, it is usually advisable to play back, since it is almost certain that the batter will take a healthy swing, also that trying to steal at such a stage would be bad baseball.

Shifting of the feet is most important. This enables the custodian of the base to readjust himself to suit the direction of the thrown ball.

If the ball is thrown on the first baseman's right, the left foot should be on the corner of the bag nearest the line of travel of the ball, and the right foot extended the limit toward the throw in order to get the maximum reach in that direction.

Diamond Disputes Decided

by Billy Evans

Catcher interferes with batsman in act of striking at the ball. No runners are on the bases at the time. What is the proper decision and how is the play scored?

* * *

He should be sent to first regardless of what happens on said swing. He is entitled to that base no matter what the play.

No time at bat is charged against the batsman who is sent to first because of the interference.

It would be an injustice to charge a time at bat when an act of an opposing player eliminated his chances of making a base hit. To charge such a player would be penalizing him for something for which he was not responsible.

HELPFUL HINTS BY GOLFING STARS

By Special Arrangement With Colliers' Magazine.

JOHN DUNCAN DUNN—GET BENEFIT OF LESSONS.

Anybody can play a good game of golf, if he is earnest and ambitious, provided he will work along right lines and practice sufficiently. Sad to relate most people when they practice alone are so bored that they get little good out of it.

That is why it is better to practice under professional supervision, provided you don't have a professional who talks to you all the time. Some think that it is necessary to do this to earn the fee.

Too many ideas mean none at all—only confusion. Repetition until you eliminate the fault is the only way. You may get tired of hearing the same old thing dinned into your ears all the time, but then you have the remedy. Get busy and cure the fault and cure it permanently.

When you take lessons and when you practice is the only time to think of method. When you play the course you must only think of hitting the ball to the place where it ought to go. The man who talks about having 57 things to think about will never make a golfer.

Nine Wickets Fall For 201— "Cricket Bolshevik" Takes Six For Thirty Runs—Had Six Maiden Overs.

FINE STAND BY HALLOWS AND MAKEPIECE.

LIVERPOOL, England, July 16 (Canadian Press Cable).—History gives every indication of repeating itself in the game between the visiting Australian cricketers and Lancashire which concludes to-day, for the sensational collapse of the Red Rose batsmen yesterday afternoon, following a magnificent first wicket stand by Hallows and Makepeace, landed them in a hole from which there is no exit. To the 468 runs for six wickets accumulated by the Australians, Lancashire responded with only 201 for nine wickets, and it is quite likely that when the tenth wicket falls, Lancashire will have to follow on to-day.

When the game resumed yesterday forenoon, the Australians were still at bat, nursing an overnight total of 388 for three wickets. W. Bardsley, W. N. Woodfull and T. J. E. Andrews had fallen, and W. H. Ponsford and A. Richardson were at bat.

Slow Wicket.

On a slow wicket, rendered soft by a thunderstorm in the early morning, the game proceeded with all the advantage in the direction of the batsmen. Ponsford quickly added to his score, but Richardson found Macdonald's bowling somewhat tricky and mis-timed his strokes repeatedly. Eventually his wicket fell when he was caught out by Watson off Macdonald. He had then added only four runs to his score. In the next over Ponsford's citadel capitulated when Duckworth snapped him up, bringing L. M. Gregory in to pair with J. S. Rider. Gregory's sojourn was brief, Duckworth getting him in quick time off Macdonald, and the way was paved for J. H. Ellis, the wicket-keeper.

Ellis and Ryder.

Ellis and Ryder played until lunch, when the score had reached 468, and at that figure Warren Bardsley decided to close the innings and give Lancashire a chance at the bat.

The Red Rose opened favorably, although Makepeace was somewhat uncomfortable against the deliveries of Arthur Mailey. Nevertheless he and Hallows played a magnificent innings, and the century was hoisted in a couple of hours. Mr. Bardsley decided to switch his bowlers, and it was this that brought disaster, for Hallows was caught at the boundary by Everett. Makepeace was then joined by Watson. It was here that the collapse began. Watson was dismissed at zero with a catch behind the wicket, and from then on the tide set against Lancashire. Makepeace strove valiantly to ward off the disaster that was too evidently threatening the Red Rose, but his efforts went for nothing.

Iddon retired at 7; Eckersley at 10; Paynter at 1; Green at 2; Macdonald at zero — seven wickets fell to the Australians in five minutes under the hour, and of these Arthur Mailey had six for 23 runs.

A last ditch battle engaged in by Duckworth and Sibbles provided a brief respite from the procession to the wicket and back, but Duckworth went the way of his colleagues when Andrews caught him off Mailey. When time was called Sibbles was at bat, with only one wicket more to fall, and Lancashire's total stood at 201.

Mailey's Bowling.

It was the sensational bowling of Mailey that brought about Lancashire's fall. The New South Wales journalist—Mailey is a cartoonist—who has described himself as a "cricket Bolshevist," gave full play to his love for sabotage by wrecking every hope that Lancashire may have entertained of turning the tables on the tourists. His googlies had the home batsmen baffled, and the deadly nature of his deliveries can be noted from his record of yesterday afternoon. In 18 overs, he had 6 maidens (1.5 six-ball overs in which not a run was scored off his bowling), 30 runs for seven wickets. He took six wickets for 23 runs in 13 overs yesterday.

PITCHERS' TILT ON THE CARDS FOR TO-MORROW

Cairns and Heckman, the League's Leading Pitchers, To Fight It Out.

SHOULD BE THRILLER.

Ponies and Petes Clash at Riverside Park in League Game.

With Bruce Cairns and Al. Heckman, the two best pitchers in the Central Ontario League pitted against each other, to-morrow's game at the Riverside Park between Kingston and Peterboro, should be the best battle of the year. Both the Kingston left hander, and the Pete's starboard flinger, are in the best of shape and the fixture should resolve itself into a thrilling pitching duel. The Petes expect to be at full strength to-morrow, although Harrison may be an absentee owing to the illness of his mother. If the big first baseman is away Fred Ash will take care of the duties at the initial corner. The teams will be sent away at three o'clock by Umpire Alex. Kay.

STRAWBERRY TOURNAMENT

This Evening at Local Bowling Green—Draw Will Be Made at 7.30 Sharp.

STRANGE FIND.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., July 16. — While bathing near the rapids on the outside of Whitefish Island, opposite the ship canal, Fred Tuominen, aged 15, found a curious relic of the old Algoma days in a copper kettle, which presumably had been made by the French and in some way had been lost in the rapids many years ago.

The old kettle badly worn by the action of the water, was like a sieve, and the handle had been rusted through but quite enough of it was left to identify it.

French Franc Sinks To Lowest Level at the Close

PARIS, July 16 (Canadian Press) —The French franc reached new depths on the official closing of the Bourse to-day, at the very hour when Finance Minister Caillaux was due to appear before the Chamber of Deputies Finance Committee to plead for a favorable report on his bill for rehabilitation of the currency.

Record breaking quotation at the close of the Bourse was 42.49 francs to the dollar and 206.40 to the pound sterling.

POLITICAL FORCES UNITE IN N. OXFORD

Liberals and Progressives Will Call Joint Convention To Name Candidate.

WOODSTOCK, July 16. — Following several conferences of the executive of the North Oxford Liberals and the North Oxford Progressives, the decision was reached to hold a joint convention of the two parties here on Friday, July 23, for the purpose of selecting a joint candidate to contest the riding at the forthcoming Federal election.

Several names have been prominently mentioned as aspirants for the candidature, some of Liberal leanings while others are of Progressive persuasion. Just what will transpire at the joint convention is hard to forecast.

On the other hand, while the Conservative Association has not as yet named a convention date for selection of a candidate, all are agreed that Dr. Donald M. Sutherland, the former Conservative member for North Oxford, will have no opposition for the candidature.

HEART STOPS TWICE.

But Little Chap Still Lives and is On Way To Recovery.

TORONTO, July 16. — Since he drank a quantity of gasoline on July 9th and was rushed to the Hospital for Sick Children, three year old Lloyd Skinner's breathing has completely stopped twice. Resuscitative efforts of skilled doctors and nurses, however, have saved his life on both occasions. The little lad, whose home is on St. George street, is now on the way to recovery.

BILLY EVANS Says

Clever Strategy.

One of the prettiest plays in baseball is hitting after the runner.

The less lively ball in use this season has brought back this most interesting play. Its successful execution calls for a keen eye and perfect timing by the batsman.

Hitting after the runner is a sort of a delayed edition of the ordinary hit-and-run play.

When the batsman is hitting after the runner he looks to see who is covering second on the play, then attempts to hit the ball through the vacated territory.

Ability to do this stunt calls for a loose stance at the plate, permitting the batsman to shift his style to suit the pitch in order to hit the ball through the open territory.

No two players in the American League pull this play better than Eddie Collins and Bucky Harris, both managers, as well as the premier second-sackers of the organization.

* * *

Uncertain Sport.

No sport in all the world possesses the uncertainty of baseball.

For proof I refer you to the spring showing of the Athletics of 1925, against the present season

Sam Gray won something like nine straight to start the season. The fine showing of "Slim" Harriss made Connie Mack believe his tall pitcher had finally arrived. Eddie Rommel, ace of the staff, also pitched in his best form.

"Lefty" Grove, highly touted southpaw, the pitcher Mack figured would supply a pennant-punch to his club, just couldn't get going.

* * *

Form Reqersal.

This spring we have an entire reversal of form. Instead of the right-handers starring, it is the southpaws who are carrying the banner.

Grove is the sensation of the year. Fred Helmach is doing a great comeback and Walberg and Pate have been most valuable. The veteran Jack Quinn is the only right-hander to run true to form.

Illness and injuries have seriously handicapped the righthanders. Gray, Rommel and Harriss. When they arrive the Athletics are going to be a greater menace than ever.

* * *

Pennant Punch.

Wilbert Robinson, manager of the Brooklyn Robins, made that remark to me after the Yanks had beaten his club in the first two games of a scheduled 12-game series.

"There isn't a soft spot in the Yankee batting order. Even the pitchers can hit," he contunued. "It's a case of bearing down by the opposing pitcher from the top to the bottom of the lineup."

If the genial Robbie had made that remark at the close of the Brooklyn-New York series it would have been regarded in the light of an alibi, for his club lost all 12 games.

But he didn't. He made the statement at the very start and the Yankees proceeded to make him a wise prophet by turning almost every game into a slugfest.

The Yanks have continued their barrage of base hits against the American League clubs.

ANSWERS MR. GORDON.

The Editor of the Examiner,
Peterborough, Ont.:

Dear Sir: The Hon. G. N. Gordon, in an address to the Ladies' Liberal Club, as reported in your issue of yesterday's date, appears to have made some reference to myself, as follows (to quote from the newspaper report:)

"Mr. Gordon went on to speak of the action of E. A. Peck, M. P., in voting against the recent Budget, against Penny Postage and agoinst a reduction in Income Tax."

I was very much surprised that Mr. Gordon, who certainly kept in close touch with affairs in Ottawa during the recent session, should have seen fit to make such a statement, as as the statement is entirely untrue.

I did not vote against the Budget, nor against Penny Postage, nor against a reduction in Income Tax.

It is to be hoped that Mr. Gordon will withdraw his statement and inform his select audience that on this occasion at any rate, he has mislead them.

Yours truly,

COBOURG HORSE SHOW.

Well Known Sportsmen Have Arranged To Hold Show.

COBOURG, July 16.—Although the Cobourg Horse Show committee are not holding their regular five days' show this summer, it will be of interest to the many admirers of the Cobourg Horse Show throughout the district to know that Sir Clifford Sifton and other well-known Toronto horsemen are arranging to put a show on here for three days during August.

It will consist principally of hunters and jumpers, with the usual spectacular jumping events.

The horse show will follow the polo matches which are to be held here the first week in August with teams from Toronto, Rochester, Buffalo, Pittsburgh and Montreal competing.

THEATRE

AT THE REGENT

Theatre patrons who admired Buck Jones in "Lazybones" and enjoyed his quaint conception of the indolent, irresponsible but lovable "Lazybones," will find many traces of the same fine character, sketching in his newest Fox picture, "The Gentle Cyclone," which comes to the Regent Theatre to-day for a two-days' run.

Buck, of course, is the "cyclone" and despite the suggestion of gentleness in the title of the picture, Mr. Jones at times is as vigorous and tornadic as his fondest fan could wish. In fact, in many of the scenes of "The Gentle Cyclone," Buck swings a pair of very lusty and decisive fists.

The role presents Mr. Jones in fine contrasts, for at times he is as gentle and apparently as harmless as the title suggests. Again, he is the wild-riding, fear-defying Buck Jones of many a valiant western picture.

"The Gentle Cyclone" has been made under the direction of W. S. Van Dyke, who has piloted Mr. Jones through many of his best western stories. The cast has been selected with unusual care, and a picture with fine entertainment value has been produced.

The NUT Cracker

By JOE WILLIAMS

The old pepper may be a great thing, yet we never heard of a busher bringing $100,000 in the open market because he could yell "Attaboy!" louder than anybody else.

Don't let mistakes bother you. . . . That's why they put rubbers on lead pencils and niblicks in golf bags.

The courts have decided Harry Greb must keep his manager two more years. . . . This is what he gets for not insisting on a no-decision arrangement, so popular with the modern pug.

And, by the way, is Mr. Greb still putting his best foot forward in the swank dance halls of the nation these days, or nights?

News comes from London that a new English heavyweight prospect is being developed in the person of Charles Chetwynd. . . . And just when we had settled back to enjoy the summer, too.

The headlines tell of a 70-year-old hubby who objects to his 80-year-old wife running around at night. . . . O, dear, O dear, this younger generation!

Hank Gowdy will be remembered as the first ball player to enlist in the war. . . . That is, he will be remembered as such by everybody but the baseball moguls.

They took the Prince of Sweden for a ride in the subway last week. . . . If diplomatic relations between the two countries are broken soon, you'll know why.

Georges Carpentier took another ear-trimming the other night, which makes him three behind the Phillies in the matter of aggregate losses.

More than 30,000 specimens of the boxing bacilli paid official dough to see Carp bounce up and down on the canvas while dodging leather salutes from Tommy Loughran of the fifth-rate Philadelphia Loughrans.

This is more people to the square inch than you could persuade to attend a free barbecue, a scientific discussion of the home life of the large-mouth bass, or an outdoor demonstration of mustache waxing.

"Willie, run down to the drug store and fetch me a T-bone steak, a coal scuttle, three yards of pink crepe de chine and a pair of hip boots."

Only victory the Orchid Man ever won in America was when he bowled Battling Levinsky over by leading lightning fast frown to society boxes and following with terrific right glower to press row.

Still you gotta hand the Frenchman credit. . . . He's only bloke known to the racket that has made a losing business a winning business.

It's no trick at all to sell Standard oil stock in open market, but it takes rare salesmanship to peddle worthless paper in a Doc Cook polar expedition.

Carp came over here with a dime's worth of fighting ability and a million dollars' worth of color, showmanship, acting skill and press agentry.

On strength of this beautiful tableau Carp was matched with Dempsey in Battle of the Simpery. Main idea of this match, as we look back on it with watering eyes, was to teach fight fans difference between Marsellaise, the march, and mayonnaise, the dressing.

This was just the place to come with it, too, for no country places higher or more idiotic premium on side show hokum than our own wide-eyed, trusting Nordics.

Moviegraphs

HOLLYWOOD, July 16.—Next to Charles Spencer Chaplin, Adolphe Menjou probably has the most cultivated taste in pajamas, which are now being affected by Hollywood sophisticates as matutinal garb in the seclusion of the home.

So clad, in a color to fit his mood, Menjou is wont to repair to his garden to rehearse his movie roles, according to observant neighbors. And there seems to be few neighbors in Hollywood who aren't observant.

* * *

Carl Laemmle, shrewd, genial head of Universal Pictures, is nothing if not economical. It hurts him to have even an idle movie title lying around the lot.

Some time ago he acquired the right to use the title "Love Me and the World Is Mine." Since then he has tried to append it to at least five pictures, but has always been talked out of it by his associates. He has finally attached it to a film of "The Affairs of Hannerl," let rhyme and reason fall where they may.

* * *

The fears of professional alarmists that the motion picture exercises a baneful influence on youngsters would seem to be dissipated by U.S. Children's Bureau statistics showing a marked decrease in juvenile delinquency within the past 10 years, notably in the big cities where children go by hordes to photoplays.

* * *

Many are the means by which prudent movie folk take up financial slack between pictures, or invest surplus funds. And seldom are these means spectacular.

Charlie Chaplin has sponsored and invested in a delicatessen store operated by one of his former studio associates.

Lew Cody and George K. Arthur have an interest in Hollywood barber shops.

Raymond McKee owns the "Zulu Hut," a novel roadside inn, but is himself seldom seen there. Mae Murray owns apartment houses.

A broker tells me that most picture folk who are comfortably saharied regularly play the New York stock market. This is partly a fashion—the thing to do, the gesture to make; they want to be considered folk of affairs, of shrewd judgment, in the business world. Wild and extravagant expenditure of money is almost an echo only in Hollywood.

* * *

Edmund Lowe, playing "Sergeant Quirt" in Fox's "What Price Glory," is being coached in soldier discipline and deportment by Top Sergeant T. Brady, loaned for that purpose by the U.S. Army.

* * *

Between pictures—Marion Nixon takes long motor trips to west coast cities; Helene Chadwick hunts and swims, according to season; Dorothy Devore goes hiking and camping; Lilyan Tashman, Irene Rich, Florence Vidor and Dorothy Mackaill ride horseback; Ned Sparks shoots clay pigeons.

And then there are those who fake an intense interest in popular sports for publicity purposes. Trout fishing, for instance. The season has just opened in California, and you are likely to see pictures of lovely movie gals, gorgeously clad, casting for the finny rainbow.

Matter of fact, most of 'em don't know the difference between a trout and a turtle. But the press agent knows his seasonal stunts.

Dr. T. A. Wright, coroner, announced that an inquest would not be necessary.

Miss Reid was found by Constable Henly in the early hours of Thursday morning. Dr. Wright was called to the scene and pronounced life extinct. She had been dead for about two hours when discovered by the police.

The late Miss Reid was born in Peterboro, Ont. She spent her early years in Eastern Canada and came to Calgary about seven years ago, and has been conducting a dress making establishment from that time. She was about 55 years old. IN POLICE COURT.

The three C.P.R. men who were remanded for sentence on a charge of stealing a quantity of beer, the property of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, were allowed to go on suspended sentence providing they would furnish bonds for their future good behaviour.

J. F. Strickland, who appeared for all the accused, stated that all three had been in the employ of the company for more than five years and by their action had lost their jobs as well as forfeiting their pension rights.

Magistrate O. A. Langley, addressing the accused, said that in view of the fact that the Crown Attorney had agreed to suspended sentence and also that another charge was pending against them, he would permit them to go on suspended sentence.

At the conclusion of the case the three accused were arraigned on charges of having liquor in an unlawful place.

Mr. Strickland asked for a week's remand in each case, which was granted.

FRANC SHOWS SMALL RECOVERY AFTER SINKING TO LOW LEVEL ON VOTE AGAINST LEGISLATION

Measure Will Come Up Again in Open Chamber To-day.

DEBT SETTLEMENTS.

Imperative Action Needed To Ratify British and U. S. Agreements.

PARIS, July 17 (Canadian Press) —The French franc, which has been slumping badly, showed some improvement today in unofficial trading, the Bourse being closed. The franc, which was quoted at 42.35 to the dollar at 9.30 a.m., climbed to 40.80 at noon.

Reports were in circulation that Finance Minister Caillaux har intervened in some unknown way in the market. The reason for this, it was said, that he found it necessary to act since various members of the Chamber of Deputies have been saying that the franc is still on the downward trend, despite the fact that the Finance Minister has been in power some time and has concluded the debt agreement with Great Britain.

PARIS, July 17 (Canadian Press). —The Finance Committee of the Chamber of Deputies, by a vote of 14 to 3, yesterday, refused to approve the granting of full powers to the Government to legislate by decree in the battle against the fall of the franc. But, undaunted, Premier Briand and Finance Minister Caillaux made up their minds to place responsibility squarely on Parliament and the measure will come up for discussion in the open Chamber to-day, in spite of its defeat in committee.

M. Caillaux informed the Finance Committee of this last night, and also made it known that he would demand that Parliament ratify both the Mellon-Berenger debt settlement with the United States and the debt agreement recently signed with Britain before the summer recess.

Since he had explained the financial situation to the Chamber a few days ago, M. Caillaux told the committee the country's fiscal affairs had assumed such an aspect as to necessitate passage of the bill giving full power to the Government with the shortest possible delay.

"We do not seek to abolish the prerogatives of Parliament," he said, "but in the present grave circumstances, they must be temporarily suspended."

As for the United States and British debt settlements, M. Caillaux's statement was that negotiations were going on in Washington in an effort to obtain some concessions. He had learned from the members of the committee having the matter in hand that a communication was expected from the United States Government within a few days announcing that it was not the intention to adhere strictly to clause 7 of the Mellon-Berenger accord, concerning commercialization of the debt.

"But," he added emphatically, "both agreements must be ratified before the Parliamentary recess or all paths to foreign credits will be barred."

The slump in the franc, which attained such momentum on Thursday continued yesterday with accelerated speed. The pound opened at 200 and the dollar at 41.11, and the downward movement continued, the quotations at noon being 204 and 41.90. Official quotations at the closing of the Bourse were 206.40 and 42.49, but after trading on the Bourse closed the franc rallied slightly, there being trading at 202 to the pound and 41.53 to the dollar. It is recalled that in June, 1925, the franc was at 100 to the pound, 20 to the dollar, thus in not quite 13 months the franc has dropped from one-fourth of its pre-war value to an eighth.

Washington debt accord, which has excited much opposition here, according to present plans, will not be taken up until after the agreement with Great Britain is approved.

Benjamin Strong, Governor of the Federal Reserve Bank, New York, who has been at the resort of Antibes, near Nice, simultaneously with a visit there of Montague Norman, governor of the Bank of England, is leaving for Paris Monday. He is expected to have intimate talks with M. Moreau, governor of the Bank of France, and probably with M. Caillaux. Mr. Strong, however, is understood to have clearly indicated that he can make no promises or even consider what might be done for France in the future until the Mellon-Berenger accord is ratified.

Montagu Norman left Antibes for London yesterday morning; he will spend to-day in Paris. It is said that he also has revealed that he cannot discuss the question of credits to the Bank of France until the London agreement is approved by the French Parliament. This is probably what M. Caillaux had in mind when he told the Finance Committee that the agreements must be approved or "all paths to foreign credits will be barred."

The defeat of the full powers bill at the hands of the Finance Committee yesterday was due to the votes of the members of the Left groups. The Socialists failed to follow the example of their colleagues in Belgium, who joined with the Conservatives and Liberals in voting dictatorial powers to the King.

Close followers of Parliamentary life aver that the deputies do not as yet realize the seriousness of the situation, and are continuing to play party politics, in the face of national danger.

Cecilia, She Loves Music, But 'Tony' Blacks Her Eye

PHILADELPHIA, July 17. — "He sings such funny songs. We thought he'd sing for us. And then he hit Cecilia in the eye with his old umbrella."

That was the testimony of playmates of Cecilia Wilks, 10, before Magistrate Dorn at police station against Antonio Antoniani, who was charged with assault and battery.

Antonio, stooped because of a spinal affliction, told a different story through an interpreter. Antonio loves children, the interpreter said, but often his heart is grieved because they laugh at him. He was passing Cecilia's home and a group of children laughed and crowded about him, saying things he did not understand. He swung his umbrella, but did not mean to hurt them.

Antonio was sentenced to thirty days in the County Prison.

SEARCH SHIFTS TO THE BORDER

Authorities Have New Information in Woman Evangelist Case.

AWAIT AIR MAIL.

LOS ANGELES, July 17 (Canadian Press).—The search for the kidnappers mentioned by Aimee Semple McPherson in the story of her abduction shifted back to the Mexican border to-day. The authorities said they had received reports that a "heavily veiled" woman and two male companions stopped at a secluded mountain resort at Jacumba, near the twin cities of Calexico and Mexicali. The trio arrived at the resort on May 21, three days after the evangelist disappeared at Ocean Park Beach. They are said to have left Hastings in the night.

The authorities are also awaiting the arrival in the air mail of important documentary evidence promised in a telegram purporting to have been sent by Kenneth G. Ormiston, former radio operator at Angelus Temple, and a friend of the woman pastor. The telegram, which stated that the correspondence would have an important bearing on the McPherson case, was said to have come from "somewhere in North Carolina."

SERGT. FULTON LED SHOOTING

Englishman Wins King's Prize at Bisley After Tie.

SECOND TIME.

BISLEY, July 17.— (Canadian Press.)— Sgt. A. G. Fulton of Queen's, Westminster, England, former prize winner, won the King's prize at Bisley this afternoon, after shooting off a tie with Dr. F. Kelly, late University of London, Cadet Vesey, late Cambridge University, and Lt. L. B. Hughes. Sergt. Fulton is a veteran of 72 years. The four finalists each aggregated 286 out of a possible 300 in the second and third stages of the match. Sgt. Fulton won the King's prize also in 1912.

A London woman recently was awarded damages of $2,200 from a hair dye concern for injuries claimed to have been caused to her hair by its preparation.

TWO COMPETITORS ARE DEBARRED FROM FUTURE BISLEY MEETINGS FOR DISCREDITABLE CONDUCT

Used Rifles That Did Not Comply With N.R.A. Regulations.

WERE IN FINAL.

Both Culprits Had Made Good Scores in Former Events.

BISLEY CAMP, Eng., July 17 (Canadian Press) — "The King's Hundred" of former years—the crack rifle shots competing in the final for the King's Prize—will be only 98 today, but in this 98 will be seven Canadians.

Two of the competitors in the final stage were yesterday debarred forever from National Rifle Association meetings at Bisley. They are Lieut. G. Medland, late of the Field Artillery, Devon, and Armorer Staff Sergeant Uglow, late of the Royal Army Ordinance Corps, both of whom were found guilty of using rifles which did not comply with N. R. A. regulations.

"At a meeting of the committee Armorer Staff Sergeant Uglow, late of the Royal Army Ordinance Corps, and Lieut. G. Medland, late of the Field Artillery, Devon, were found guilty of discreditable conduct by knowingly using rifles contrary to N.R.A. regulations Friday.

"The committee resolved that the said Uglow and Medland shall forfeit all their entrance fees and every prize won by them since the occurrence and be for ever disqualified from competing in any prize meeting of the association, and shall not be entitled to have prizes won by them at the current meeting presented to them at the presentation of prizes on Saturday."

Both Well Known

Both men are well known at Bisley. Uglow last year won the bronze medal for the highest score in the first stage of the King's prize, and finished fifth in the final. Lt. Medland won the Daily Telegraph Cup last Monday, and he defeated Lt. Desmond Burke of Ottawa and four others in a tie shoot-off for the Donegall Challenge Cup on the same day. These, and any other prizes won by them before yesterday, are unaffected, but the committee's decision explicitly debars both men from competing in the final for the King's Prize, for which both had qualified yesterday.

Canadians Qualify

The seven Canadians in the final of the great match today and their scores out of a possible 150 in the second stage today, are as follows: Sgt. J. Borland, Toronto, 144; Pte. J. Houlden, Hamilton, 144; Major R. M. Blair, Vancouver, 142; Sgt. G Emslie, Toronto, 142; Q.H.S. Parnell, Verdun, Que., 140; Captain Alex Martin, Calgary, 140; and Sgt. K. McGregor, Ottawa, 140.

The scores they made yesterday are important, for the King's Prize winner will be the man who made the highest aggregate in the second and third stages. The third stage will be at two distances, 900 and 1,000 yards, fifteen shot at each distance.

Canada's Bisley contingent did not easily provide as many men for the final as competed last year. The last three with scores of 140, had to shoot off with 27 others for 27 places in the final, which is restricted to the best 100 scorers, but fortunately were successful in obtaining places.

For Fourth Time

Captain Martin today will be competing in a King's Prize final for the fourth time. It will be the third such experience for Major Blair and Q.M.S. Parnell, and the second time for Sgt. J. Borland and Sgt. G. Emslie, the Toronto men. Pte. Houlden of Hamilton and Sgt. McGregor of Ottawa are competing for the first time in the final. In fact, they are the youngsters among the Canadian Bisley team this year, but, as with Lieut. Desmond Burke of Ottawa, King's Prize winner two years ago, there is nothing juvenile about their marksmanship.

D. Kelley of the London University won the silver medal for the highest score in the second stage after the shoot-off last night. The bonze medal winner—first stage—was Warrant Officer Barber of H. M.S. Excellent.

Woman Eliminated

Miss Badcock, of the South London Rifle Club, the first woman ever to shoot in the King's Prize, which is only for past or present members of his Majesty's forces, missed qualifying for the final stage by only one point today. The lowest score which qualified was 140

R. T. Caiger, aged 86, who has attended every meeting of the National Rifle Association since its institution in 1860, finished second in a claybird match today. He has for many years now put in full days in the press room, with occasional turns as a marksman.

A man who is good enough to shed his blood for his country is good enough to be given a square deal afterwards; more than that no man is entitled to, and less than that no man shall have.—Roosevelt.

Brother In Africa Finds Sister In States By Radio

NEW YORK, July 17 (United Press).—Mrs. Lydia G. Nelson, who has been out of touch with her brother for twenty-six years, has found him in Africa by radio. The brother, Siegfred Gensen, who also had been trying to locate his sister, broadcasted an appeal from Southern Africa, where he is a construction engineer. The message was relayed to America, and Mrs. Nelson, listening in, picked it up. She is on her way to Africa. Mrs. Nelson is a widow, and has been living at 1135 McAllister Street, San Francisco.

Lady Astor opposed the tax on the grounds that it would encourage gambling. Although Lord Astor owns one of largest racing stables in Britain, neither he nor his lady bets.

NO RESUMPTION OF COAL SUBSIDY WRITES BALDWIN

Agrees To Receive Deputation From Anglican and Free Churches.

MOVE FOR PEACE.

Documents Show That Miners' Executive Recommend Men Resume Work.

LONDON, July 17 (Canadian Press).—A further move in the Churchmen's programme for peace in the coal fields, where the miners are on strike, was made this afternoon. Prime Minister Baldwin, in a letter to the Bishop of Lichfield, he agreed to receive a deputation from the Anglican and Free Churches on Monday evening.

The Prime Minister made it clear, however, that the Government could not possibly assent to any further coal subsidy, such as was seemingly implied in the peace propositions worked out between the Churchmen and the executive of the Miners' Federation in their recent conference.

Although Premier Baldwin's letter was positive in declaring that there could be no resumption of the subsidy, it is though in circles closely watching the situation that this will not preclude the possibility of renewed negotiations which might have definite outcome soon.

Documents forwarded to the Premier by the Church in requesting an interview, show that the Miner's executive agreed to recommend that the men accept the proposals and for immediate resumption of work on status quo. Meanwhile the national settlement would be worked out, within a period not exceeding four months, along the general lines of the report by the Royal Coal Commission.

The executive made proviso, however, that Governmental assistance be granted for the period of negotiations.

CHASE OVER ROOFS IN DARK FORCES BURGLARS TO LEAVE SILKS FROM CHESLER STORE

Constable Wheeler Stumbles Over Bundle of Dresses Thrown From Window By Which Marauders Gained Access—Parcel Struck Ash Can and Falls in Middle of Alley.

TWO MEN SEEN BY "CURLEY" NOYES; CONSTABLE THOMPSON GLIMPSES ONE

Loot Totalling $700 Retrieved By Quick Action of Policeman—Miscreants Last Seen Running Along the Roof Near Water Street Building—Fruitless Search Kept Up Till Daylight.

Two burglars who broke into B. Chesler's ladies' wear store at 392 George Street this morning were forced to flee over the roofs when Constable Joseph Wheeler stumbled over a bundle of silk dresses in the back lane while making his patrol at two o'clock. The constable telephoned in an alarm and a cordon was thrown around the block, other policemen chasing the intruders through a skylight and over the adjoining roofs. Although the search was kept up until long after daybreak, no trace of the burglars was found after they were seen running along a roof near Water Street.

Constable Wheeler made his regular rounds at 12.30, and night watchman Harry Young also found everything secure on his beat. At 2 o'clock when the constable again visited the property he found the front door secure, and went around the alley at the back, trying the back doors. Stumbling over the bundle, and seeing by the light of his flashlight that it was composed of silk, bundled up with the arms of one dress holding the parcel, he flashed his light upward and saw two men at one of Chesler's windows. He seized the silk and ran to alarm the police station, where Sergeant John Deannard soon had his forces arranged. Constable Gordon Puffer brought Mr. Chesler in the police car, and entered the store with Sergeant Deannard, while Constables Wheeler and John Thompson guarded the rear of the building.

The investigators found that the best dresses had been picked off the hangers in the beginning of what was evidently to be an extensive raid. Searching as they went, they climbed upward until they ascertained that the burglars had escaped by the skylight, and gave chase by that way, using flashlights to guide them. On the arrival of reinforcements, Constable Wheeler joined in the chase over the roofs.

"Curley" Noyes, who happened to be passing along Water Street, saw the two men running along the roof behind the Goodwill apartments, and rushed to inform Constable Thompson, who was on watch at the alley near H. J. McCannan's real estate office on Simcoe Street. There they saw a man drop from a roof and run across a patch of light, but on investigating closer the police could find no trace of the burglars in this alley or in the two alleys off Water Street.

Sleepers Alarmed

Inspector James Reid, who is in charge of the police department in the absence of Chief Constable Samuel Newhall, arrived with Detective Sergeant William Meagher and Detective William Carey, and took charge of the investigation. A close watch was kept at all exits, while the roofs and adjoining buildings were closely searched. Several residents in apartments in the George Street and Water Street blocks were awakened by the tramping of the constables on the roofs, and the trying of skylights as possible means of escape.

The silk dresses, which were not damaged by the drop to the ground, are valued at from $25 to $45 each, and there were twenty-two in the bundle which Constable Wheeler recovered. The total value would be about $700.

All automobiles were closely scrutinized as they passed, and a note was made of parked cars, but none was found that might have belonged to the burglars.

Constable Wheeler attributes his discovery of the burglary to the fact that the bundle of silks struck a garbage can as it was thrown from the window, and tossed out into the alley, where his foot struck it. Had it fallen straight down it would probably have lodged near the wall, where it might not have been found. The window by which the entry was gained is about ten feet high, and one of the burglars at least was a tall man, since he reached it from a box.

Pethick's Corners

PETHERICK'S CORNERS, July 17.— The regular meeting of the Zion People's League, held in the church on Thursday evening, was well attended as usual, nearly sixty being present. The programme was in charge of the citizenship department, the leader for the evening being Lorne Barnum. The Scripture reading, Psalm 19:1-6, was given by Mrs. Lorne Barnum.

Fred Barnum gave an interesting reading entitled, "The Citizens of Heaven." Roy Barnum outlined the Young People's excursion to Rochester on Wednesday, describing some of the interesting things to be seen on the trip. As this was to be an annual event, he hoped that more would take advantage of the opportunity next year. The topic, "Was Jesus an outdoor man," was taken by Lindsay Anderson.

During the business session, it was decided to hold the meetings on Monday nights until the middle of August, as there are a number of lawn socials in neighboring churches on the Thursday evenings. The next meeting on Monday, the 19th, is a social evening at the home of Miss Jennie Fry, leader of the social department. The first game of the softball playoff has been arranged for this meeting. The contesting teams will be the khaki and Reds, 2nd and 3rd place teams in the league standing. The winners will meet the whites for the league championship at a later date.

MUSINGS AT A MANSE WINDOW

JOHN TIMOTHY STONE is the minister of a great church in Chicago. He is one of the Princes among the preachers in the Presbyterian Church on this continent. I have never heard him preach yet, but, if we both live long enough on this earth, I shall certainly have that pleasure. However, I have frequently read what he has written, and always with profit as well as with pleasure. Sitting at the manse window the other day, my thoughts running off to great highways, to mountains, to rivers and to lakes, I began to feel that if I were to do my best work in the coming months it were time that treated my body, my mind and my frayed nerves, to a real vacation. As I sat and indulged in a short season of day-dreaming, my eyes chanced to fall upon some words which had fallen from the pen of this eminent preacher. They are so good—and I feel that it will be conferring a favor upon those of my readers who may never see his words otherwise—that I take pleasure in passing them on as part of my musings for this week.

RELIEVING THE TENSION.

The question of vacation is a very prominent one at this season of the year. It applies not only to those who can set aside a few weeks for a definite vacation, but also to those who take advantage of the daylight savings arrangement of time, and take added hours in the open from day to day during the summer months. If possible, however, one should do more than this latter, for every hardworking man and woman owes to himself, as well as to his family, a certain change and cessation from the regular duties of life.

Pastors have sometimes been heard to say: 'I have not taken a vacation for ten years,' but such men usually have an unwilling vacation forced upon them in the break-down of health, either physical or mental, and oftentimes spiritual as well.

A RECREATIVE TIME.

God set the law of a vacation when He put aside one day in seven for rest and worship. 'Man was not made for the Sabbath but the Sabbath was made for man.' It is the recreative time. The wise interpretation of the Lord's Day has in it the thought of recreation, not merely as amusement and idle play, but a recreation of the entire system—a rest which includes the spiritual. It should be the vacation period of the soul.

Many a pastor who never takes a vacation himself, and feels he does not need it, does not realize that probably his people do and that the church will be benefited if they hear another voice for a few weeks and come in touch with other personalities.

The locomotives in our transcontinental railroads do not run for thousands of miles in continuous action, but are changed at the great railroad centers and junctions every few hundred miles. Fresh engines and machinery as well as engineers are substituted. Nothing must be overstrained, and this is true as well of human life.

If men everywhere could be brought to feel the force of this, and would adjust the wheels of industry and their lives accordingly, they might not only live a great deal longer, but life itself would count for more than it often does. How slow we are to learn.

WE ALL NEED TIME TO EXPAND.

Man needs a time to pause, to expand, to see horizons, as he enriches his soul by some far-reaching view: to breathe more deeply of the ozone of mountain, plain and sea: to come in contact with nature in the deep woods: to gain the music and happy laughter of running streams: to appreciate the silences of the open and the distances of the great stars out in the night, where nature is unrestricted by artificial light with its black shadows. He needs to get away from the dazzle of white-lights and the city's confusion, and feel the presence of God, free from the accentuation of human voices. He needs to wake in the morning with the song of the birds: to look into the skies and see the clouds gather and fade as changing atmospheres meet: to walk and ride and climb and play that youth may be renewed, and that he may recover normal strength and vital energy. The question of the use of time and the expenditure of money is the stumbling-block with many I know. But it might be well if we would stop and think whether it is worth while and whether one can afford not to take a vacation. Any one can do better work forty-eight or fifty weeks out of fifty-two if he has four or two weeks rest and let-up, than he can do under fifty-two weeks of consecutive activity.

WHEN ROME BURNED.

I have heard it said more than once that while Rome burned, Nero fiddled! But I have never been sure whether the emphasis should be placed upon the burning of Rome, the fiddling of Nero, or the fact that he fiddled while Rome burned! And no one has yet told me whether Nero was a violinist or just an ordinary fiddler! I know that there are those who think that there is a difference, and perhaps there is: but the truth is that I am not much interested in the musical ability of the Emperor,—at least not so much as I am in the burning of the capital city. I am interested in that fire because of the wheels that it set in motion.

It was the night of July 18th, in the year 64 A.D., that fire broke out among the booths at the south-east end of the Circus Maximus. From the point at which it started it spread rapidly over the Palatine and Velia up to the low cliffs of the Esquiline. It laid waste the Aventine, the Forum Boarium and Velabrum till it reached the Tiber and the solid barrier of the Servian wall. When, at the end of several days, it was extinguished, the greater part of Rome was in ruins.

WHO WAS TO BLAME?

Some authorities have accused Nero of being the guilty party, but he managed to throw the blame, for setting fire to the city, on the Christians. The result was that many of them were put in prison, and finally paid the penalty with their lives. It was about this time that Paul was arrested and hurried to Rome as the leader of those who claimed to be the followers of the Man, Christ Jesus. Paul is now an old man. He is put in a mean prison and subjected to sufferings which his sensitive spirit must have felt keenly. The trial is progressing in a leisurely manner and the winter might have to be put in in this comfortless and lonely prison so he writes to Timothy asking him to bring some things which will minister to his comfort.

"The cloke that I left at Troas Carpus when thou comest bring with thee and the books but especially the parchments." In that request he gives us his estimate of life's true values.

WHAT COUNTS FOR MOST.

To an aged man, in a place that is cold and destitute of comfort, the cloke would be of great value. And to an intellectual man, such as Paul was, books would mean much for companionship and mental stimulus. But to one who was as intensely spiritual as the apostle to the Gentiles, the inspired parchments would be the most valuable so he says, 'but especially the parchments.' No wonder that he placed such value upon them. They had meant everything to him for many years. At one period in his life he had studied them without understanding their real spiritual meaning, just as a great many people are doing still. Then there came to him an experience which had revolutionized all his thinking and transformed all his living. In that flash of light which had come to him on the Damascus highway, his mental outlook was changed, and into his heart there came a great passion.

Now while he was human enough to appreciate the comforts of the cloke in the middle of winter; and loved books well enough to desire their company he seems to say — If some must be left behind don't let it be the parchments.

THE IRREDUCIBLE MINIMUM.

We are never likely to have a testing time such as Paul had. Yet, all along life's journey they come, and reveal what our thoughts are reegarding what constitutes life's chief values. We go off for a vacation. And, for various reasons, baggage must be at an irreducible minimum. However, there must be the cloke, for we must be well dressed, and it might be cold. Then there must also be the umbrella for it may rain. If we play golf, we must include our clubs. Or if it is tennis that we like we must have our rackets and balls with us,

Having taken care of these things let us include some of our favourite authors, for there will be times when we may want to read and it may be difficult to get any suitable books where we are going. Then, if there is room, and we can think of it, we may put in a copy of the Word of God.

If we really had a better estimate of what is valuable in life we should never think of going away on a vacation without a copy of the Scriptures which are able to make us wise unto salvation.

Vacation time should be a season of meditation and quiet thought and reading where one can infill the mind and soul and think less of the outflow of the world's need and sympathy. Even Jesus found it necessary to go apart into a desert place and rest awhile.

My best wishes for all who may read these lines are that this season of the year may have a place in it for all of us to enjoy a real vacation. And if we have to leave anything behind, don't let it be the Word ofGod.

"The holiest of all holidays are those
Kept by ourselves in silence and apart;
The secret anniversaries of the heart
When the full river of feeling overheart,
When the full river of feeling overflows;—
The happy days unclouded to their close;
The sudden joys that out of darkness start
As flame from ashes; swift desires that dart
Like swallows singing down each wind that blows."

ALLAN FAIRBAIRN.

A Glorious Hope

IF IN this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable; but because we have hope in Christ after this life, we may be of all men the most comfortable. Though we have desires in the world, yet we have no desires after the world. For in this we groan earnestly, desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven. A believer longs most for that place where he shall be best. He not only grows in grace, but groans for glory. Perfection is the boundary of the strongest expectation. As it is satisfied with nothing less, so it looks for nothing more. Everything in eternity is wound up to its highest capacity. It is in heaven that mercy will be received unmixed, and majesty viewed unveiled. Happy are we in the knowledge that our hope in Christ stretches beyond the present and the shadow of the tomb, through the light of the resurrection morning to the joys of reunion with those who have passed on ahead of us.

A DREAMER AND HIS DREAM

I SLEPT! And, as I slept, I dreamed: and in my dream I beheld the vision of a mighty angel. He was standing on what I could not see, and with outstretched hand beckoned me to rise and follow him, which I did. He laid firm hold upon me and together we swept onwards and downwards. Save the angel, nothing was visible to my sight, and an intense silence prevailed.

A STRANGE SIGHT.

Our flight and descent continued, for how long I am unable to say. I had just commenced to wonder where and how this would terminate, when, suddenly, glimmering through the darkness far beneath us, I beheld a small island surrounded by a vast and unbounded ocean. Our descent continued till we reached the island, when the angel, after placing me thereon, vanished out of my sight. I seated myself on the sand and began to consider my position. A desire to become familiar with the island now took possession of me, and with this object in view I arose and began the ascent of its highest point. I gained the summit and looked all round me. The island was small, which thought and sight of the vast ocean only served to accentuate.

A GREAT THIRST.

After I had had my fill of roaming about the island I returned to my former position on the sand. The silence was oppressive, and sight of the terrible expanse of waters made my eyes ache. I now became sensible of thirst, but though I made diligent search I found nothing whereof to drink. The pangs of thirst were already upon me: and the angel, of whom since leaving me on the island I had not once thought, I felt myself beginning to curse for having placed me in this painful position. To die and leave my bones to bleach on this desolate spot was to me an intolerable thought.

A DISAPPOINTING DRINK.

My head sank forward on my breast, and I groaned aloud in my anguish. When at length I raised my eyes my gaze alighted upon an object which lay at no great distance on the sand between me and the ocean. It sparkled as water in the sunlight. A more welcome sight I never witnessed. I staggered to my feet and made towards it: but as I approached where it lay it ceased to sparkle and assumed a most repulsive form. Water issued from it. I walked all round this strange object, inspecting it. I observed when I put myself between it and the ocean it lost its repulsive appearance, which was replaced by that worn on my first having observed it. So long as I kept my gaze directed away from the ocean this object attracted me. I stooped and drank, but its taste was unpleasant still, as I had nothing beside, I was obliged to partake thereof: moreover, it pacified my thirst.

A SENSE OF THE UGLY.

I had made daily use of this water, when one day, some considerable time subsequent to my arrival on the island, having gone down to the ocean to bathe, I made the horrible discovery that my physical appearance had assumed something of that repulsiveness I had detected as the property of the object which supplied me with water, when the glimmer of the ocean fell upon it. I thereupon concluded, foolishly, as I afterwards learned, that the ocean was accountable for this ugliness. I then failed to see that the ocean produced in me, not the ugliness itself, but merely the sense of it. Instead of blaming I ought to have praised the ocean, since to it I owed the knowledge of my alarming condition. Ignorant of this at the time, I began to shun the ocean. As time wore on I commenced to suppose my ugliness to have passed away, till at length I ceased altogether to think of it.

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

I again ventured into the ocean to bathe. The former painful result was reproduced, and I was in the act of rushing back to the sand when, my foot slipping beneath me, I was plunged headlong into the ocean. The water got into my mouth and down my throat and imagine my utter bewilderment and delight—the water was fresh! Till this moment I had believed the water of the ocean to be salt but soon as I found myself mistaken, I drank eagerly of it. My whole being was refreshed and enlivened, I seemed to have entered a new world and existence, which heretofore had become so painful and undesirable, was now delightful and natural. The old means of allying my thirst I now abandoned. Nor can I recollect ever again seeing the strange object sparkle but every day it became to my mind more repulsive. As I continued to drink of the ocean I perceived that the ugliness which had affixed itself to me diminished perceptibly. This rejoiced me greatly. I now spent much of my time bathing myself in the ocean, and the more I did so the more there siezed upon my mind the conviction that between myself and the ocean there was a growing affinity. One day, having swam a considerable distance from the shore, though unconscious of the sense of exhaustion, I was minded to return to the island, when, having set my face islandwards, I discovered after much looking about me that the island was nowhere visible. It had vanished.

ALONE IN THE OCEAN.

I was alone—alone in the ocean! Yet I had no fear. Presently I was aware that I was sinking, and the thought, instead of terrifying me, afforded my mind deep satisfaction. Down, down, far into the bosom of the ocean's depths I was drawn. Consciousness continued with me, and I was filled with an indescribable sweetness. I no longer deemed myself in possession of anything akin to the organism which I had inhabited during my sojourn on the island, nor had I the sense of the lapse of time: my mind travelled neither backwards nor forwards; I lived solely in the present. I was perfectly free in my motions, which were performed with astonishing rapidity. The spirit of the ocean entered into me. I was being absorbed by the ocean. It now struck me that I was part of this illimitable deep.

I AM MORE THAN MY SENSATIONS.

Yet, although I was continually absorbing the spirit of the ocean, I was conscious all the while that I was quite distinct from it. I continued to think of myself as myself, and of the ocean as the ocean. I was every moment being merged in the ocean; partaking of its nature, made strong with its strength, deep with its depth, calm with its calmness. But I was conscious, too, that though I was strong I was not strength, and though deep and calm I was neither depth nor calmness. I was filled with rest, but I was not rest itself. I was filled with the spirit of the ocean, but I, myself, I was not the spirit of the ocean.

THE MEANING OF MY DREAM.

When I awoke the light was streaming into my room. But this waking was unlike any I had ever had. Since that morning I have seemed to meet every duty, every emergency, every disappointment and trial with a new force behind me. The memory of that dream never forsakes my mind. The key to that dream I am not quite sure that I possess but after prolonged meditation, I somehow have come to think of it on this wise.

The experiences which were mine on the island I in some manner must expect in this present life. I forgot and then cursed the power which placed me in this world and that because of the pressure of my physical wants. I have slaked my thirst at streams which when glinted upon by the light of the infinite, are seen to be repulsive. I see also that I was fashioned by whatever I partook of. And I am in no doubt that by drinking of the infinite I assimilate the very nature of it. The vanishing of the island marks it would seem the close of my earthly life, when I shall begin to be absorbed by while remaining distinct from the eternal nature of God. Meanwhile in holy anticipation of such a wonderful hereafter, I act in the strength of the thought that the deeper I drink into the nature of God, the better able will I be to face all that may fail to me during my life on earth. I act out of the bosom of the infinite.

Churches and Churchmen

A Welshman Speaks.

SECRETARY of Labor Davis, in the U.S.A., was born in Wales, and does not seem to have been born in vain so far as his religious leanings are concerned. He told a radio Bible class over station WJJD that he wants his religion in the old fashioned way. "Religion, " he said, "is the most powerful force for the advancement of civilization that has been developed in the history of mankind." He urged a great revival of religious faith, adding that true science and religion could march forward hand in hand. "We who believe in the teachings of the Bible, no matter what our creed, should join hands to uphold its truths against those who scoff and sneer. We need not apologize or explain, we should drive on, like crusaders of old, holding fast to our faith in the Scriptures."

A Strong Protest.

A RESOLUTION to boycott the Sesquicentennial Exposition in Philadelphia if not immediately closed on Sundays was adopted unanimously by the Camp Meeting Association at Ocean Grove, N.J. About 5,000 persons were present.

Previous to this, the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., has also spoken out and severed all connection with the Exposition because of its being opened on the Lord's Day.

An Irish Preacher Warns America.

THE minister of the Railway Street Presbyterian Church, Lisburn, Ireland, Rev. Dr. Robert Wilson Hamilton, in the course of a sermon preached in New York warned America that great national prosperity too often results in great national folly, and this country must be on its guard against the dangers of enormous wealth. Days of prosperity and achievement must be treated just as days of adversity. We must not let our pride overcome our good judgment or take away our humility. We must have patience and faith, and then the conditions of our daily life, whatever they may be, will be immaterial, for we shall have our trust in God. Consider how really trivial are our lives as compared with the seeking after God. Men waste their strength and energy striving for transient success or wealth and they ignore the spiritual things, the things that are of eternal value.

A man may get to his journey's end by the light of a lantern, but he is less secure than the man who travels by daylight, and he loses the landscape.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

The Call of Moses; Facing a Great Opportunity

Text: Exod. 3:10-15; 4:10-12.

Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt.

And Moses said unto God, Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt?

And he said, Certainly I will be with thee; and this shall be a token unto thee, that I have sent thee. When thou hast brought forth the people out of Egypt, ye shall serve God upon this mountain.

And Moses said unto God, Behold, when I come unto the children of Israel, and shall say unto them, The God of your fathers hath sent me unto you; and they shall say to me, What is his name? what shall I say unto them?

And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM: and he said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you.

And God said moreover unto Moses, Thou shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, The Lord God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath sent me unto you: this is my name for ever, and this is my memorial unto all generations.

And Moses said unto the Lord, O my Lord, I am not eloquent, neither heretofore nor since thou hast spoken unto thy servant; but I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue.

And the Lord said unto him, Who hath made man's mouth? or who maketh the dumb, or deaf, or the seeing, or the blind? have not I the Lord?

Now, therefore, go, and I will be with they mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say.

The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for July 18. The Call of Moses: Facing a Great Opportunity. Exod. 3:10-15; 4:10-12.

BY WM. E. GILROY, D.D.
Editor of The Congregationalist.

From a position of privelege in which there might have been before him worldly greatness for himself, Moses is called to an even greater place of privilege and power in the championship of the rights of his people and in the task of leading them from bondage to liberty.

Every great task involves equal dangers and responsibilities. It is a mistake to think of great men as being merely the inheritors of good fortune. Their greatness is that of facing dangers and bearing heavy burdens. Moses did not shrink from the dangers and responsibilities.

He seems to have been a man whose fearlessness and power of decision were as remarkable as his unselfishness in his devotion to a great cause: Like most truly great men, however, he did feel a sense of his own unfitness for the great work to which he was called.

Not an Orator.

Like many men of action, Moses apparently lacked the power of fluent speech. He was not an orator. Oratory is not to be despised. A very keen critic has remarked that Gettysburg may yet be remembered not for the battle that was fought there, but for Lincoln's immortal address.

But oratory would not take the world far were men of action lacking. Moses was a man of deeds rather than of words, but he felt the lack of this fluent persuasiveness associated with ease of speech, and so he shrank from the call todeadership.

Was not this the great strength of Moses just as at a later time Paul found his great strength in that intense consciousness of his weakness which made him seek divine aid and whidh led him to exclaim, "When I am weak then am I strong?"

One thinks again of Lincoln, during the darkest days of the Civil War, driven to his knees in prayer because, as he said, he had nowhere else to go. It is this consciousness of God's power working in and through them that make men strong, and God never calls a man to a task, no matter how great, without upholding him if he seeks faithfully to fulfill it.

It is when we trust in our own strength that our lives prove ineffectual.

His Sense of God.

Moses had a deep sense of God's presence. The characterization of God as a present spiritual reality is one of the strongest and most beautiful things of this whole narrative. God is, I am that I am. That is, He is a living God present in the affairs of men, judging their motives and deeds, a power for righteousness and truth, an overwhelming foe of evil and wickedness.

Is not this the great task that every good man should find above all other privileges and responsibilities—the need of declaring that God is in his world, that tyrannies and meannesses are judged by his love and righteousnss, and that his judgments are sure and un failing?

The lesson of the life of Moses is not merely for men who are called to great tasks. It is that every man has a task, a call, and an opportunity, and that the man who feels most deeply his weakness and his unfitness for the work to which God calls him may prove the most effective instrument for the performance of that very work if he will go forth to do his duty in the sure conviction that God will give him what he must speak and teach him what he must do.

To fulfill these conditions, however, means that man must attain a completeness of consecration and self-surrender to the purposes and leading of God. Can one face any great opportunity with the certainty of doing his best upon any basis that is less than that?

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER

THERE is a very beautiful picture called "The Guardian Angel," photographs of which are often seen. It represents two little children, a brother and sister, who have strayed from home and wandered far into a forest. Bright, and happy, and innocent as the summer day, they run about hand in hand, looking at all the pretty things in the wood. The little girl, with her left hand, is, at the moment, pulling a flower growing at her feet; and she does not see that it grows just upon the edge of a deep pecipice. Her right hand holds her brother's, and he, with his disengaged hand is reaching out after a butterfly, which is hovering in the air about a foot beyond the brink of the precipice. Next moment, one thinks, they will fall and be dashed to pieces. But in the air above them are seen the outstretched arms and wings of an angel, who looks down upon them with a face of unutterable love. And one feels that all is well. We, too, have wandered into the far country. Is the angel a mere fancy to us? We, too, have felt the touch of these invisible arms and the overshadowing of Divine wings; and our only safety lies in placing our hand in that which stretches down to us through the darkness—the hand of Christ.

Christianity wants nothing so much in the world as sunny people, and the old are hungrier for love than for bread. The Oil of Joy is very cheap, and if you can help the poor with a Garment of Praise, it will be better for them than blankets.

FLIES CARRY DISEASE.

Now is the appointed time to start an active warfare against the fly. For every fly killed we will save ourselves the trouble of battling with its progeny later on.

Let us make this a flyless community. There is no excuse for carelessness or laziness on our part.

We know that the fly is a breeder and carrier of disease that should be eradicated, just as surely and certain as the mosquito has been eliminated as a national pest.

Breeding places for flies should be wiped out premises should be kept clean and an active warfare maintained from now until cold weather returns in the fall.

It is a good citizen who encourages and helps in this battle against a deadly enemy of health.

SERVING HUMANITY.

The Examiner recently referred to the activities of the Red Cross Society in Ontario and particularly to the work being done at outposts in the sparsely settled portions of the hinterland.

The latest enterprise undertaken by the Society is the estabuishment of an Outpost Hospital at Red Lake.

Here are two nurses who are the first white women to enter the Red Lake district and the first Red Cross nurses to take up work among mines not yet developed.

Of the heroic women who unselfishly go into the wilderness to assist the sick and injured, it is impossible to speak too highly.

They sacrfice much to help humanity, and their anxiety to serve and their courage, desire general admiration.

SAFETY FIRST.

The desirability of children bathing at protected beaches, something that The Examiner has been endeavouring to impress upon parents was illustrated at Inverlea Park this week when a youngster, unable to swim very well, got into the current and would have drowned had not Caretaker Ward MacDonald gone to the rescue and saved the lad just in time.

Had the young bather got into a similar predicament while bathing at some unsupervised point, the Otonabee would undoubtedly have claimed another victim.

The city authorities have provided two bathing beaches, and caretakers are on duty for the protection of the public; parents should see to it that their children bathe at one or other of these points.

At the same time they should impress upon the little folks the necessity of their obeying the instructions of those in charge of the beaches.

The little fellow who came so close to losing his life at Inverlea Park this week had been warned to keep inside the rope but had disobeyed the order and a near-fatality resulted.

It is no light task to keep several hundred children from getting into a position of danger and parents should co-operate with the authorities by warning them of the danger, and insisting upon obedience to the orders of the caretakers.

THE CHEMONG PARK ROAD.

The Examiner has been flooded with complaints from Chemong Park cottagers and Peterborough motorists generally, over the condition of the Chemong Road, and it must be said that these complaints are entirely justified.

From one end to the other the road is intolerably rough and although The Examiner is informed that crushed gravel is to be put on next week and the surface is to be repaired, it will be at least three weeks before the improvement can be finished, which means that the summer season will be drawing to a close before the road is fit to drive upon.

It is recognized that the Suburban Road Commission has a difficult task.

It has many miles of roadway under its jurisdiction, requiring so much attention that it is a ticklish matter spreading the appropriation over the work that must be done.

This year has been particularly troublesome, inasmuch as the late spring delayed operations, and there was more than the usual damage done to the roads under the Commission's control.

These conditions supply an explanation for the neglect of the Chemong Road but there is a feature about the situation that apparently has not received sufficient consideration from the Commission.

The Chemong Road is the connecting link between a popular summer resort and the city and is also an artery carrying a heavy stream of tourist traffic.

That means an enormous traffic during the summer months and the roadway should early in the year be put in shape for that traffic, not left as has been the case this summer until the season is at its height before repairs are undertaken.

For weeks the road has been pounded to pieces and just at the time when it should be at its best and when it is most used, repairs are being undertaken.

CELEBRATING CONFEDERATION.

C. H. Hall, Editor of the Orillia Packet, in a recent address to the Orillia Kiwanis Club, suggested a great national three-day demonstration to mark the 60th anniversary of Confederation next year.

The proposal to fittingly commemorate the anniversary will find plenty of support.

The war prevented any such celebration of the 50th anniversary, but there is no reason why the demonstration proposed by Mr. Hill for next year should not be arranged on a scale worthy of the occasion.

The Orillia Editor suggests a uniform programme for the whole of Canada, extending over Friday, Saturday and Sunday, July 1, 2 and 3, culminating with a great national religious service on the last day.

Among the features mentioned by Mr. Hall is the simultaneous lighting of 10,000 beacon fires, stretching across Canada.

If the celebration is to be carried out on an adequate scale, and is to be conducted in every part of the Dominion, it is evident that no time is to be lost in the preparation of plans so that a national programme, identical in every section of Canada can be aranged.

Local committees would have to be formed as soon as possible in all Canadian centres, and a national committee placed in charge of the general details of the celebration.

Perhaps such organizations as the Rotary and Kiwanis clubs might furnish the necessary leadership in this respect and The Examiner takes this means of bringing the matter to their attention.

AN EVIL INFLUENCE.

It is probable that a very great majority of the people of Canada are convinced by this time that the presence of a political party like the Progressives in Parliament is an unmitigated evil.

The condtion under which repesentative government has been carried on in English-speaking countries has been practically always until a recent date the condition of two important parties, only, offering programmes for public approval. A permanent and a sensible basis for this principle exists. These two parties, no matter under what names they may have gone, Whig or Tory, Democrat or Republican, Liberal or Conservative, have had a main line of cleavage. One party has held to the idea that the best plan of political progress is safety first. The plan of the other party is to talke chances in hope of more rapid progress. The idea of the more conservative side is to hold cautiously but resolutely to what it believes to be good from the past, and to make haste slowly. The idea of the other side, the more radical side, is not to disregard what is good, but not to be afraid to try experiments in the hope of making quicker gain.

These are the two views that are and always have been behind the conservative and radical parties respectively in all English-speaking nations. It is the fashion of cheap political writers to tell people every now and then that there is no radical difference between such parties. Such a view is based merely upon deficiency of intelligence and lack of historical perspetive. The difference is there; and while it may not be perceptible to any great extent at some temporary eras, or may be obstructed at some particular time or other by special planks which one or the other party may put in its platform, the difference in principle exists always.

This it is which makes the two-party idea the sane and necessary thing it is. The nation can always divide intelligently between these two paties. Those of us who have conservative temperaments can adhere to "safety first'.' Those of us who are more venturesome in our ideas can take the venturesome side; and the presence of merely two parties removes confusion from the public mind, and enables the party discipline that alone can make politics consistent, and government straightforward and efficient.

When you inject into a political system of this kind a third party, such as the Progressives in this country, and worst of all a third party based on class selfishness, nothing but an evil result is possible. The only possible result is bedevilment. No party based merely on class selfishness can possibly gain a majority in the country. All that such a party can accomplish therefore is to exert influence on one or other of the two regular parties; and inasmuch as such a party as the Progressibes, alias a farmer party, represent only a class interest, they are certain to sell themselves to or try to buy whichever party is most likely or most willing to give them waht they want of their class demands. This involves the double evil of subjecting the general national good to selfish class interest and of introducing a corrupt and degrading factor into the operation of the regular political parties. Such is precisely what has occurred in Canada in recent years and it is hoped that the coming general election will see the disappearance of the so-called Progressive party in this country, or at worst its reduction to comparative harmlessness.

The Journal hopes to see the success of the Conservative party in the coming elections, but is frank to say that if the Conservatives cannot get a majority over all, the interests of this country would be better served by the Liberals getting a majority over all than that the recent disgrace should continue. Our politics should not be further subjected to the danger of a continuance of immoral subservience by either of the historic old parties to a selfish class minority in politics.—Ottawa Journal.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Doubtless there are many Conservative politicians who feel that the cabinet could have been strengthened in at least one position.

Whatever kind of a summer it may be the politicians can be depended upon to see that it is a noisy one.

It is difficult to get Canadians excited over the question of the country's status in the Empire with the strawberry shortcake season at its peak.

F. G. Sandy has been nominated as Progressive candidate for Victoria South in the Legislature. Evidently the people of that riding believe there will be a provincial election some time or other.

One point in favour of political picnics is that you may like the sandwiches even if the speeches don't agree with you.

Some of the newspapers are busy picking out a soft berth for Sir Henry Drayton. Surely he can be trusted to do that for himself.

TORONTO LIVESTOCK

TORONTO, July 17. — Summer prices now prevail in the cattle market. This means that trade is comparatively dull, cattle are of poorer average quality, and prices are from 50c to 75c lower than a couple of weeks ago. Export trade continues moderately active at the lower prices. Export buyers this week shipped about 900 cattle, and have orders for the same number next week. MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, July 17 (Canadian Press).—Trading in cash grain in the local produce market yesterday was slow with little demand from any source. The undertone for car lots of Canadian Western oats was slow with little demand from any source. The undetone for car lots lots of Canadian western oats was strong and prices were advanced 1-2 cent a bushel.

The market for spring wheatf lour was unchanged but was strong in sympathy with the cash wheat situation at Winnipeg. An improved demand was reported.

Winter wheat flour responded to a strng demand, but no actual changes in quotations were noted.

Millfeed was moderately active and rolled oats slow.

The market for spring wheat flour tinues steady. The carry-over of the old crop is expected to be small and this will have a tendency to stiffen prices.

Trading in eggs was quiet due to a slackening of demand. Receipts yesterday totalled 2,853 cases, compared with 1,698 for the same day last week.

Old crop Canadian potatoes are now almost exhausted and the new crop is making its appearance in greater volume in the market. The new crop American tubers sold at $6 a barrel No. 1 grade; No. 2 grade at $3.75, and No. 3 at $2.75.

Butter receipts yesterday were 7,148 packages, compared with 4,339 last Friday. There was no change of note and business was quiet.

Receipts of cheese were 22,609 boxes, an increase of 10,000 over those of last Friday. Trading on spot slow.

Beans ruled at $2.25 hand-picked white, with smaller quantities from $2.35 to $2.45 a bushel.

Sugar unchanged.

CHICAGO GRAINS

CHICAGO, July 18 (Canadian Press).—Sharp new upturns in wheat values yesterday carried the market above any previous level which the December delivery has reached this season. Reports of enlarging damage to the domestic spring wheat crop were at hand, especially advices telling of deterioration in North Dakota. Closing prices for wheat were unsettled, 1 1-4 to 2 7-8 net higher; with corn unchanged to 1-2 off, and oats 3,8 to 1-2 up.

Active buying which set in as soon as wheat trade began swept quotations upward 3 cents a bushel on the first rush and later hoisted the day's top to 4 3-8 higher than Thursday's finish for the September delivery. The extremely pessimistic character of field reports from crop observers in the Northwest States brought about a notable broadening of general commission house demand that received further impetus on account of high temperatures, prevailing and lack of adequate rains this side of the Canadian boundary.

On the other hand selling to realize profits widened out toward the last owing more or less to word of some good downpours in Canada, particularly around Saskatoon, Sask. In various quarters, too, experts contended that the outlook is still for a bumper crop in Canada. Meanwhile, export buying of North American wheat yesterday was estimated at 500,000 bushels and unlike Thursday nothing was heard of any European offers to resell. Furthermore, country offerings of wheat to arrive were surprisingly scant in view of the big upturns in price.

Corn was under pressure from profit taking sales on the part of Thursday's buyers. Indications of warmer weather than of late tended also to ease the corn market. Oats followed wheat.

Announcement of a liberal increase of the stock of lard here gave a downward slant to provisions.

DR. FRANK CRANE'S DAILY EDITORIAL.

LIVING TO BE A HUNDRED.

By Dr. Frank Crane.

Captain Robert Dollar, head of the Dollar Steamship Company, celebrating his eighty-second birthday, says:

"I may live to be a hundred years of age if I keep on working and don't permit the rust of retirement to kill me off."

A very true sentence, the truest word in it being the little three-letter word "may."

For on the same day there appeared two other items on the same subject.

An active bank president who had not let the rest of retirement kill him off, died anyway at the early age of sixty-one, and a woman celebrating her one hundred and second birthday attributed her long life to always "playing enough."

The moral is It all depends.

In Los Angeles a man was carrying in an armload of wood. One stick droppe,d he stumbled over it, fracturing his skull, and died in the hospital.

In New York an ironworker fell through an airshaft seven stories, landed squarely on a brick-layer's scaffolding from which he bounded, and fell five more stories into the basement. He escaped with a broken leg and an injured wrist.

In this world life and death are largely a gamble.

Good health is not. It is governed to a great extent by the individual. But living to a great old age is too largely dependent upon chance.

Everyone has a better chance to live to a ripe old age now than formerly.

The average lifetime is estimated to be fifty-eight years at the present time. Seventy-five years ago it was forty years. In the eighteenth century it was estimated at twenty-six years and in the Middle Ages at twenty-one years.

Recent statistics show that in the United States of one hundred thousand Americans born at a given time, only one hundred and eighty-three are left at the ninety-fifth birthday, and all but four have died by the one hundred year mark, and only one is left at one hundred and two years.

In the matter of long life we can count on the average but not on the individual.

A healthy old age should be within the grasp of everyone, but extreme longviety requires also the favor of chance.

Those who prophesy attaining a hundred do well to include the word "may."

GOVERNMENT CONTROL.

Peterboro, July 16.

Editor, The Examiner,—Advocates of the Government control of the liquor traffic state that prohibition in Ontario is not properly enforced and that if we had Government control it would do away with practically all bootlegging, sale of liquor to minors, and general breaking of the law. It was the writer's privilege some time ago to visit three of the Western provinces where Government control is in effect. It was somewhat interesting during the trip to notice that the papers were full of reports of violations, many of them very serious, of the Government liquor laws. It was evident that there were more violations by far under the Government control of liquor in these provinces than there are in Ontario under prohibition.

In one day in the morning and evening issues of the Regina daily paper appeared so many articles showing how widely the law was being broken. I ventured to cut them out. The following are some of the headings on these articles, which are still in my possession:

"Keeps liquor for sale; fined $300.00 and costs."

"Is fined for having liquor on own farm."

"Liquid fire is found when six arms reach out in darkness and find four men drinking in Estevan Park."

"Found cases of beer during sports' day."

"Regina magistrate has busy morning."

One of the foregoing articles shows that school boys had taken home brew liquor to school where trouble had been caused, and a boy who was questioned about it took strychnine. The last item stated that in one day 30 people had appeared before the Regina magistrade, including six women, the majority of these cases being drunks and vagrants, all of whom pleaded guilty and eleven of whom went to jail without the option of a fine. People who expect to reduce the evils of the liquor traffic by voting for Government control are pretty sure to find themselves badly deceived.

HOW DO YOU SAY IT?

(By C. N. Lurie.)

Common Errors in English and How To Avoid Them.

"THE CLOCK IT WENT TOO FAST."

(The McClure Syndicate, Inc.)

Quite often we hear, among persons who are not careful in their manner of speech, sentences such as the following:

"The clock it went too fast."

"John and his father they went fishing this morning."

"My mother she took me to school today."

"The kite it got away from me."

"The boy and the girl they tried hard to beat each other in their studies."

In each of these sentences, the pronoun, "it," "they," "she," is not needed. The sentence is improved when it is omitted. This error does not occur in writing, of course, save perhaps in letters written by persons who are very careless in their use of the English language.

LARGE PICNIC HELD.

Five Churches Unite in Holding Picnic to Birdsall's Beach.

HASTINGS, July 17.—On Wednesday afternoon one of the largest known crowds of picnicers gathered together at Birsdall's Beach to have a social time.

Three churches from Norwood, the United, Baptist and Presbyterian were represented and from Westwood and Keene. Races were a part of the programme and several softball games, one in particular being the married men of Norwood against the single men, the former being the victors when the final score tallied 21-20.

From start to finish the game was fast, good plays being exhibited on both sides. Booths for refreshments were on the grounds and lunches and dinners were displayed in groups all over the grounds.

LOGGERS RETREAT.

CALGARY, Alta., July 17. Canadian Press. — The Calgary Herald's staff reporter at the scene of the Kootenay fire, wiring from Vermillion crossing yesterday afternoon says:

"The forces fighting the north fire awaited its assault on the big slide that runs from the timberline to the Vermillion river about four miles south of this camp. If the fire jumps this guard, as it has others, the fighters will fall back on a slide about two miles from here.

"On Friday morning the highway was clear and tourists were going through, the mounted police patrols keeping a general supervision of teh traffic.

"The heart of the fire lay shrouded in impenetrable smoke high up on the mountain side. It is believed that stop fires have worked north of Wardle, or Eight Mile Creek and are making their way toward the new fire guard."

PEACE PROPOSALS.

LONDON, July 17. Canadian Press. — No further progress was made to-day toward a settlement of the mining dispute. Although efforts are being made by religious bodies to compose the differences between the miners, who have been on strike for more than two months, and the mine owners, they are looked upon as hardly practicable, inasmuch as the plan suggested depends upon a renewal of the subsidy to the mining industry, which the government has announced it would not do.

The peace proposals suggested by a group of Anglican bishops, reported to have been accepted by the executive committee of the Miners Federation, are understood to provide for a return to work for four months under the present conditions.

The chief significance of the religious efforts lies in the influence they might have upon public opinion, and thus upon the mine owners and the government in the direction of conciliation.

That the miners as a body still repose confidence in their leaders was shown yesterday when the result of the election for the miners' executive was announced. Herbert Smith and A. J. Cook were re-elected as President and Secretary, respectively of the Miner' Federation, and all the other officers likewise were re-elected.

INTERMENT OF FOGARTY FAMILY

Burial of the six victims of a father's crazed act. Photo shows the interment of the Fogarty family in Toronto who were shot in their sleep by Patrick Fogarty, well-to-do florist, who in turn shot himself. Motive for the act, which is said to be unparalleled in the annals of crime on the continent, has not yet been definitely set. Fogarty left a note in which he said he feared for his family since he was going insane. A neighbor's statement credits the seeing of a man lurking about the house at midnight. Psychiatrists declared the father might have been affected by the heat. The victims were the wife and the four little children. Thousands attended the funeral.

PERLEY TO RETIRE?

Belief That Former Minister May Be Secretary of State.

OTTAWA, Ont., July 17.—It is anticipated that the three portfolios left open for Quebec will be filled at an early date. The three names mentioned for the still vacant posts are those of J .L. St. Jacques, Montreal lawyer, who is also M.L.A. for Argenteuil, who will probably be Minister of Soldiers Civil Re-establishment and Health, a portfolio formerly held by Hon. Dr. Beland, Pierre Audette, lawyer of Quebec, who ran on the Patenaude ticket at last election for Levis, and Romeo Langlais, also a Quebec lawyer, who ran and was defeated in Matane by J. A. Dionne, Liberal.

Should Mr. St. Jacques come in it is anticipated that Sir George Perley, Secretary of State, will retire in order to permit Mr. St. Jacques to run in Argenteuil. This would leave three portfolios still unfilled, namely, Immigration, Secretary of State, and Interior. The latter is to go to Saskatchewan.

It has been stated that strong representations have been made by the Orange Order by reason of the fact that Hon. Dr. Edwards, former Minister, was left out and that no Orangeman has been appointed. It is regarded as probable that Dr. Edwards may be appointed to the second named vacancy.

There are four Roman Catholics in the Cabinet at present, namely, Hon. Messrs. Manion, Patenaude, Morand and MacDonald. The inclusion of Messrs. St. Jacques, Langlais and Audette would bring the number up to seven.

THE WEATHER.

Pressure is highest on the South Atlantic and Pacific Coasts, and relatively low near Lake Superior. Scattered showers have occurred in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Northern Ontario, while in other parts of the Dominion the weather has been fair.

Minimum and maximum temperatures:—Prince Rupert, 42-68; Victoria, 52-66; Vancouver, 50-78; Kamloops, 50—; Calgary, 38-78; Edmonton, 48-74; Swift Current, —76; Battleford, —78; Prince Albert, —72; Medicine Hat, 50-90; Moose Jaw, 55-75; Regina, 55-73; Winnipeg, 60-80; Port Arthur, 54-64; Cochrane, 54-74; Parry Sound, 50-80; London, 50-80; Toronto, 50-80; Kingston, 56-72; Ottawa, 52-80; Montreal, 58-82; Quebec, 54-78; St. John, 58-70; Halifax, 58-64; Charlottetown, 60-74; Saskatoon, 56-73.

In 1911, Firestone won with fabric tires at 74.59 miles per hour. In 1920, Firestone won with cord tires at 88.55 miles per hour. In 1925, Firestone won with full-Size Gum-Dipped Balloons at the record breaking average speed of 101.13 miles per hour.

In 1926, Firestone again won this great Speed Classic with Full-Size Gum-Dipped Balloons. The ten cars to finish "in the money" were all Firestone-equipped. These ten cars went the distance without a single blowout and with but two tire failures—one due to a puncture and the other to a leaky valve

This performance is even more remarkable when you consider the terrific speeds at which the cars traveled over this fifteen-year-old, rough brick track.

Experienced race drivers will not trust their lives or risk their chances of victory on any other tires. And in the commercial field, large truck, motorbus and taxicab fleet operators who keep careful cost records on their tire mileage are among the big users of Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires.

From hundreds of enthusiastic letters from satisfied Firestone Tire users we take the following typical examples; R. M. Grant, Toronto, 19,000 miles. Yellow Cab, Hamilton, 25,946 miles. J. Britton, Kitchener, 26,500 miles. W. J. Ferguson, Galt, 27,000. miles. Wm. Mador, Mahone, N. S. 35,000 miles. The Lounsbury Co. Ltd., Moncton, N. B. 48,000 miles. Gum-Dipping made this possible

These records of endurance, speed, safety and mileage could only have been made because of Firestone development of the Gum-Dipping process which insulates and impregnates every fiber of every cord with rubber, reducing friction and heat and building greater strength and endurance in the cords—assuring you at all times of—Most Miles per Dollar.

The MOST Powerful 1-Ton TRUCK CHASSIS Available at its Price

INSPECT this truck. You will see a rugged, six-inch channel steel frame swung low to insure a height level with milk platforms and loading docks. You will see heavy-leaved, semi-elliptic springs. You will see the powerful Chevrolet truck axle, a husky, over-size unit with spiral bevel driving gears encased in a one-piece, pressed steel housing—and scores of structural details typical of the finest truck construction in Canada.

Note the big motor. Neither hills, sand, mud, nor sustained second gear work will tax its capacity—for it offers the super-power of valve-in-head design and the stamina that has made Chevrolet famous the world over.

Chevrolet has become the world's third largest truck builder because Chevrolet trucks are proving their economy on the sound basis of low first cost, low maintenance cost, and low depreciation. Decide on that basis—and you, too, will buy a Chevrolet.

For the lighter loads the Chevrolet Commercial Chassis offers a 1,000-lb. capacity and typical Chevrolet quality with a shorter wheel base.

ENGLISH SOCCER CAPTAIN SEES BRIGHT FUTURE FOR GAME HERE

Joe Smith Declares Canadian Teams Will Equal Britain's Best.

TRAINING NEEDED.

Big Public For Association Football in Canada.

MONTREAL, July 17 (Canadian Press).—"Association football in the Dominion of Canada within the next few years bids fair to become a rival to the brand of football played by the major leagues in Great Britain," was the comment of Joe Smith, captain of the English Association football team which has just completed its seven-weeks' tour of Canada, interviewed here yesterday just prior to the departure of his team to board the Canadian Pacific liner, Montroyal at Quebec, whence they sailed for England. Asked to explain, how, if that were the case, his team had scored 105 goals with only 18 registered against them in the twenty games of the tour, Mr. Smith stated that this was largely due to the fact that his team was always playing as a unit against aggregations which had not their training and practice. There had, however, come under his notice a number of individual players of outstanding merit, while in his opinion the game played in Toronto last Saturday against the pick of Ontario, was the best played on the tour.

Final Game

As to the final game against the pick of Eastern Canada played here Thursday, Mr. Smith could not agree with the comments of some of the Montreal papers. "We were extended at no time during that game," he said, "and our only fear was of the referee's decisions with a number of which we could not agree."

The object of the tour, he thought, had been fully accomplished. It had been proved that there was a big public for soccer in Canada, and a fine career was ahead of the game in this country. He also dwelt upon international aspects of soccer. The Unitel States was anxious to get into the game, as was evidenced by the frequent attempts by managers of U.S. teams to induce players on the All-England team to sign up with them.

The seven Canadians in the final were Major R. M. Blair of Vancouver, Capt. Alex Martin of Calgary, Pte. J. Holden of Hamilton, Sg. G. E. Emslie and Sgt. J. Borland of Toronto, Sgt. K. McGregor of Ottawa and Q.M.S. Parnell, of Verdun, Que. The competitors in the finals fired fifteen shots each at 900 and 1,000 yards. THEATRE

BESSIE LOVE HAS AN UNUSAL ROLE IN "LOVEY MARY"

The Celluloid Medal or some equally appropriate symbol should go to Bessie Love. This for her courage in playing the title role in "Lovey Mary," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture directed by King Baggot, which comes to the Regent Theatre on Monday.

For Bessie does an ugly duckling part, pigtails, freckles and all, without the customary transition to beauty.

The latter angle is the unusual feature. Lots of other beautiful actresses in the movies have done the ugly duckling stuff before. Look at Norma Shearer in "His Secretary," or Carmel Myers in "The Devil's Circus," Gertrude Olmsted in "Monte Carlo," Marion Davies in "Beverly of Graustark" or Gloria Swanson in "Stake Struck."

Bessie remains the ugly duckling down to the last fadeout, which is something else again because all the other beauties mentioned had plenty of footage showing them as their exquisite selves. The contrast only served to make them appear more beautiful.

In "Monte Carlo" Gertrude Olmsted was shown as a prim and severe school teacher, wearing ill-fitting glasses with steel rims. Norma Shearer in "His Secretary" was the last word in dowds, with ill-fitting clothes, an impossible hair dress and cotton stockings, and "sensible" shoes.

RETIRES.

Hon. Edmund Bristol, K.C., Conservative member for Toronto East Centre in the federal house, who has announced his retirement from political life. Since 1896 he has actively participated in every election held. He was first elected to the House of Commons by acclamation in April, 1905, to succeed the late E. F. Clarke. Recently he created a stir by applying for a blanket lease of power rights in Ontario.

FIRE FIGHTER KILLED.

Thousand Pots of Flame in Kootenay District Spread Fast.

WINNIPEG, July 17 (Canadian Press).—Forest fires which have been raging in Alberta and British Columbia during the past nine or ten days were still burning yesterday, with conditions reported improved only on Vancouver Island, Northern British Columbia, and Northern Alberta, where rains have come to the aid of the fire-fighters.

Only Rain Can Check Fires.

In the district between Banff, Alta., and Kootenay Crossing, B.C., where the largest fire is burning, only rain can check the flames. Near Kootenay Crossing high winds have added to the spread of the fire, causing it to jump huge gaps.

Spectators watching the "Crown" fires realized how powerless even the finest fighting apparatus is against such a conflagration. On the high ground just north of the Crossing, one looked down into a valley of a thousand fires. Here and there pot holes filled with timber blazed with the fury of a blast-furnace. Mingled with the crackle of burning bushes was the ever-recurring crash of the big trees brought down by the flames.

Blacksmith Is Killed.

NELSON, B.C., July 17 (Canadian Press).—The first fire-fighting fatality of the season in this district occurred when Sevirino Dalpra, of Nelson, a blacksmith at the Golden Age mine at Hall, near Nelson, was killed about noon by a falling tree when working with others cutting a fire guard at Wiley's Spur against a great fire now raging near Hall. The tree that fell was burning at the base. Dalpra, who was 35 years old, was married only six months ago.

MOUNT FRYATT PEAKS SCALED

Presidents of Canadian and U.S. Sections of Alpine Club.

BIG TRIUMPH.

JASPER, Alta., July 17.—Mount Fryatt, one of the highest and most formidable peaks in the Athabasca River section of the Canadian Rockies, has been scaled by Howard Palmer, of New London, Conn., and Dr. J. W. Hickson of Montreal, according to word received in Jasper. This mountain, with precipitous shale slopes on one side and great glacier fields on the other, had hitherto resisted all attempts to conquer it, and in recent years it had been placed in the category of those peaks which, it was thought, would never be climbed.

In several ways the climbing of Fryatt is unique. It was accomplished under severe handicaps, the hardest of which was caused by the pall of smoke from forest fires to the south. This smoke practically blanketed the valley and slopes and prevented visibility.

In spite of this fact, however, the climb was accomplished in record time, as Dr. Hickson and Mr. Palmer did not leave Jasper until a week ago and during that period they had to make a reconaissance of slopes of the mountain as well as cut a new trail to their point of ascension.

Dr. Hickson is president of the Canadian Alpine Club and Mr. Palmer is president of the Alpine Club of the United States, and, so far as it is known, it is the first time on record that two presidents of two national Alpine Clubs have been associated in an ascent of the character. The Swiss guides of Jasper Park Lodge assisted in the climb.

Instead of returning to Jasper, the two presidents will endeavor to find a pass from the Whirlpool River into the Tonquin Valley and follow it to the latter location, where the annual meeting of the Canadian Alpine Club is to be held, commencing July 26.

B. C. FOREST FIRES ARE UNDER CONTROL

Early Morning Showers on Thursday Aided Fire Fighters.

VANCOUVER, B. C., July 17. — (Canadian Press).—Fires in the inland district and on Vancouver Island are reported to be practically under control or extinguished, the only exception being a blaze which is defying a hundred fire-fighters near Stillwater, B.C., 20 miles southwest of Powell River, north of here.

The showers of early Thursday morning aided considerably in bringing about improved condition.

HOW TO SWIM

By LILLIAN CANNON

Are you a good swimmer? Or are you one of those unfortunates who have to pass up a lot of good summer fun because they are unable to keep afloat in the water?

Anyway, there's no need any longer for not knowing how. Lillian Cannon, one of the world's finest swimmers, who is now training for an attempt to swim the English Channel, has explained her secrets of swimming in a series of 36 simply written articles.

No better swimming authority than Lillian Cannon could be found. Ever since she was a little girl she has been an expert.

She explains clearly in this series such fundamental principles as stroking, kicking and, most important of all, breathing.

The series starts on Monday in The Examiner. Be sure to follow it.

A WELL PLANNED, MODERATE COST BUNGALOW

By Edgar Prain Architect.

The greatly increased cost of construction above that of pre-war days makes the "own your own home" problem quite a perplexing one for the family of limited means. In addition to the cost of the home itself, the burdens of carrying and upkeep are also greater and often turn out to be the "straw that breaks the camel's back."

From these viewpoints the accompanying illustrations should meet with the approval of prospective builders. The initial cost is in the vicinity of four thousand dollars. To this let us add another thousand which, in views four thousand dollars. To this let us add another thousand which, in view of the cost of the house, is the maximum amount you should pay for a lot. On the basis that the yearly rental derivable should amount to ten per cent. of the total cost and that you should be able to carry the house for less, you will find this home comes well within the province of propriety. Interest: taxes: insurance and repairs should be considerably less than five hundred dollars—not more than four hundred and fifty dollars at the most, including interest on your own equity.

The perspective impresses one with the fact that it is all house—no expensive frills but just a good substantial home not lacking in the quality of being acceptable to the eye. What would otherwise be rather plain lines as far as the walls are concerned has been averted on two sides by the receding porch and on another side by the protruding bay window. The cottage roof: wide water table at the floor level and attractive windows also assist in producing a pleasing bungalow effect.

From the porch one may go directly to either the kitchen or living room. This convenience is often appreciated when coming home but perhaps more so as a time saver in the many little trips necessary to find out "who's who" at the front door.

The living room is 17 ft. 6-in. by 10 ft., and has a built-in bookcase: an open fireplace with tile hearth and a large bay window. The two bedrooms are slightly larger than usually found in small homes and each has a roomy clothes closet. A large broom closet and well appointed bathroom and kitchen complete the plan and we think—a desirable home.

Readers desiring further information regarding the plans and specifications of this house should communicate with the architect direct. Address Mr. Edgar Prain, 212 Confederation Life Building, Winnipeg, Man. Copyright, 1926, MacLean Building Reports Limited.

KILLED AT CROSSING.

Auto Stalls in Front of Approaching Train—Five Dead.

BUFFALO, N. Y., July 17. — Five persons were killed and another probably fatally hurt when a Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburgh passenger train struck a sedan at a grade crossing south of Lackawanna last night. The automobile is said to have stalled on the railroad tracks.

The dead are:

Mrs. Anna Jablowski and her sixteen year old son, John; Joseph Dylong, Mrs. Eva Marchinkowski, all of Lackawanna, and Louis Wolpa, of Buffalo, the driver.

John Storsche, Lackawanna, is dying from a fractured skull and other injuries.

In another accident not more than a mile away from the railroad crossing, Mrs. Christina Reading, of Buffalo, was killed and Frank Beary and his wife, of Oil City, and John Patti of Dunkirk, were injured. Their automobile collided with a truck.

Automobile owners of Japan are turning from large to light cars this season.

POLICE HOLD MAN.

Think He Is a Fakir Who Robbed Whitby Woman—Arrested at Belleville.

BELLEVILLE, Ont., July 17.—Inspector C. E. Guernett and Sergt. Clark, of the Provincial Police, placed under arrest yesterday a man for whom the authorities in this district have been scouring the country, namely, "Dr." Law Redwing, supposedly from Buffalo, who is alleged to have pulled off one of the most daring frauds that has been engineered in this part of the country in recent years. It is alleged that he is the man who, at Whitby, induced a Mrs. John Puckrin to deposit $900 for a cure for cataracts on the eye.

Redwing was arrested in company with his wife, travelling in an auto with a Pennsylvania license. They were brought to Belleville, and the man was locked up at the police station pending the arrival of Police Constable Fewtrell, of Cobourg, for identification. He carried cards on which were inscribed: "The Aboriginal American Indian Rights and Welfare Research Society, incorporated and chartered under the U.S.A. Chief Dr. Law Redwing, of 172 Riley Street, Buffalo, N.Y."

THANKS TO BAND

Peterborough, July 17.

Editor of Examiner,

Outside the well merited applause given to the various numbers, it was pleasant to hear in various parts of the park expressions of appreciation.

The noisy element of bygone years was absent, maybe owing to the presence of one of Chief Newhall's staff.

Gone also are the cobwebs from the bandstand, which glistened proudly under a new coat of paint. City Council, keep up the good work.

To The Examiner for inserting these few remarks, many thanks,

Yours,
Richard J. Devey.

ANSWERS MR. PECK

The Editor, Peterborough Examiner, City,

Dear Sir.—In last night's Examiner, Mr. E. A. Peck, M.P., wrote a letter asking me to withdraw the statement that he had voted against penny postage, reduction of income tax of the last budget, and Mr. Peck went on further to say that he did not vote against any of them.

It may be only fair to repeat what I stated at the picnic, where I said:

1.—That Mr. Peck voted against penny postage, and in favor of maintaining the three cent rate, although the surplus in the Post Office Department ran into the millions.

2.—That Mr. Peck voted against reducing the income tax, which meant a relief to one-third of the income tax payers of Canada, and increases the exemption from $2,000.00 to $3,000.00.

3.—That Mr. Peck voted against reducing the duty on automobiles, which meant a reduction of $40.00 to $500.00, according to the price of the car, and 4.—That Mr. Peck voted against a reduction of taxation of the Canadian people of approximately $25,000.000.00 a year.

Mr. Peck says he did not do this, but on page 3683 of the House of Commons Debates of 1926, he is recorded as voting in favour of Dr. Manion's want of confidence motion, and on page 3685 he is recorded as voting against the budget, which provided the above-mentioned benefits.

I am not surprised at Mr. Peck being ashamed of his vote being cast against the benefits indicated in this letter, but I am surprised that he repudiates what is shown in the records of Parliament.

If he did not vote as shown in the House of Commons Debates of May the 18th, and can produce a letter from the Clerk of the House of Commons, saying that he did not vote in this way, I will forthwith contribute $100.00 to the Saint Vincent's Orphanage, and $100.00 to the Children's Aid Society, and apologize to him for declaring that he voted as I have stated, but the records of Parliament show that he voted just as I have stated, and his duty was to correct the Hansard next day on the opening of the House, and state that he was counted in the vote in error.

Yours faithfully,
C. N. GORDON.

TODAY—Canada has its first high-speed European-type Light Car

This New Car Offers:

- 35 miles on a gallon of gasoline
- 55 miles an hour—5 to 30 miles in 13 seconds
- 4-wheel brakes—stops in 2 car lengths from 25 miles an hour
- Turns in 34-foot circle—easiest car in Canada to park
- 5 feet 8 inches high—lower gravity centre—greater safety
- European-type body—more inside room than any other light car

HERE is a remarkable new-type car . . . different from anything you have ever known before . . . A car that combines the latest engineering practice of Europe with new, improved standards of Canadian performance.

This new car has a low, European-type body. With height and length in true symmetrical proportion.

It turns in a 34-foot circle . . . that's less than the width of an average city street. You can park it in 14 feet . . . which is much less than the space required for the ordinary car.

It has a high-torque, 31-horsepower motor of small bore and long stroke—the same engineering principle as used in the fastest racing cars of this continent and Europe.

4-wheel brakes are an integral part of this new car's chassis design . . . a luxury which light car owners have not heretofore enjoyed. Measured tests show that it will stop in 2 car lengths from a speed of 25 miles an hour.

Its centre of gravity is extremely low, with ample road clearance . . . thus giving a sense of security you have never found in any light car before.

Two engineering ideals combined

It is a complete new car . . . designed and built as a unit . . . not an old-fashioned reconstructed chassis.

For over three years Willys-Overland engineers in Europe and America have been developing it. Over half a million miles of road tests proved the practical advantages of this car before it was released for production.

Compared with old-fashioned bulky cars the Whippet is smaller and much more graceful. Note the low, European-type body.

Stop-watch tests show that the Whippet accelerates 18% faster than other light 4-cylinder cars.

The distinctive body lines of the Overland Whippet frankly resemble the smartest automobiles of this continent and Continental Europe. Stand before this car and you can imagine yourself on the Boulevards of France.

Low-swung . . . rakish . . . graceful as a whippet . . . that's the only way to describe it.

Complete symmetry of design has been achieved with compact external dimensions.

Compared with contemporary, big, bulky cars the Overland Whippet appears smarter and much more graceful. That's because height and length are in true artistic proportion.

In the Overland Whippet you have the feeling of riding closer to the ground . . . with the resultant sense of solidity and absence of that side-sway so noticeable in the conventional type of car. That high-up-in-the-air feeling is gone . . . here is a new kind of riding comfort.

Hitherto unheard-of economy

Here at last is an automobile that will run 35 miles on a gallon of gasoline . . . well over 1,000 miles on a gallon of oil . . . with extraordinary mileage on tires.

It cuts present operating costs just about in half. Doubles the value of every dollar you now spend for upkeep.

Exhaustive tests so far indicate that the average year's operating cost of the Overland Whippet should save you from $75 to $150 in gas, oil, tires and mechanical upkeep.

Designed and built without restrictions

The engineers who designed this car . . . and the men who built it . . . have worked without restrictions.

Nothing has been spared that would improve its engineering or its quality.

The Overland Whippet is not a 1 or 2 year car. Instead, it has been honestly built to give years and years of satisfactory service . . . to deliver thrilling and trouble-free performance for thousands and thousands of miles.

This new-type car has such costly equipment as a one-piece windshield, cowl ventilator, quick-acting crank-type regulators on doors and windows.

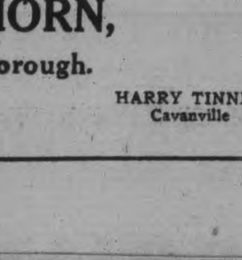
A dome-light and a handsome walnut-finished instrument board add to its unusually attractive and complete interior equipment.

The car is beautifully finished with durable triple-coated lacquer that will retain its lustrous beauty for years and years.

To millions of Canadian women this car will bring an entirely new pride of ownership—a new delight in its comfort and refinements.



Tests so far indicate that an Overland Whippet will save you $75 to $150 a year on gas, oil, tires and upkeep.

See this new-type car

Come, see this car. Take this advertisement with you and check the things we say here against what you find. We have purposely understated every fact. We have told you the story of the Overland Whippet without exaggeration.

With the introduction of the Overland Whippet, it is dangerous today to consider the purchase of a less modern car.

Today Overland . . . and Overland alone . . . offers you these unique engineering attainments. In fairness to yourself, see this wonderful new-type car.

STEAL PAY ROLL.

Employers Lose Pay Roll in Full View of the Workers.

DETROIT, Mich., July 17. — A score of workers on a school house at St. Aubin and Nevada Avenues saw four robbers waylay their employers yesterday and escape with $5,000 with which they were to be paid. So quickly did the robbers work that the employees had no chance to prevent the raid.

Charles and John Corrick, owners of the Corrick Bros. Company, building contractors, were victims of the robbery. They had been to a downtown bank and were just alighting at the school house when four men leaped out of a touring car, covered the brothers with guns and seized the payroll bag. On the framework stood the workers, getting ready to descend. They had seen the brothers arrive. Before they could reach the ground, the robbers had escaped with the wages.

SATURDAY.

The diamond is both the talismanic and natal gem for this day. It attracts good fortune to all who seek it with honest endeavor and endows them with courage and strength to meet all difficulties. To those born on an anniversary of this date it brings power to attract sincere, and constant love, if it is set in gold and worn on the left hand or arm.

Coral is the color for wear today. It represents health and vigor and the wearing of it is believed to attract those qualities.

The yellow rose brings good fortune to the home which it adorns.

SUNDAY.

The jacinth, today's talismanic stone, must be worn around the neck if its full powers are to benefit the wearer. It brings freedom from contagious diseases and assures the traveller of safety no matter what misfortunes may befall those around him, according to the ancients.

The onyx, today's natal stone, protects its wearer from the ardors of unwelcome love, and endows him with coolness and poise.

Dark brown or Black should be worn on this day: the Orientals believed that the quieter hues aided them in escaping the notice of the evil spirits which rule this day.

The purple violet is the lucky flower for this day. It is supposed to bring happiness to those who wear it.

COUNTRY FLOODED BY DIKE BURSTING

Thousands Rescued From House-tops By Organized Relief Parties.

BUDAPEST, July 17 (Canadian Press)—Forty thousand acres of the best soil of Jugo-Slavia has been flooded by the bursting of a dike near Apatin and Woivodine. Thousands of peasants have taken refuge on house tops from which they are being removed by organized relief parties. Other vast regions in Jugo-Slavia are threatened and the floods give no sign of abating.

PRAIRIE CYCLONE WRECKS BUILDINGS

Grain Destroyed — Barns Scattered in Small Pieces By Wind.

MOOSE JAW, July 17 (Canadian Press).—A cyclone, accompanied by hail, which struck the Village of Expanse, 34 miles southwest of Moose Jaw, demolished buildings in the village and surrounding territory, and destroyed or damaged 7,000 acres of crops. Damage to property is estimated at many thousands of dollars.

Residents All Escape

Wire communication with the village was suddenly cut and it was only last night, when wires had been restored, that news of the storm was received here. Telephone poles were levelled and scattered over the streets of Expance. No reports of deaths or injuries have been received.

At Estevan the Saskatchewan Co-operative Company wheat elevator was damaged to the extent of $3,000. Small buildings were completely demolished, while many residences reported serious damage. Pratically every building in the village was damaged. The curling rink, two barns and six garages were among the buildings destroyed.

Heavy Crop Damage

Six miles west of Weyburn twenty telephone poles were blown down. Baildon reported considerable damage from hail. At Crestwynd a strip of territory fifteen miles long and five miles wide was swept by the cyclone, and 3,000 acres of grain damaged. The damage to grain is estimated at from 30 per cent. to 100 per cent. A total of 1,000 acres of the crop was completely destroyed. At Old Wives a residence and barn on the farm of George Dukes were completely demolished. The buildings were scattered into small pieces, which were strewn over a large area. Telephone poles were blown down in this district.

Hail accompanied the cyclonic wind, and most of the windows in the affected areas were smashed.

Sixty-five were present, a number from White Lake church and several campers increased the attendance for the afternoon. The president, Mrs. J. McCaffery, presided. The speaker of the afternoon was Miss A. Sinclair, school nurse from Belleville. Miss Sinclair gave a very interesting address on child welfare. She emphasized the value of milk to a growing child and paid tribute to the Belleville W.C.T.U. which had provided milk for the needy children in the schools.

Miss Edna Noyes gave a humorous recitation in a happy manner. Afternoon tea and the usual social hour followed. A generous collection was taken up to aid the W.C.T.U. work. Mrs. Robert Noyes invited the Society to meet at her home in the near future.

WITH OWNERS AWAY FIRE BURNS HOME

Whole Village Is Called Out To Fight a Midnight Fire.

MADOC, July 17.—A great shock awaited Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Munro last night when they returned from a trip to Crow Lake to find that their house had been badly damaged by fire.

About eleven forty-five the citizens of the village were startled to hear the ringing of the fire-bell for the first time in some weeks.

Walter Rupert was the first to discover the fire in the Munro house and quickly gave the alarm. The chemical engine was soon on the spot but failed to get the fire under control, as it had evidently been burning for some time, and had made great headway. It was then found necessary to get out the old engine and hose, and a bucket brigade was formed in the meantime. Both men and women turned out in full force, and the men worked valiantly, while the women lent aid in carrying the furniture to the homes of the neighbors. They succeeded in saving the greater part of the furniture though much was ruined by water and smoke. The fire apparently started in the basement and destroyed the back part of the house. The cause is not known, though it is thought that a short circuit must have occurred in connection with the automatic water pump. Mr. and Mrs. Munro and a party of friends had gone to spend the evening at Crow Lake. Attempts to get a telephone message to them failed, and when they arrived hime shortly after midnight it was to find their home gutted by fire and their furniture scattered over the lawn or at the homes of the neighbours. The house is owned by Joseph Jackson, formerly of Madoc, now of Detroit.

ORANGE PARADE.

Many Local Lodges Attended the Celebration at Belleville.

PETHERICK'S CORNERS, July 17.—Threatening, cloudy weather, and even rain and wind could not deter the loyal Orangemen of Petherick's Corners Lodge from attending the celebration of 12th of July at Belleville on Monday. Several car loads of the members of Sentinel L.O.L. 2322 and also the ladies of the local branch of the L.O.B.A. attended and took part in the tremendous parade, which was one of the largest ever seen in the Bay of Quinte district. The local lodges made a splendid showing with their white and red uniforms and contrasted favorably with the majority of the lodges which were not in uniform. Everyone seemed to enjoy the day, and the meeting with the Orange brethren from the rest of the district served to strengthen the spirit of Orangeism.

CROSS ATLANTIC.

FALMOUTH, England, July 17. —A trip across the Atlantic in a yacht ended yesterday when the Primrose, owned by F. J. James, of Boston, arrived here. The 411-ton vessel crossed in 22 days, 20 hours, after covering 3,300 miles.

The crew is composed of amateur seamen, Harvard and Yale students. The cooking was done by another amateur, Nicholas Riddle. Each member of the crew stood watch for 12 hours one day and ten the next. The average speed was six knots an hour. The Primrose had a good passage, meeting only a little fog four days out of Boston. Only half the water supply and one-third of the food abaord was consumed.

PRESENT TEACHER WITH VANITY SET

Address Read, With Presentation by the School Pupils.

CAMPBELLFORD, July 17.—A very pleasant time was spent on Friday, June 25th, at S. S. No. 5, Seymour, when the parents gathered to spend an hour with the teacher, Miss Nellie Davidson, and their children, who were making the presentation of a beautiful vanity set to their teacher, accompanied by the following address:

Dear Miss Davidson:

It is with feelings of deep regret that we, the pupils of S.S. No. 5, Seymour, have learned that you are about to sever your relationship with us as teacher.

No doubt we have often tried your patience, but we believe that you have always considered our best interests first. The lessons you have sought to teach us have helped to mould our lives for good and we can never forget you.

We are sorry that earthly ties such as bind us together as teacher and pupil must be broken, and

When we asunder part

It gives us inward pain,

But we shall still be one in heart

And hope to meet again.

As a slight token of your service we ask you to accept this little remembrance and as you in future years gaze upon it, may it bring to memory again each one of your pupils of the English Line school.

Signed on behalf of the pupils of the school,

Jean Peake,
Alex Stephens.

Miss Davidson, although taken completely by surprise, thanked the children for their gift, and expressed her wishes for their welfare in a few well chosen words.

The Overland Whippet Touring—a beautiful open car of smart, appealing lines

In its distinctive body-lines the Overland Whippet frankly resembles the smartest, custom-built motor cars of Europe and America. The touring model is particularly handsome, whether driven with top up or top down. It is like large, expensive cars reproduced in every detail in reduced dimensions.

The touring model, like the closed cars, has nickeled lamps and radiator shell and is finished with triple-coated, durable blue lacquer. The same pleasing color scheme is carried out in the handsome, rippled, Spanish Duratex seat and cushion-back coverings. The interior dimensions are astonishing in a car of this wheel-base. 43 inches from seat-back to toe-board, front and rear. Seat widths—front, 41 inches; rear, 44 inches. Ample room for five adult people to ride in comfort. 36½ inches from the seat to the top of the car when the top is up—plenty of head-room and hat-room.

Ample tool-room under front seat. Metal rack on back of rear seat back-cushion for side-curtains easily reached by tilting cushion forward Glass window in the rear. Side-curtains open with doors.

Materials used in every detail from top-cover to interior trim and tire are of excellent quality. The Whippet is built for permanence, endurance and long life.

DOMESTIC SCIENCE CLASS IS ARRANGED

Will Be Held During Two Weeks in August—In Community Hall.

CAVAN, July 17.—The Cavan Women's Institute held their July meeting at the home of Mrs. J. Armstrong, Eighth Line, on Wednesday evening. The president, Mrs. D. J. Hunter, conducted the meeting. There were twenty-nine present.

The chief items of business were planning for the domestic science class to be held in Cavan Community Hall during two weeks in the month of August, and deciding what prizes should be offered by the Institute to the pupils at the Rural Fair in September.

It was decided to offer three prizes, according to grade. One prize for the pupils of the first class. The forming of the alphabet written and printed, and of the cardinal numerals.

Another prize offered to pupils of the second and junior third classes: A map of the United Counties of Durham and Northumberland.

The third prize to be offered to the classes from the Senior Third up: An essay of three hundred words on any one of the following subjects: "The Rural Fair," "Farm Life," "If I were King or Queen of England."

Before the school term opens, the teachers of the schools in the North Cavan Rural Fair will be notified, and special judges asked to judge the work for the Institute. One rule in this competition will be that all work must be handed in unsigned. The pupil's name will be entered in a book and be assigned a number, which will be placed on the work. This plan was followed last year and proved quite satisfactory as the judges did not know the owners of the maps until after the prizes were assigned.

After the business session a committee of ladies, Mrs. Ray Syer, Mrs. A. Kennedy, Mrs. D. White, Mrs. E. Armstrong and Miss L. Syer, served lunch and a social time was enjoyed.

Miss Frances Hunter extended an invitation to the Institute to hold their next meeting at her home. This will be in September, the August meeting being withdrawn on account of the cooking class in August.

A committee consisting of the officers of the Institute was appointed to meet and consider the advisability of the young people of the community preparing a play to be given in the fall.

RESULTS OF VIOLENT STORM.

Several sections throughout Canada and particularly western Ontario suffered damage totalling many thousands of dollars from the violent wind and rain storm over the week-end. At Watford, Ont., George Buttery, his family and four others had a narrow escape from death in the complete demolition of their home. Top right shows little even of the wreckage remaining of the farm-house after the cyclone had passed. Boards were scattered over the fields for two miles. Right centre, a freak of the storm that destroyed the Buttery home was that it jumped a ten-mile stretch in which little harm was done, to descend and wreck a home a mile west of Strathroy. Bottom right, George Buttery's barns were on the edge of the vortex that sucked the house into the sky. In this instance a good deal of the debris remained on the scene.

WELCOME NEWS

WELCOME, July 17.—Another accident occurred on Welcome corner on Friday morning about 12 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. Homer Lavigne and son of North Bay were motoring to Kingston and in turning Welcome corner the car went into the ditch and toppled over on the top, then fell on its side.

The occupants were able to crawl out through the space occupied by the windshield.

Mrs. Lavigne sustained a sprained arm and the little boy some bruises. Considerable damage was done to the car.

Mrs. Lavigne was carried into the parsonage and Dr. Diamond of Port Hope dressed the arm.

Two men, who were being given a ride in the back seat, escaped without a scratch.

Sheppard—Jones.

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Jones, Clarke township, when their daughter, Clara, was united in marriage to Mr. Henry Sheppard of Zion neighborhood.

The house was very prettily decorated with a great variety of flowers, orange blossoms being the most prevalent.

At 12 o'clock the bride and groom took their place under a very artistic arch in the parlor.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. W. Jones of Warkworth, uncle of the bride, assisted by Rev. D. R. Clare of Welcome.

After the ceremony and congratulations to the young couple, the young son of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Jones was baptized.

Mr. and Mrs. Sheppard left for a trip to Ottawa.

The bride was the recipient of many valuable gifts.

Strawberry Festival.

A very successful strawberry festival was held on the Welcome church lawn and Mr. E. J. Symon's orchard adjoining on Thursday night, under the auspices of the Young People's League.

One of the attractions was a soft-ball game between the girls of Bethesda and Welcome. The Welcome team were winners. Mr. Taylor of Hamilton was referee.

The booth on the grounds, under the direction of Mrs. Arthur Lewis, assisted by Misses Elva Pearce and Ida Clare, did a flourishing business all evening.

After every one was supplied with strawberries and cream, and the other good things provided, a good programme was given in the church. The Wesleyville orchestra and Newcastle male quartette provided the music. Misses Marion Martyn and Ida Clare recited in their usual acceptable manner.

The proceeds of the evening were about $160.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

(By Mildred Marshall.)

Facts about your name, its history; its meaning; whence it was derived; its significance; your lucky day, and lucky jewel.

STEPHANIE

A very unusual name is Stephanie. Of late it has had great vogue and represents a revival of interest in the old Greek names whch had far more significance than our modern versions Stephanie, for instance, originates with the Greek games when the wreath of the conqueror was an appropriate allusion to those games where the Greek youth delighted to contend. The wreath was called a stephanos and it is more than likely that the first proper name Stephanos was so called by a proud family whose representative had returned with a leafy crown on his brow.

Stephan, the contraction, was an old Greek name borne by the son of Thucydides, before it was given to the Hellenist deacon who achieved the greatest of all victories and won the spiritual crown. Old Greek hymn writers celebrated this accordance of name and destiny.

"Thou by name a crown impliest
Meetly then in pangs thou diest:
For the crown of righteousness."

Stephanie is the feminine form approved in Greece: it also signifies a crown. It received a sacred prominence since no less than seven saints bore the masculine form of it, including the great Saint Stephen, the martyr. The English gained its use, it is said, through William the Conqueror who dedicated to Saint Stephan the Abbey built at Caen to expiate the marriage with the already betrothed Matilda.

The English have placed the stamp of their own spelling upon it, and while using Stephanie to a large extent, also favor Stephana. The French call her Estephanie, Stefanie, Etiennette, and Tiennette. Estephania is the Portuguese form and Stephanine, the German. Russia changes her to Stephanida and Stepanida.

Stephanie's jewel is the sapphire which will protect her from all harm, and is said to attract divine favor to its wearer. Her lucky day is Wednesday and 3 is her lucky number.

Hiking Along Love's Trail

By Popini.

Copyright, 1926, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc., United Britain rights reserved.

It all started as a lark—this hike. Just one of those spontaneous things that seem meant to further Love's purpose. Nothing serious at all, but on the journey they found out how congenial they were—same tastes, same likes, happy and contented with each other's company, and lo! the casual hike became a journey down life's pathway.

And instead of just memories of a wonderful day, they found—and founded—a home. And now they're hiking down the most wonderful trail of all—the trail of Love that leads to the land of Golden Dreams and the fulfillment of Life's hopes that means the attainment of Peace and Joy and Happiness for always.

A CLASH OF WITS

'I got back from my luncheon Mr. Robinson,' in the time 'which was' given me for it, according to rules. The rest of the time I have been upstairs with Miss Cleaver.'

'Evidently you had not told him that I had been there, Doctor Flint, for he said, 'It is unfortunate that Miss Cleaver has had an epileptic fit.' I told him that she had taken Poison and to prove it I handed him the bottle from which about half of the liquid had been taken. As I slipped it into Mr. Robinson's hand he was so terrified when he saw the skull and cross-bones that he dropped it on the floor and turned so white I thought he was going to faint."

Then he came close to me again and snapped, "Where is that bottle now, young woman."

"Hasn't Mr. Robinson got it?" I countered.

"You know very well he hasn't That's why I asked you for it last night; that's why I am asking you for it now."

"I don't know whether Mr. Robinson has it or not, Doctor Flint," I lied cheerfully. "I haven't seen Mr. Robinson since I saw him at the counter when I handed it to him. I saw him drop it. I saw him turn very pale as he kicked it under the counter out of sight."

"So you know he dropped it

"Yes, I know he dropped it, but let me say right here, Doctor, that if important as both of you and he think that bottle marked poison was, I would have picked it up before the store closed. In fact, I would have picked it up instead of kicking it under the papers."

"Which of course you did, Miss Dean," asserted the Doctor triumphantly. "Well, we want it, pass it over."

"Doctor Flint, I have never experienced the tactics the police use in the third degree, but I believe they are something like those you are using now."

As I spoke, I was sure that Lady Luck was with me, for Mr. Robinson came hurriedly into the room.

"Have you seen the morning papers?" he asked, before he really recognised me.

"Yes," answered the doctor curtly. "I was just trying to get from Miss Dean here the bottle which she picked up from the floor——"

"You remember it. You dropped yourself," I said, turning to the manager of the store.

"Yes, I remember it," said Mr. Robinson.

Doctor Flint again swore under his breath. He would not have had the manager make that admission for anything in the world.

The Smock Gives a Gay Bohemian Air to Domesticity

If you want your sixteen-year-old daughter to make her bed, dust the living-room, put down the dahlias in May and take up the gladioli in October, don't give her an apron. She will be misunderstood and a martyr in blue gingham—a romantic figure, Mimi, with a dash of Greenwich village, in a smock. You have no idea how much she'll do in pastel-blue chintz, flowered with primroses, or how cheerfully she'll do it in violet sateen collared with meadow green. Offices this season are agogs with smocks of all colors. They fetch your packages in shops, serve you in tea-rooms, usher you into theaters. A charming fashion and distinctly practical.

HOROSCOPE

"The Stars Incline, but do not Compel"

SATURDAY JULY 17.

Friendly stars rule today, according to astrology, which finds the dominant aspects strongly benefic.

It is a day stimulating and helpful to women who should push all their big group projects.

Household interests again are to occupy attention and wives are to find new inspiration in everyday things, it is prophesied.

All the indications appear to promise a return to sane standards of living and fashions are to be modified on modest lines, astrologers foretell.

This month is auspicious for love affairs. Men are to be more serious and reliable in their methods of dealing with women, the seers prophesy.

While there is to be a decided reaction in manners and customs toward conservative standards, this year may mark the nearest approach to normal conditions that can be expected for a decade.

From this date on, the effects of the recent eclipse may be evident in contentions among foreign powers, while financial and political conditions will cause anxiety in this country.

Science is to bring to the front many new heroes who will be acclaimed for supreme service to humanity before 1930.

Severe storms, especially electrical storms, may be expected all through the remainder of the summer and the early fall.

Rough voyages may be expected for return trips of many summer tourists in Europe.

Neptune again smiles on the earth and this benefic aspect should be powerful in siding statesmen and diplomats who must have keen foresight.

There is indication of tremendous addition to the world's oil supply and these are to be needed in new inventions to meet extraordinary demands.

Persons whose birthdate it is have the augury of a lucky year in courtship and marriage. There will be travel and pleasure probably.

Children born on this day may be impulsive and intense in nature. These subjects of Cancer are likely to have a keen sense of humor and to be gifted as actors.

JULY 18

This is an uncertain day, according to astrology. While benefic aspects are evident adverse rule is dominant.

The moon is in a fixed, feminine sign that is not helpful in its influence. Unrest and lack of power to concentrate may be evident.

There is rather a forbidding sign today for the clergy, as the church must overcome many antagonistic forces working in secret as well as openly.

While there may be indifference on the part of large numbers of persons where religion is concerned, the chief danger of the time will lie in contentions among opposing faiths, the seers prophesy.

Oriental teachers will gain many followers, it is prognosticated, but the influences from foreign lands will not be unfortunate.

Secret organizations are to gain great strength under this planetary government which aids projects of far-reaching significance.

Criticism of the government regarding important policies may be expected from pulpit and press, for there will be powerful reform movements.

Spiritualism is to be discussed with acrimony and there will be many new supporters, it is forecast.

This is a most auspicious rule for all pleasure resorts and should benefit railroads as well as surveyors of gasoline.

France is foreseen as projecting an enterprise which will draw many visitors to Paris next year.

All the domestic arts are to be stressed in the coming year when women are to make a science of housekeeping.

Marriage is to be contemplated with renewed seriousness, it is prognosticated and weddings are to multiply.

Persons whose birthdate it is should be careful of their employment in the coming year. Loans may be easily obtained, in all probability and financial affairs should be satisfactory.

Children born on this day probably will rise high in life and will be of fine nature. These subjects of Cancer may have strong Leo characteristics.

Would not be Without Zutoo Tablets At Any Cost

Mr. A. O. Norton, the millionaire Jack Manufacturer, of Boston, who recently died, was a great "booster" for Zutoo Tablets.

He suffered from headaches from childhood and when he found Zutoo Tablets stopped these headaches in a few minutes and left no bad effect, he began recommending them to his family and friends. In an unsolicited letter, Mr. Norton says in closing:

"My family use them when ever needed with equally good results. I have frequently given them to friends who were suffering from Headache and they never failed to give quick relief. I always carry Zutoo Tablets in my grip on the road and WOULD NOT BE WITHOUT THEM AT ANY COST."

RED HOT JULY DAYS HARD ON THE BABY

July—the month of oppressive heat; red-hot days and sweltering nights; is extremely hard on little ones. Diarrhoea, dysentery, colic and cholera infantum carry off thousands of precious little lives every summer. The mother must be constantly on her guard to prevent these troubles, or if they come on suddenly to fight them. No other medicine is of such aid to mother during the hot summer as is Baby's Own Tablets. They regulate the bowels and stomach, and an occasional dose given to the well child will prevent summer complaint, or if the trouble does come on suddenly will banish it. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

ONCE UPON A TIME — THE DWARF'S HILL—I — by W. J. ENRIGHT.

THERE WAS A LAD NAMED JAMES WHO, BEING LEFT PENNILESS AND ALL ALONE IN THE WORLD, STARTED OUT ONE SUMMER DAY FROM THE LITTLE TOWN IN WHICH HE HAD SPENT ALL HIS LIFE, TO SEEK HIS FORTUNE.

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate

HE WALKED ON AND ON AND NIGHTFALL FOUND HIM IN A STRANGE COUNTRY, WITH NO HOUSE IN SIGHT. SO HE LAY DOWN ON THE SLOPE OF A HILL AND, LOOKING UP AT THE STARS, THOUGHT OF WHAT HE WOULD LIKE MOST TO BE IN THE WORLD.

HE HAD OFTEN WISHED TO BECOME A HUNTSMAN, BUT HOW COULD HE EVER OBTAIN THE NECESSARY EQUIPMENT—A GUN, A HORSE AND A HORN? WHILE THESE THOUGHTS CAME AND WENT HE FELL ASLEEP, BUT WAS AWAKENED BY A FEEBLE VOICE CRYING, "HELP ME! HELP ME!"

HE AROSE AND LOOKED AROUND. BUT SAW NO ONE. "HELP ME," SAID A VOICE AGAIN AND IT SEEMED TO COME FROM THE GROUND BENEATH HIS FEET. LOOKING DOWN, HE SAW STANDING IN THE GRASS A LITTLE DWARF WITH A LARGE HEAD, A LONG NOSE AND SPINDLING LEGS.

TOMORROW—THE LITTLE MAN DISAPPEARS

GIRLS WITH WHOM EVERY MAN FLIRTS

"Number please!"

And never think she hasn't the number of them all—suave potentates, shiny-haired kiss-coaxers and the rest.

It's the voice with a smile that gets 'em, and the eyes with a twinkle—and the riot of curls flying loose from the bands of the head phone.

It is her demure deviltry that keeps that switch-board desk crowded with flower vases and candy boxes—her witchery and her perfect poise.

With dainty hands plucking so skillfully among the tangled cords, weaving the thoughts of thousands, she still has a smile and a provocative word for the yearning young thing—or the leering older thing—that waits in the offing.

A thousand cross words she takes every day over the wires—a thousand impatient persons to be pacified. But the smile does not die, nor the voice grow petulant.

For she has a world of her own—a world of flowers, pretty clothes and admiration.

So the other world must wait sometimes, while she comes back from the world of dreams, to say:

"Number, please!"

AUNT MARY JANE - - By Jane Osborn

PROFESSOR WILLIAM OGDEN opened the special delivery letter from young Fred Tilden and from within the folded note tipped a check for a hundred dollars. Thus ran the letter

'Dear Ogden

My Aunt Mary Jane from Montana is coming to the city. The idea with the family was that I was to look her up and show her the sights. They thought I was going to stay at college for the spring holidays to study. But I had to accept this house party invitation. Just remembered about Aunt Mary Jane—I was supposed to call at her hotel—the Blackmore—tomorrow morning and then show her a good time for a day or two. The old dame owns a mine or two and I'm one of her heirs—so spare no expense. Use this as a starter and charge for your time just as if you were tutoring. Show her some real night life—that's what they all want to see when they come to the city.

Yours in haste,
FRED TILDEN."

William Ogden was thirty and Fred Tilden was under twenty, yet there had been a feeling of unrestrained friendship between them ever since the year before, when Fred was a Freshman, Professor Ogden had been able by dint of intensive and high-priced tutoring to keep Fred from being ignominiously flunked. Professor Ogden might have resented the blunt mention of payment in the letter, but he knew that young Fred Tilden had no feeling of patronage toward him. Of course he'd have to play gallant for Aunt Mary Jane, and of course he'd charge for his time. Fred Tilden was perfectly able to pay and William Ogden needed such small contributions to eke out his small professor's pay.

He was not exactly the one you would have chosen to show your maiden aunt from Montana the night life of the great city, not because he would not have pleased your aunt but because he had never visited any of the dance clubs or restaurants where one expected to find "night life." He had no special fear or distaste for it—but simply because the subject had never interested him remotely.

William Ogden had made definite plans. He would call on the lady, and suggest that to begin with they take tea together at one of the fashionable resorts—something smart but rather sedate. The next day they might meet for a drive. He'd rent a good car for the afternoon and charge it to Fred Tilden. Then there would dinner at the Purple Pudding, followed by a visit to the Wild Raven and the Mary's Dance Club. The next day in what spare time he had he would try to take her to the zoo and the acquarium and whatever sights one usually visited.

But the fabric of Professor Ogden's plans was completely unravelled when he saw, and realized that he saw aright, Fred Tilden's Aunt Mary. She was young—didn't look thirty—and she wore clothes quite as smart and up to date as any woman he knew. She had keen blue eyes and a smile that was completely disarming.

"I'm half sister of Fred's mother—but I've never even seen Fred," she said. "When I decided to make the trip East, one of my brothers who heard about it and knew Fred was here in college, wrote on and made arrangements. Of course I should have liked to see Fred—but I think I shall find you more congenial than a nineteen-year-old boy."

It was after the exhibition of night life in the great city. Aunt Mary dressed in an inconspicuous but very becoming evening frock had been a charming partner for William and had even danced with him a little. He was escorting her to her hotel at a late hour—walking because she insisted that she wanted to get a breath of good fresh air after the stifling atmosphere of the dance place.

"I don't mean literally stifling," explained Aunt Mary Jane. "I just mean stifling as far as my peace of mind is concerned. It just seems perfectly appalling to me that life in this great big city means that—and that people like you and—and my nephew consider that having a good time. I've heard before that there wasn't any home life here."

William laughed. "Bless you," he said, with his arm through hers and drawing her closer to him as they walked under the starry sky. "I've lived here all my life—and I've never been to one of these night-life places before. Those places are just run for a few people who don't know the real joy of living, and for out-of-town folk who want to see the sights. But—Mary Jane—I could take you, if you'd let me, to a dozen little homes—poor instructors and professors like myself—only they've married and have found their measure of content. It isn't the city or the country, the east or the west, that makes for that, Mary Jane. It's finding the woman who can love and then making her love you—but I'm afraid I'm going to be disappointed, Mary Jane——"

For a minute or two Mary Jane forgot that she owned a mine or two and an oil well and confronted the problem of disposing of the income of several million dollars. She was thinking what joy it would be to be the helpmate of a poor professor like William Ogden—making a real home for him in the city where real home life was said not to exist.

"Perhaps you could make yourself love—the women who truly loves you," said Mary Jane.

THE WORKING GIRL "WORKING"

"Just think, Jimmie, some people can ride to the theatre in their own limousines. And lots of them don't think a thing about using a taxi-cab for only a mile, instead of walking. No, really! I'd rather walk. Well—if you insist."

"They shouldn't sell boxes of candy in theatres. It's tough on the poor girls who are trying to keep down their weight to have such temptation thrust upon them. No, honestly, I don't want any candy. I'm too fat as it is. Oh, yes, I am. Are you sure this won't make me fat? Oh, thank you."

"I sure enjoyed that show, but it made my mouth water to see that dining-room scene. Do you suppose that was real turkey the actors ate? They seemed to enjoy it. Oh, no, thanks awfully, but really I don't believe I could eat a thing. Oh, well, a sandwich would taste good."

"What a flossy menu this is. What do you know about that? I didn't know squabs were in season. I haven't tasted one for years and years. But they're too rich to eat at this time of the night. Don't you think so? You're there, Jimmie, when it comes to showing a girl a good time."

"Are you really going to Florida, Jimmie? Well, good luck. I wish I could go with you. Oh, I didn't mean it that way. But what a wonderful place that would be to spend a honeymoon. Ha! Ha!"

"Good——"

"The poor boob. Think of a guy beating it like that without trying to steal a kiss. Well, good riddance."—R. H.

WERE THOSE THE HAPPY DAYS?

The Funniest Thing about some women is their Husbands.

Put Dress in Hubby's Pocket

"Silks, satins and crepes are not sold by the pound, like potatoes," the wife of a British peer told the court when reprimanded for paying $1,000 for a gown that weighed less than a pound. But, it seems, the custom is about to change, had it is not at all unlikely that dresses soon may be marketed by weight and more probably by the ounce, rather than the pound.

A four-ounce dress—and of double thickness at that—was recently exhibited at a fashion show in Wembley, England. A pretty matron appeared in this flimsy, though entirely conservative, creation and amazed spectators later by removing it and stuffing it easily in the coat pocket of her husband.

The dress was of sheer crepe material, of two thicknesses, and daintily trimmed with cloth equally light. It was presented as an ideal Summer garment suited for afternoon and early evening wear at the beaches. It was designed primarily for the informal dance, with a view to allowing great freedom of movement and a minimum of weight.

Designs of this type are attracting the best-dressed women of London and the Continent, and are being displayed in profusion in Paris modiste shops, emphasis being placed on their weight—or lack of it.

There has developed a certain amount of rivalry among the designers to produce the lightest and most airy material, particularly in afternoon models. But thus far the four-ounce dress has topped the record.

Modistes explain that the lightweight dresses are not being exploited so much as a fad, as to meet demand. Smartly dressed women, they explain, are buying with an eye to comfort as well as "chic." And the lighter weights are not reflected in the prices!

The Woman Who Hooked the Wrong Husband

The woman is 57 and the man is 45.

But the man's wife "didn't understand him; oh, she didn't understand him at all." The widow understood him and he understood the widow—she was very rich, too, and that made it pleasant. They traveled together for some years.

Sometimes they drove in a nice, comfy motor car, and sometimes they traveled by train. If there had been convenient airships they would probably have traveled by air. They stayed at smart hotels, and the woman wore smart clothes and every once in a while she bought the man a perfectly lovely present. They went to dinners at clever cafes and danced all the new dances and went to all the naughty plays.

Oh, they had lovely times and the man kept promising to get a divorce and marry the woman.

But, finally, the woman told the man that she was tired of waiting for that wedding and that he must divorce his wife, he really must, and marry her.

The man said he wouldn't divorce his wife—after all—said he couldn't very well, without making a great rumpus. After all, she'd been a pretty good wife to him for years and there were business reasons. Her family was rather influential. And so the woman had the man arrested for violation of the Mann act, and she's going to get him sent to the penitentiary if she can.

"He has fooled me for four years," said the woman, "and I'm going to make him suffer for it."

Now, now, lady, dear lady, poor lady, how can you say such a thing as that? You're 57 years of age, you're a rich widow, you've been all over the world and met all sorts of men and all sorts of women, and yet, you believed this man when he told you he was going to divorce his wife and marry you? Tut, tut!

Love—what has love to do with the case? Men don't fall in love with women of 57. Men admire women of 57, yes, and even over. They may want such a woman for a nurse or a kind of glorified secretary, and business manager, or even for a companion. But for a sweetheart? Don't you know, poor lady, that sweethearting is over or ought to be over for a woman who's beyond 50?

Friendship, confidence, faith, mutual forbearance—there may be love of an old man for an old wife. You can understand that, but for a woman of 57 to expect a man of any age to fall madly in love with her and divorce his wife and marry her—that's a different story.

Age is not always wise, is it? That's rather a pity, for wisdom is one of the things that is most becoming to age.

CUPID'S SPECIAL SUMMER NUMBER

Long, long ago, when you mentioned a match people knew you did not mean an Eddy's special or the toss of a coin. A "Match" then meant that eligible young persons had become attracted to each other and that an engagement announcement might be expected anytime within several years. They were the days of long probation.

Longer ago than that—very much longer—there were no "Matches" in this sense, just as there were no sulphur-headed sticks to make fire. The cave-man who struck flint to flint or rubbed wood on wood to start a blaze used just as primitive methods to get him a bride. He took his choice by main force, we are told, and subjugated her by continued frightfulness.

Love-making methods have changed, though the old principle holds good. The modern sheik, who is cave-man at heart, is attracted to a young lady, or is attracted by her, and sets seige to her heart. He cannot grasp her by her hair (it being boyish-bobbed) or club her into insensibility as a preliminary to carrying her off (she is too athletic); but he rushes her off her feet in divers other ways. Candy, flowers, and ice cream sodas are mere gestures in the game; theatre parties and automobile drives are only skirmishes in the long line of attack. He studies her likes and plays up to them; he discovers her weaknesses, if she has any, and takes advantage of them.

It's Not Kindness.

It is not a spirit of kindness that moves the young man of today to discard the club in favor of the caress. Like his great-grandfather of away back, he wants what he wants when he wants it, but the fashion in methods has changed, that's all. It's still a battle of conquest.

Sometimes, of course, in these more enlightened days, the young lady has an opinion of her own as to whom she will favor, but it is really surprising how often a young woman's choice coincides with a young man's. How else would there be "Matches"? In such cases she is said to make use of certain wiles, but, being mere man we cannot speak with assurance as to this. It is said that many a girl marries a man on her mother's cooking, and, certainly, many of our married men friends have failed in girth since entering the blessed state. Having read a great many jokes about mothers-in-law, they made a decree that their wife's relations should not frequent the love nest—and found, too late, that the pie their tummies ached for was of mother-in-law's baking, though passed on by the family as daughter's.

There's no doubt about it, love-making today does not require the same finesse, or perhaps the same style of strategy, that was needed in the days of the crinoline and hansom cab. A proposal used to be a matter for many weeks' consideration and planning—today the Peterborough young man pops the question in some unplanned or unguarded moment, is accepted, and finds himself visiting the furniture stores before he has had time to catch his breath. Or he is rejected, and has made a fresh sortie, perhaps upon another citadel, within a week or two. We were told this week of a young fellow who dared his girl to marry him while he played with a sundae in a George street parlor. The girl took him up, they secured a license and were married in a matter of minutes. This, of course, was before the enactment of the law that requires a soul-searching pause between acts; but despite the precipitate action there is no happier couple in Peterborough. On the other hand, we know of a happily married couple who exchanged promises and sealed the bargain with a diamond ring eight years before they visited the parson.

And the explanation?

Just this: Caveman or sheik, crinoline-girl or flapper, however they dress, whatever they do, LOVE remains unchanged and cupid still does his stuff uerringly. If the speed of the age demands that he work faster, the little sprite is willing to oblige. He draws his arrow farther back and shoots the faster—and the bridal march means just the same today as it did when Wagner wrote the score in 1850.

I DID NOT KNOW - - Douglas Malloch

I did not know a rose could be
More fair than all earth's other roses,
And then you gave a rose to me,
That here within my heart reposes.
I did not know a day could dawn
Fairer than May, in some December;
But all the other days are gone,
And only one day I remember.

I did not know one voice could sound
Sweeter than all earth's other voices,
And yet, with music all around,
One note alone my heart rejoices.
I did not know one step could mean
So much on paths so many travel,
But now at night my heart I lean
To catch one step upon the gravel.

I did not know what love can do
Until I heard your footstep going;
I did not know, and even you
Perhaps may walk the world unknowing.
But, oh, I hope, where'er you are,
These things I know that you are learning,
And some sweet night, if near or far,
That I shall hear your step returning.

Many a girl marries a man on her mother's cooking.

DANCING INTO LOVE

By JEANNETTE

MZZNE. two. three"—one. two. three." The voice of little Monsieur Fitzroy. the dancing master MZZ of Greene street. rose and fell in a monotonous drawl. The "Monseer." as his pupils called MZZ him privately. was perspiring profusely. His Small face was red. his black hair shone with the natural oil engendered by the heat of his endeavors. and his twinkling black legs were beginning to slow up perceptibly.

It was the "Wednesday Evening Salon." which Monsieur Fitzroy advertised so extensively as an added attraction for his dancing classes. which had their regular sessions on the other evenings in the week. At the mid-week affairs. the pupils were allowed to bring a partner. either masculine or feminine. but as the majority of Monsieur Fitzroy's pupils were of the latter classification. and as most of them preferred to bring along another girl. the "Salons" were events mostly in which the ladies reigned supreme. and the wall had its full quota of spectators most of the time. The Professor did his duty nobly. "Mon Dieu," he would remark to his wife. despairingly. as he sank onto the lounge in the seclusion of their apartments after the final spasm of the 'Wednesday Evening Salon.' "these English! They are thick of head and large of ankle. How the little Hopkins did tramp on my feet this night! That girl has a beautiful face. but oh. what a foot!" Removing his shoos. the professor wiggled his freed toes gladly. while his wife sped for the arnica bottle.

But this respite would come later. Just now Monsieur was occupied in trying to teach Jasper Benson how to do the "Mobile Flip." An adaptation of the "Charleston." taken up by professors of dancing after the last-named dance had fallen into disrepute it involved a good deal of muscular action and there was one particularly tense moment when the right foot was compelled to do an intricate turn the while the left member bore the weight of the dancer and his partner together the lady having both feet off the floor at this point in the dance. Monsieur counted bravely the while he longed with fierce ardor for the clock to strike the eleventh hour when "dainty refreshments" as the published account of these affairs furnished the press by the Professor himself called them would be passed and the young ladies and gentlemen would return to their homes before midnight. The Professor was nothing if not decorous and he had built up a large clientele among the younger members of the neighborhood by appealing to the ideas of propriety held by their parents in the matter of early closing hours and correct deportment.

"We are genteel madame" he would assure a wavering mother of a daughter bursting to try the very latest thing in dance effects "we are very careful of our young charges. Madame as you see is always here" waving a fat small hand at his large wife comfortably placed on a sofa during these interviews" and she is most careful. Very amiable but oh so watchful." Madame smiled always at this juncture and nodded her head. She was a Breton woman and very fat but her eyes were large and dark and she had a look of infinite propriety. Not Understanding English she would never make the mistake of becoming shocked at unconventional errors of speech and the young things who frequented the "Monseer's" classes had discovered that while they must be careful in matters of conduct they could go as far as they liked in their conversation.

It was a warm evening. The windows were open but the early heat of June had been insufferable through the long day and the evening had brought little comfort with its advent. Madame dozing under a shaded light pitied poor Adolphe her husband who was compelled to work extra hard his evening on account of an over-plus of ladies. He would be a wreck she reflected sleepily. His nerves would trouble him to-night. She sighed slightly then stretched out her hand for the glass of lemonade on the table beside her.

Adolphe was dancing now with little Miss Dorothy Wood. She was a tiny thing dark and slender with a pale skin and eyes like forget-menots. Little Miss Dorothy was a special charge. Her mother a large lady with a voluble tongue had brought her to the Dancing Salon only a month ago with rigid instructions. She must not be allowed to dance with everybody. She must be returned home promptly at a certain hour when a taxi would be sent for her and she must not eat or drink anything. It was bad for the complexion to eat at night, said her mother with firm decision. Monsieur had promised acquiescence in all these orders.

Dorothy, so her mother said, although only seventeen years of age, had fallen madly in love with an undesirable young man. The Professor had gathered that he was low born. Mrs. Wood, a democratic American, had not uttered this thought in words, but the "Monseer" was quick to perceive. He knew exactly what she meant when she had lifted an eyebrow and told him what her parents desired for Dorothy. They had not much money, otherwise, he gathered, a little ruefully, she would not be taking dancing lessons in this public fashion, but they had blue blood behind them, and for Dorothy to care for a chauffeur was unthinkable. He might be earning money to put him through college, but their daughter could look for something better. It was not to be thought of.

Monsieur Fitzroy felt that the chaperonage of a lovelorn maiden was something he had not bargained for, but the little Dorothy was a divine dancer. She was lithe and graceful and swift on her feet and she loved to sway to the music, back and forth, as if she had the magic of it in her blood. Presently the "Monseer's" watchfulness had relaxed. There was a young man who seemed to make a perfect partner for the small lady. He was also a fine dancer—in Monsieur Fitzroy's opinion, the best dancer in the class. And he and Dorothy were perpetually dancing together, her slim grace a perfect foil for his strong body and honest face. Only, they seldom talked. The "Monseer" could not remember ever hearing them converse to any great extent, he thought, as he paused for a moment beside his wife, to regard the young people with an affectionate eye.

"The little Wood, she is marvellous to-night," he murmured in French to his wife, "and he is very fine. As his form grows bigger, his step grows lighter. They are of a perfection, those two." Madame nodded affably. She liked to watch the young things enjoy themselves. "She forgets this Hugo, then?" she murmured.

"Of a certainty," answered the professor, triumphantly. "She never speaks of him, and, as you see, she has grown well and rounded since she came to us. She is no longer pale and thin, with thin cheeks and dark looks. Her mother will be pleased."

"Mais oui," she answered, pleasantly, beaming at the young couple, as they floated by.

Soon the Professor departed, to have a duty dance with one of the plain Misses Smith, who had occupied wall seats most of the evening. His wife nodded beneath the soft light. Dorothy Wood and her escort came to sit down near her. They were talkative tonight, thought Madame, and the girl certainly was very pretty. Ah, well, not all men had the good sense of the Professor, to choose a wife who would grow plumper and more amiable with advancing years. This small one would be very thin when she was Madame's age.

"Carl," said the girl, abruptly, "what will mother and dad say?"

"They'll rage, of course, but what good will that do? We'll be married long before they find it out, and far away from them and their tempers." He caught the little hand nearest him and squeezed it. Madame, watching, smiled. The little Dorothy was fast forgetting her low-born admirer.

"Well, and what will these poor people do whemn other finds out that 'Carl Richard,' as you call yourself here, was really 'Hugo Larkin,' who used to be chauffeur for the rich Mr. Snowden? She will be angry at Monsieur and his wife."

"Never cross a bridge until you come to it, and then, if you can't cross it, go under it," quoted her lover, "if I choose to have parents who insisted on giving me a triple handle, like 'Hugo Carl Richard,' and if I wish to use two middle names, instead of my first and last ones, can they blame the Professor and his wife? Come on, and finish this before we leave. We have just time to make the city before all the parsons retire for the night." They rose and turned to the large lady near them.

"Bon soir, madame," they said, gravely, while the young man bowed deeply. "Bon soir, mes amis," she returned, flattered at their young interest, watching them admiringly as they whirled away.

"For cher monsieur et madame," read the mixed French and English salutation which came next day to the bewildered owners of the Dancing Salon, on a card whose large wedding bell surmounted a note indited to the "Monseer" and his lady, announcing the marriage of the little Dorothy and "Hugo Carl Richard Larkin." They puzzled over it for some time, but the revelation came later, during a visit from the enraged mother of "la petite Dorothy."

It was an exhausting interview. The Professor emerged from it, pale and haggard, his hands tired from the rapid manoeuvres they had undergone in an endeavor to supplement the emotional necessities of the conversation.

"Ah, ces Anglais," he said distractedly to his wife, sinking down on the convenient lounge, "that woman is of a terribleness. She says we encouraged these two, and that 'Hugo' was always the 'Carl Richard' who came here to dance with the little Dorothy. But how should we know?"

"Yes, were we to guess so much from another name?" argued his wife, smoothing his fevered brow. "These two, they dance into love before our eyes, as we thought. We could not know that they have met each other before."

"Dance into love, eh?" said the professor, delightedly, embracing his large wife. "Ah, my Angeline, you are of a cleverness. I have the great idea. It shall be no more 'Monsieur Fitzroy's Dancing Salon.' It shall be 'Cupid's Bower,' and you, my angel, shall be the duenna. You are admirable in that role."

Madame smiled widely, in amiable assent.

All men are patriots when they're called to serve on a jury in a bathing beauty contest.

DA CAPO

AND now, Miss Hoyt, let me present Dr. Farnum. The doctor, you know, has just returned from the wilds of Africa and will want to meet our newest musical luminary. Miss Hoyt, doctor, is a most unusually gifted pianist."

Their hostess, beaming at her adroit introduction, waited until Claudia Hoyt extended a languidly graceful hand to the scientist, then hurried off like a nice, pleased hen to tell everybody that a new celebrity had joined the party.

Claudia, wielding her cigaret with a deliberation that had the rhythmic grace of the speed camera, regarded the man before her with careless interest. She saw not the typical scientist, one of the stoop-shouldered, near-sighted, bearded gentlemen of countless press photographs, but a lithe giant, tanned like a tennis champion, as meticulously dressed as a London shop ad. She saw more. She saw a man to whom she owed a grudge 20 years old.

Bruce Farnum, bowing before the celebrated pianist, perhaps a little lower than was his wont, saw only a very striking woman, very black as to hair, very ivory as to skin and shimmering satin, very red as to lips, earrings and huge velvet poppy poised on a slim left hip.

Exotic? Picturesque? Tropical? More than likely. Then he met her eyes, cool, frank, im personal eyes, with the glint of a smile and the mist of tears in their history. He erased his first impression hurriedly.

"You collect? Or discover?" Miss Hoyt seemed amused. Her lids were lowered now, her breath came easily. For just a second she was afraid he might remember. How ridiculous to imagine it! Even if she had not changed her name for professional reasons, she doubted if Sally Heyt could have brought recognition. That was part of the grudge she owed him, that he could not remember now.

"A museum expedition," Bruce Farnum was saying, "in which I really played a very unimportant part. I was, virtually, cameraman, hazardous enough on occasions, but not particularly scientific. It was the only way I could climb on the wagon."

* * *

Anyone else but Claudia might have believed him, but she recalled—with a dozen other tokens—the boyish affectation of discounting his personal endeavors. It had misled her then, had made her feel that the splendid young professor had not stooped so very far after all in noticing plain little Sally Hoyt.

"But surely you did something more than 'kodak as you go'!" She invited his discomfiture. "I'm sure I saw a long piece in the paper about the lost race you unearthed. Or was it just a photogravure picture of your pet armadillo?"

He colored under his tan and hunched his shoulders with embarrassment. Claudia remembered that, too. "It wasn't a pet. I never had a pet in my life. It was the lost race—or, rather, a new tribe that no one seems to have chanced on before. It wasn't chance on my part, however. I've always been keen on ethnography, and I had reasons to suppose that we hadn't heard the end of the African story by any means. That's why I tried to find a place in the expedition. I didn't spring my theory until we left Cape Town, when I put the facts to MacAllister, and he agreed to switch his course and look into the locality I indicated. We found them, jungle-dwellers, pygmies, hair as long as themselves, straight as—well, as your own." He stopped short. This woman, flung with rag-doll grace on the moss-green chair, was she laughing at him under those downcast lids? What had made him break loose? She couldn't care for ethnography.

"And did you bring one of their tribe beauties back with you?" Claudia's voice was provocative.

"No." He was nettled. "There really isn't any more to it. Let's talk about something else."

"The next time." Claudia rose from her background. "I see Mrs. Plank coming for me. It must be time to play. That's why I'm here, as you've probably guessed, a poorly disguised entertainer."

Bruce Farnum watched her gleaming satin figure diffuse the shadows around the piano. Who was she, anyhow? She had the poise of a professional. And the air of a mondaine. Queer he had never heard of her! He had several musical associations. Curious mixture that, the studied, unhurried posing and the cool, ingenuous eyes. Yes, different. Very different. And Bruce was qualified to know.

At the piano Claudia let her hands form a few muted chords. She was surprised to find her fingers cold. Ugh, cold hands! How she dreaded them! It was years now since nervousness could affect her so. Bruce Farnum had done that for her. She slammed the door of her consciousness upon him and crashed easily into the opening chords of MacDowell's "Prelude." It was one of the few things she could risk upon an audience like Mrs. Plank's house party. It should be just showy enough to stop their annoying whispers.

The applause came, too loud to be merely polite. They had liked it. Mrs. Plank would be glad.

She gave them an encore.

Would they accept its clashing harmonies? Evidently they did. Again the enthusiasm, the prolonged applause. Mrs. Plank was beside her. "Could you possibly, Miss Hoyt? Just one more. I don't like to impose on you, it's so warm, but you captured them heart and soul."

Claudie complied carelessly. Around her carmined lips there played a queer little smile, very much out of place. One of the shadows in her audience was standing apart, arms crossed over a gleaming shirtfront. She'd risk it. She gave them—such a silly little thing—"I'm Wearing My Heart Away For You," completely disguised, however, in her own improvising, her own minor cadences. It was like showing off to company the dilapidated but favorite toy of one's childhood. She hoped they wouldn't laugh.

They didn't. They clamored for the name. They swarmed upon her. From the tail of her eye she caught that detached shadow moving toward her. She moved just as swiftly in the other direction.

Fifteen minutes later he had contrived to corner her alone upon the terrace. Bridge had finally resolved itself into three tables within.

"I don't need to tell you that it was superb. You know it."

Claudia shrugged her shoulders in polite disparagement.

"Even that last little thing. It was familiar. What is it?"

"Just a little whimsy of my own, based on an old sentimental ballad." Claudia waited. Did he know? Had he remembered?

"It's haunting. It harks back to days of adofescent sentiment for me. Like the dance cards and snapshots you keep. You laugh at them, but somehow you can't throw them out."

"You—you keep such things?" Claudia tried to laugh.

"Do you?"

"How foolish! There is only one memento of the pas t that I keep—and that you would not understand."

"I do, perfectly. It is your youth."

Claudia acknowledged the compliment with a weary smile. How deft he still was at such things. "The jungle can't be so wild, after all," she returned.

"It teaches by contrast. It tells me that I have seldom seen such tranquil, moon-drenched loveliness as this that lies before us. I have been hungry for it."

* * *

Claudia, too, regarded the silvered expanse of tree and terrace. An artist had blended well his turf and stone, his wood and water upon the canvas of the landscape. Terraces dropped in velvet precision between sculptured trees to a gleam of silver that was the lake. Tamed, Old World magnificence! But there was the tinkle of a truant brook in the air and the tang of wood-must on the breeze.

"It is like a gorgeous woman who smells of sun-dried linen."

"Exactly." His look turned the remark into a tribute.

Claudia accepted it in silence. It was quiet on the terrace, still enough to hear the shuffling and slapping of cards from the room inside, the murmur of bids. Bruce had turned toward the room the better to watch Claudia's lighted face. She could feel his silent scrutiny.

"Stupid party!" he remarked presently. "I don't know why I came. Do you believe in Fate?"

"If you wait long enough."

He searched her face for an explanation, but did not find it.

"How long are you staying?"

"A week. Mrs. Plank has been very kind. She insists that I need a rest. I think a week will be more than enough."

"A week. Mrs. Plank has been very kind. She insists that I need a rest. I think a week will be more than enough."

"And then whither?"

"Back to the studio. I have a few pupils tuning up for Burope in the fall."

"Do you think Mrs. Plank would keep me for a week? She seemed glad enough to see me tonight."

She shot him a look of quick alarm. A week! A week of playing up to Claudia Hoyt before him! And then out of the moonlight, the boxwood scent, the whipppoorwill's cry, came inspiration. Why not? Here was her great moment, her chance to even the score. That she could do it was evident from the progress of the last hour. A week of slow, insidious revenge. She would ease that hurt in her heart by punishing the man whose boyish philandering had left her afraid of love, afraid to risk the chances of another heartbreak.

She answered him with a smile that made him catch his breath. "I don't think you'll have much trouble enticing Mrs. Plank, if you really want to stay."

"Want to?" His voice rang. But Claudia had slipped indoors, and, bending over Mrs. Plank's plump shoulder, was begging to be excused.

Long after good-nights had ceased outside her door and yellow patches of light winked out upon the terrace Claudia sat high upon her stately Spanish bed and laid her plans. It would be easy enough to lead Bruce a mild, flirtatious chase to end in promissory good-bys at the end of the week. But that was not enough, not half enough, to pay for the scalding disappointment of 20 years ago.

She shut her eyes and let the memory of that summer sweep over her. She could even smell the sweet, heavy odor of honey-locust in the Farnum garden next door. She had been visiting her roommate from boarding school after graduation in a small Jersey town. Sally Hoyt had never known what a good time meant—as good times went in those days. Her summers before had been spent with an aunt in Vermont. She was motherless, her father's business travels took him around the globe. He was the most romantic figure in her vision until she met Bruce Farnum.

Bruce had outgrown the town. He was already assistant instructor in the science department of his university. He had played around with all the town girls in turn, including Ruby Latimer, Sally's hostess. Sally was a diversion, an interlude. Her views were quaint. How quaint Claudia knew only too well now. She was pretty, too—cloudy black hair fluffed over serene gray eyes in a creamy oval face. Her clothes were plain and simple in a frilly age. She was only 17, but she moved like flowing water. She was unique. Bruce, in the vernacular, rushed her. Sally responded like a little moonflower.

It never occurred to Ruby to warn Sally. Every one knew all about Bruce's high-handed methods. Besides, Ruby was too busy with a swain of her own. It was convenient to have Bruce right next door to make up a foursome for vacation outings.

There was a night, coming home from a corn roast, when the moon rode high. They were singing "I'm Wearing My Heart Away For You" with all the tremulous pathos that uncertain altos and vociferous tenors could give it. Bruce bent over in the sweet-smelling straw of the hayrack and threw an arm around her. Slowly he dropped his head on her shoulder so he could whisper in her ear.

"I have to. Father has written twice. I won't see him this year if I don't. He's sailing next week. Besides, he wants to make arrangements for my music before he leaves."

"I'll miss you terribly, Sally. You're the sweetest girl I've ever known. Won't you just give me one little kiss to remember when you're gone?"

Sally's "little kiss" had been modestly withheld for weeks. Now in the poignant sweetness of the moment she relented, and with tears in her eyes confessed the fresh young love of her life.

She had not slept that night at all. She had hardly heard the sleepy good-bys of the crowd. She walked on air. She lay so still beside Ruby that she ached with the tension. She loved Bruce. Bruce loved her. Nothing else mattered.

The next day he got her away from the crowd at the station. "I'm not going to lose you, Sally Hoyt," he whispered. "I'm coming up to Boston next week. I told the folks I had a little research at Tech to do. We'll have some jolly times together. Where will you be?"

Hardly daring to show the happiness in her eyes, Sally gave him the name of her hotel. "Father won't be with me in the daytime," she added shyly.

And that was the last she had seen or heard of Bruce Farnum!

* * *

Such a little to go on, but the agony of it! The hours of waiting, the start when the phone bell rang, the frantic questionings at the desk for mail or messages, the one timid letter that was never answered. Then a guarded letter to Ruby. A non-committal answer full of her own affairs, but no word of Bruce. It had kept up for months. They almost sent her away from the conservatory as hopeless until at Christmas Ruby wrote that Bruce had come home with a new girl, some kind of a cousin, and it looked like a sure thing this time. Sally locked up her heart and got to work.

At first the work and her almost cloistered life had been refuge. Later it became a habit. Her career had been enriched by it. She found herself clenching her hands at the memory of it all. No, nothing was too much punishment for Bruce Farnum. She owed him the worst she could do. It was dawn before she had decided just what the "worst" would be.

Mrs. Plank unwittingly gave the affair an impetus by taking to her bed with hay fever on Sunday, where between sneezes and sniffles she begged Miss Hoyt to stay on notwithstanding and to ask somebody to stay with her for companionship. The kindly old soul claimed Claudia as her musical find and was not going to let her slip through her fingers.

"Have you seen Mrs. Plank?" Claudia asked Bruce at the breakfast table on Monday morning. They had lingered after the others, who were hurrying away for train and motor.

"No. I'm disconsolate. I wanted so much to stay with you."

Claudia was amused at his anxiety. "Well, you can stay, if I want you to," she said daringly. And as he raised his brows inquiringly, "I can ask any one at all to stay and play with me."

"And you have picked me?"

"You are the only one left. I'd die in this museum without some company for a whole week."

"Little playmate!"

Claudia let him press her fingers for just a second.

They tried the swimming pool that morning. Unearthly stillness! It was a shame to shatter the cobalt mirror of the pool, so they lounged in the purple shadows of the pergola and talked.

A servant brought lunch, wheeled in a "covered wagon," as Bruce called it, across the lawn; spread a fairy table and discreetly disappeared. Again they talked. Claudia baited the conversation. Bruce nibbled in good form. They made progress.

She played for him after dinner in the twilight glow that flooded the music room with an unearthly rosiness. She played just the right things, the theme from the "Unfinished Symphony," Ravel's "Jeux d'Eau," the "Danse Negre" of Cyril Scott, leading deftly and whimsically from one to the other. But she was genuinely surprised when he crashed into the middle of Tschaikowsky's Chanson Triste" and crushed her in his arms.

It was all she could do to draw away from him. She was shaking, but her voice was cool, and her fingertips kept him at his distance.

"No jungle methods, please!" was all she said.

This was premature. He had taken her unawares. She needed time to gather herself together. It must not happen again—not just yet.

She held him off for two days, enchanted days they seemed, with a lilting obligato of wind, water and propinquity. She tried being serious, too, and together they hunted up books in the library, sighing or laughing when they found the pages of their favorites uncut. "Now here's a lovely lady," Claudia would say, laying her long white finger on a gorgeously bound volume of Tennyson's "Idylls." "Poor Elaine! So misguided! Women don't waste their lives on men like that these days!"

"Don't they?" Bruce would ask mockingly, his eyes filled with the loveliness of her perched above his head on the library ladder, her skirts tucked around her in almost classic folds. There was something classic about her, the coolness of her, the icy tinkle of her laugh.

"Let's go down to the beach. We'll never have another chance to watch the moon come up once," said Bruce.

* * *

Claudia wrapped a shimmering metal-cloth cape about her. How like her always to select the cold, glinting fabrics! Bruce did not know it was lined with fur and that beneath it Claudia was shivering with excitement. Could she trust herself? Could she go on with it all without giving herself away?

Bruce made it easy for her. He let her pick her way to a large, flat rock, its beginnings hidden in soft, lapping water, then sat quietly and undemonstratively beside her.

"We've had a nice time while it lasted, haven't we?"

Claudia's gleaming black head answered with a nod. She couldn't trust herself to speak.

"I've been wishing it could go on—always."

Claudia's heart stood still.

"I say, let's cut away before that crowd comes tomorrow."

"But where?" Claudia's lips scarcely formed the words.

"Anywhere you say, little playmate!"

"You mean?"

"I mean you pick the retreat and the justice of the peace, and we'll quietly move on."

He sounded so matter-of-fact that Claudia glanced quickly to see if he were teasing. Hen was more serious than she had ever seen, or hoped to see him. It had come, then, at last He wanted to marry her.

"But how do you know—"

"How do I know the world is round, that water seeks its level, that heart responds to heart? You're my girl, Claudia, and our paths must run together."

"You've been reading poetry."

"Don't play with me. I mean it. Let's get away while—"

"While the spell lasts?"

"Your spell will always last. The magic of your nearness is on me. I will never escape your bewitchment!"

"But—but it's all so sudden." She laughed hollowly at the trite phrase.

"We'll make it even more so. Listen! I'll have a car brought out for a spin. We can send it back later when it's all over. You can hide a small handbag under your cloak, can't you? Or else throw it out the window, as it is usually done?"

Claudia supposed she could.

"This will give Mrs. Plank something to talk about for the remainder of the season. We'll let her claim the credit for the match if she likes. Let's see, it's after 9. At 10 I'll be waiting." Then his voice dropped to a tense whisper. "Oh, my dearest dear, you won't disappoint me?"

But he did not touch her, not even as they skirted the geometric shade of the box maze onto the open terrace.

Once in her room, Claudia's lassitude left her. She sprang into energy. Her strong, sure hands shook as she folded and packed her clothes. She did not dare call a maid. She tried to sound casual over the house phone as she asked for a car from the garage to make the 9:50 for New York at the Junction. The note to Mrs. Plank was easy. An unlooked-for engagement. The maid would take it to her in the morning. The note to Bruce was harder, though she had rehearsed it many times.

She was tempted to write none at all. But then he would think she was fleeing from him—and he would be right. At last she managed a flippantly gay good-bye and signed it "Little Playmate." It was done, her score was nicely evened. But she had not eased the hurt in her heart. She had merely placed a vain regret there to keep it company.

* * *

A motor purred below on the drive. She slipped down the stairs like a shadow. She was just about to drop Bruce's note in the letter-box in the hall when something dark and soft enveloped her. She tried to scream, but a hand muffled it. She felt herself lifted in strong arms, carried down steps and set forcibly but gently in the seat of the waiting car. The machine was well in the highroad before she fought her way to fresh air.

Bruce sat beside her, eyes focused on the road.

"Well?" She was angry, she was glad, she was relieved.

"When you're ready to discuss it, say so. Just let me say that I took this method because I was afraid you would slip away from me. You didn't sound any too convincing down there on the beach."

"What are you going to do?"

"That's what I'm asking you?"

"I—I don't see what I can do at forty miles an hour."

"That's easy." He brought the car to a sudden stop. "Well, you're still within walking distance of the house."

At which Claudia did the queerest thing in the world—for her—she burst into tears. An arm stole softly about her, she was gathered into a comforting embrace. The massive curly head lowered itself gently to her shoulder so he could whisper in her ear. That was surely new-mown hay that she sniffed with her tears?

"Oh, Sally don't go home. Don't go home tonight! You do love me, Sally? Say you do."

"But how—when did you know?"

"When you played that silly old tune the first night. I'll admit I might not have recognized you without that, but it all came back to me then. Sally, there have been lots of women in my life, but not one girl as real as the little playmate I loved and lost 19 years——"

"Twenty."

"Twenty years ago. I have often called myself all kinds of a fool to let her slip by me that way. You know how a boy is. New face, new fancy; but sometimes there is one face he never forgets."

"But, Bruce, tell me what really happened."

"A new girl. I've forgotten who it was. But she kept me guessing, and when I finally came to I was ashamed to look you up."

"You remembered, Bruce. That is all that mattered."

"And you don't want to go back to the house?"

"No. Nor back 20 years to the beginning of it all. We're both the better for the interlude, and all tomorrow awaits us."

A HOME OF YOUR OWN

By J. T.

A home of your own—What does this phrase mean to the average young man of today compared with say fifty years ago?

In the good old days when a young man reached man's estate his first thought was to find a wife. After he had found the girl, if we are to believe the stories we read, the girl and himself spent most of their waking hours planning for the future.

Life to them at that stage was a paradise completed only when they attained the object of their desires—a cottage with a garden full of flowers—a place they could call home—where they would be untroubled by the cares of the world.

In those days, with few facilities for travelling, the average man was practically doomed to die in the same place he was born—the world was not placed at his door step—he was not deluged with the flamboyant literature scattered far and wide by the transportation companies of today.

In most cases he achieved the desire of his heart; his aim was modest and consequently easy of attainment.

But what of the young man of today? Does he differ from his grandfather in his conception of the ideal home?

Judging from the number of unmarried men aged twenty-five years and upwards that a person meets on the streets of Peterborough, one is forced to the conclusion that the average man is different.

Why is he different? The chief reasons are—that due to modern conditions the standard of living has been increased—the sacredness of the home has to a great extent been dissipated—women's intrusion into the business world has brought about a state of affairs wherein a woman is no longer compelled to regard marriage as her sole occupation.

Conditions today render it essential that the young man who aims to have a good time must be prepared to pay the piper. The speed of the jazz age in which we live has so corrupted the ideals of the youth of the country that the thought of settling down to lives of contentment hardly ever seem to enter the mind. Automobiles, parties, and all that go with the life have a degrading and demoralizing influence, the result of which is rapidly becoming evident, when we view some of the specimens that are to be the men and women of tomorrow.

Where once the home was regarded as a sacred institution, shedding its benign influence over the surface of the earth—today to the casual onlooker it would appear as if a radical change had taken place.

The head of the home finds his time occupied with meetings of various kinds; clubs, societies, community organization —all good things in their way no doubt, but still the fact remains that while he is attending them he cannot be at home.

The wife, not to be outdone by her husband, seeks pleasure in bridge parties, pink teas and the hundred and one other activities that fashion has decreed she must attend.

With the foundation rent asunder in this manner, with no example of true happiness before them to spur them on to greater attainments—is it any wonder that we find the younger generation behaving as they do?

Where once a woman's greatest business was getting married and having a home of her own, today we find them in practically every sphere of business.

Nobody grudges them the success they have attained, but the very fact that they have entered the business world and in most cases have made good has brought about a revolutionary change in modern married life.

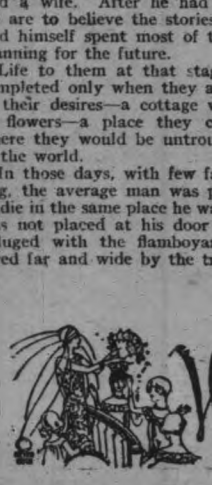
In far too many cases the young man discovers that the girl he is attracted towards is making as much, if not more, money than himself. As a consequence he keeps putting off the idea of a home of his own until he considers he has enough money saved, or is making a salary that will measure up to the expectations of the girl.

He is confronted with a problem that his grandfather never faced.

It is only too true that most of the girls of today want to start in where their parents left off. Instead of the cottage of former years with its humble beginning, their thoughts run to chesterfields, dining-room suites, piano lamps and the sundry other trimmings that go towards making a pretty house, but which by no means ensure the making of a happy home. But if the girls are selfish the same can be said of a great many men. The only reason some of them get married is to get away from boarding houses. They want some place where they can do what they like, spill their tobacco ashes all over the place, get what they want to eat, in fact, solid comfort would seem to be their standard.

When they both come to a realization that a home is not merely a place to entertain friends but something that is a real part of themselves, a place that is what they make it through their own efforts, then and then only will the true meaning of the old song thrust itself upon them.

Be it ever so humble,
There's no place like home.



When Wedding Bells Ring

By Cavalier

Perhaps there is no subject on which more gratuitous advice is unreservedly proferred than that of choosing a life partner. Reams and reams of counsel are poured out from time to time in the press containing lists of characteristics and virtues that the mentors of youth deem indespensable in those about to marry. Only last week Arnold Bennett, in the Examiner gave sage counsel to the young man as to the qualities for which one should look in the lady whose cooking he purposes to enjoy for the rest of his natural life. The counsel was good and very much to the point.

But the trouble is that most of this excellent advice remains unheeded. The rising generation listens attentively, acknowledges the wisdom of the comments—and then goes on in its own old way, selecting a mate according to the rules that have prevailed from time immorial. Least of all is attention given to that immortal injunction of Punch to those about to marry—"Don't."

Perhaps one of the reasons for the failure of the aspiring benedicts to follow out the paths marked for them is a scepticism as to the qualifications of their advisers—many of whom can make no pretence to speak from experience. Despite Rudyard Kipling's latest bon-mot, "One does not need to be a hen in order to judge of the merits of an omelette" mankind is more apt to pay attention to the words of him who has already gone over the ground along which he undertakes to lead his fellows.

This qualification is lacking in many advisers. It is often the maiden lady who is profuse in advice to parents in regard to the proper methods of rearing of children, and it is usually the old bachelor who knows exactly how to train children in such a way that they will become shining lights in the community, free from all the errors of omission and commission that invariably are exhibited by the children of all classes.

G. K. Chesterton, who has never been married and has probably never been in love, recently spoke at considerable length on the subject of choosing a wife. The average young man naturally asks, "What does he know about it?" It is a notorious fact that eminent literary men more often than not make a bad break insofar as the selection of a wife is concerned. It is very probable that when settling this little detail the wise man is very much like his lesser neighbours—only more so.

Let philosophers philosophize, and wise men soliloquize as they will, the business of love-making goes on in accordance with time-honored standards and with an utter disregard to the dictates of practical commonsense. The demure little miss will still secretly cherish a passion for the villain, even if he be only a movie villain and quite a staid respectable fellow in his everyday clothes. The dark-eyed mysterious stranger will still captivate the heart of the girl in the store or the office even though she may outgrow this infatuation, and eventually marry the prosaic clerk or mechanic, who will be to her a better husband and will be infinitely more able to buy her the necessaries of life.

Thousands of years ago, in the earliest and ruder ages, men and women were listening interestedly to tales of love and courtship. Today the best sellers are those which deal with the age-old theme, which has inspired the highest flights of poetry and art. The church wedding still attracts a larger crowd than does the morning service of worship—a fact that eloquently attests the abiding interest of at least one-half of the human race in the ceremony of uniting man and woman in the most sacred of contracts.

The monogamous marriage is one of the things that illustrate the fact of the survival of the fittest. Sociologists, appalled at the ever-increasing divorce statistics of the white nations of the earth, especially the United States, have come forward with various solution of the problem, all of them involving a radical departure from present day standards of morality. Trial marriages, marriages of probation, two-year contracts and similar suggestions are mooted as panaceas for the ills of the nations and as leading the way out of conditions that cause great concern to those who look to the future of the race. What is overlooked by these wiseacres who spin armchair theories is that their so-called remedies are merely a resurrection of old, outworn standards that were weighed in the balance in lower stages of civilization and were found wanting. Mankind has tried all these other methods and has discarded them as impeding the progress of the nations. If there is one thing upon which the present-day observer can dogmatize it is that on the faithful adherence to contract between man and wife depends the fabric of civilization.

Love Letters That Made History

By Joseph Kaye.

MARY STUART AND BOTHWELL.

The hapless Mary, Queen of Scots—martyred in one country; reviled in another—was a beautiful young woman who passed gloriously happy years in her youth and tasted the bitterest dregs in the cup of life while still in her years of beauty. She was the daughter of King James V. of Scotland and lived till fifteen in the French court of the days of Cathe rine de Medici. Whether it was the influence of a most dissipated environment or the intrigues that were always spun around her in Scotland, Mary's adventures when she became queen of Scotland became a chapter of crime She married Lord Darnley, a weakling. Darnley disgusted this beautiful queen and she lost her heart to the Earl of Bothwell, a stalwart soldier and an aggressive character. Darnley was found murdered and Bothwell was generally accused of the crime; but notwithstanding this Mary married him three months after Darnley was buried. This reckless action furnished ample material to her enemies and hastened her to the headsman's block on which she ended her days.

The letter below is a remarkable document. It reveals the woman and lays bare her heart so torn with cruel emotions.

"My Lord . . . I send unto you one sculpture of hard stone covered with black, engraved with tears and bones. The stone I compare to my heart, that as it is covered in one sure sculpture of harbor of your commandments, and above all, of your name and memory that are herein enclosed as is my heart in this ring, never to come forth while death grant unto you one trophy of victory as the ring is filled, in sign you have made one full conquest of me, my heart, and in that my bones are left unto you in remembrance of your victory and my acceptable love and willingness, for to be better bestowed than I merit. The annealing that is about is in black, which signifies the steadfastness of her that sends the same. The tears are without number, so are the fears to displease you, the tears for your absence, the disdain that I cannot be in outward effect yours, as I am without faintness of heart or spirit, and of good reason, though my merits were much greater than that of most profit that ever was, and such as I desire to be, and shall take pains in conditions to imitate, for to be bestowed worthily under your governance. My only wealth receive, therefore, in as good part the same as I have received of your marriage in extreme joy, that which shall part forth of my bosom till that marriage of our bodies can be made public, as a sign of all that I either hope or desire of bliss in this world."

COMMUNITY SPIRIT

The man who worked for the street railway company hailed a taxi every day and rode to the office.

His neighbor, who was employed by a large taxicab company, rode to work on a street car.

The foreman of a shoe factory walked to work every day. But he wore shoes made in another city.

They met at a Booster Lunch where each gave a five-minute talk on Loyalty.

THEN AND NOW

When Grandma was a youthful miss
She didn't paint her face:
She never smoked a cigarette:
She always knew her place.

She didn't wear her dresses
Up well beyond the knees:
She didn't shock the world at large:
She didn't chase the he's.

She didn't go on auto rides
'Way back in 'eighty-seven:
She didn't do a lot of things
To keep her out of heaven.

She didn't stay out late at night:
She didn't roll her socks:
She didn't dance the Charleston:
She didn't bob her locks.

She didn't do these little things,
She didn't, we'll allow:
But, if she didn't do them then,
Why does she do them now?

—R. C. O'Brien.

A STUDY IN EUGENICS.

She was a cipher.

And as for him, put a one in front of him and you'd have a million.

To pick out some place to go for a dance in the evening was the limit of their combined cerebral capacity.

The ultimate in conversation out of him was, "Floor's good, isn't it?"

While her own high-water mark in speech was, "So's your old man!"

And so they were married. And everybody said, "If they ever have a baby, how dumb it will be!"

They had the baby, all right. And because none of the combined intelligence of the entire ancestry had been taken out for either of the parents, the baby was born with the mental capacity of Sir Isaac Newton.

But because there was nothing in the home to read but tabloid newspapers, the baby grew up a dumbbell too.

Conclusion

Heredity is important, but environment plays a certain part also.

Radio Simile—She flung his love away carelessly, like the Radio Section of an evening newspaper.

Brides Of Yester-Day

Brides Of Yester-Year

(By Jeannette.)

"You may carve it on his tombstone, you may write it on his card, that a young man married is a young man married."

So sang the pessimistic rhymester, himself probably the victim of a shrewish wife, who put into poetical works his ideas of the married state. He didn't say anything about the lady in the case. But the girl who enters into the holy state of matrimony, while she may not take time at the moment to consider a future row of anniversaries, has to face the prospect of almost yearly reminders of the day on which she promised to "love and honor," and, sometimes, if she belonged to an old-fashioned church, to "obey."

Whoever invented the custom of keeping wedding anniversaries in a certain fashion must have been an enterprising person employed by a general store. Judging from the utilitarian aspect of most of these occasions, as noted in this list, he was engaged in the selling of staples. It is only when one gets up past the quarter century, and many couples, in these days of rapid divorces and rapid demises, don't get anywhere near that mark, that one is supposed to invest in gifts of a jewel-like nature.

"Presents at once? That's good. He is sure to succeed," said Goethe, so the habit of giving presents at the onset of married life must have behind it a good-luck significance. Even the bride, then, who is burdened with a quantity of ugly pictures and a number of homely bits of china (for not all wedding gifts are pretty, by any means), should consider the good fortune attached to a gift, and receive them with open arms.

When she has been married a year, she has a "cotton" anniversary. "A woman's mind is affected by the meanest gifts," said Livy, and so if you give her a dish-wiper or a plain little handkerchief, she should be happy. When another year rolls around, it is time to remember her with "paper." A writer named Amos Bronson Alcott puts it thus: "Of gifts, there seems nothing more becoming to offer a friend than a beautiful book," but for the moderns, there are such things as superfine stationery and bridge scores.

"Giving requires good sense," said Ovid, so a "leather" anniversary might well be considered wisely. Anything from a smart little purse to an elaborately fitted travelling bag or trunk would be acceptable, remembering, as "Hamlet" mused: "Rich gifts wax poor when givers prove unkind."

By the time they have arrived at the "wooden" anniversary, and five years have rolled over their heads, the lady may be wielding the rolling-pin frequently, in imitation of Mrs. Jiggs, but "the will, and not the gift, makes the giver," so they will probably appreciate anything from a bread board to a new buffet for the dining-room.

"For to give is the business of the rich," may be true, but it does not exclude the giving of things by those not so blessed by Fortune. "Those gifts are ever the most acceptable which the giver makes precious," and the "woollen" anniversary, for the bride of seven Junes, may be remembered in plenty of small ways. Hose and sport sweaters, bathing suits and rugs, all lend themselves to this category.

When a decade of years has rolled by, arrives the "tin" anniversary, and here is much choice for the giver, who need not be deterred by the thought that "Whoever makes great presents, expects great presents in return." Give her some new kitchenware, and, be she rich or poor, she will receive it gladly.

The ever-welcome "linen" year comes to the twelve-year bride, and she may be remembered with napery, or needlework, or art lingerie, or guest towels. Here is a chance for the giver to bestow some of herself in the working of fine pieces, for "the gift, to be true, must be the flowing of the giver unto me, correspondent to my flowing unto him," as Emerson puts it, in one of his essays.

Now come the fragile years, the crystal and china remembrances, at the fifteenth and the twenteth anniversaries of the tying of the wedding knot. Here are brittle gifts, the imported Bohemian and Venetian novelties, goblets and serving plates and cut-glass flower-holders, with china in all the beloved patterns, and a chance to renew those pieces which have been broken during the passing of the fifth of a century.

And, after all the durable gifts of a staple character, and the breakable things in crystal and china, arrives the first metallic anniversary, the silver jubilee of a quarter of a century. "He gives twice who gives quickly," said the Maxims of Syrus, so the invitation to a silver wedding anniversary should be followed shortly by a trip to the jeweller's, to purchase anything from a pair of pepper and salt shakers to an ornate piece of silver in a platter or candelabra of pretentious design.

"While you look at what is given, look also at the giver," warned Seneca in bygone ages, and the gifts of pearl that come with the celebration of the thirtieth anniversary should be accompanied by pleasant thoughts of these givers of the fruit of the restlessness of an oyster, covering with lovely sheen the tiny grain of dust lodged between its shells. "Pearls bring tears," said an old moralist, but pearls are supposed to bring also charm to their wearer. One who is superstitious may pass by this anniversary and proceed with quick steps to the next, the fortieth, symbolized by the ruby, when one remembers again the words of Shakespeare, in "Two Gentlemen of Verona": "Win her with gifts, if she respect not words: dumb jewels often in their silent kind, more than quick words do move a woman's mind."

The golden wedding, as the scribe puts it, is "A rare event, and a royal occasion, to be met with due recognition in gifts. The richness and purity of gold is sure to make your gift impressive, regardless of the size or cost of the piece." But, again must be remembered the prime background of all gifts, contained in Lowell's immortal "Vision of Sir Launfal": "Not what we give, but what we share,—for the gift without the giver is bare."

And, then, vouchsafed to few, very few, the "diamond" wedding, the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the wedding day. For those who have lived long enough to reach this stage in life, when three quarters of a century have been passed together, nothing less precious than a diamond is applicable. By that time, the receiver may have forgotten what John Boyle O'Reilly said, in his "Rules of the Road": "Take gifts with a sigh most men give to be paid."

Forgotten too, is the cynical bit in "As You Like It": "Let us sit and mock the good housewife Fortune from her wheel, that her gifts may henceforth be bestowed equally.—I would that we could do so, for her benefits are mightily misplaced, and the bountiful blind woman doth most mistake in her gifts to women."

To come to this portion of Life's long journey, and to be able to say with Wordsworth, in "The Sparrow's Nest," would be worth more to the bride than gifts of diamonds "She gave me eyes, she gave me ears: And humble cares, and delicate fears: A heart, the fountain of sweet tears: And love, and thought, and joy."

NOW YOU TELL ONE

There are some girls who have absolutely no vanity. They would do anything rather than have a man think them attractive: every day they hide their faces beneath layers of dead-white powder, disguise their eyes with a sticky black liquid and distort their lips with thick red paste.

They know that woman's greatest charm for man lies in her mysterious femininity: with hair clipped short and skirts shorter, they feel fully fortified against the enemy sex.

There are some girls who have absolutely no vanity.—M. P. C.

LIVING ON LOVE Is Not All It's Cracked Up To Be

BY BENEDICT.

Living on love is easy so long as father has lots of money and a soft heart, but for a young couple with a parsimonious set of parents a life that depends upon love for sustenance is not all it is cracked up to be. Or even all that it may appear in the halcyon days of courtship.

The oldest histories that we have in Peterborough Public Library fail to record one single case where a couple existed on love. And even the oft-repeated opinion that two can live as cheaply as one fails to carry conviction to the wide-awake young folk of today. They hear mother complain too often of the high cost of foodstuffs, and father kick about the coal consumption. and they have heard, too, that though love may make living easier, when poverty comes in the front door, love flies out by the back door.

Nowadays the sameattention is not paid to the future prospects of making ends meet that was given material matters in the sweethearting days of some years ago. Couples now marry and settle down and then start to settle up, and sometimes haven't caught up with the wedding expenses until many months after the honeymoon trip is over. They may have done that, too, in days gone by, but they kept it out of the newspapers.

Budgets are great things in helping the young couple to make the bills balance with the income. One family has three budgets—started at different times. The last one has so far only one entry in it "Budget book 75c. The young couple's intentions were good, anyhow! The unfortunate part of budgeteering is that no matter how much provision is made for "Miscellaneous" or "Unforseen" there is never enough to cover the eventualities, and the regular customers are knocked out of gear. Coal, wood, groceries, fruit, insurance, rent, taxes, gas, electricity, telephone, clothes—all these are budgeted and provided for, and provision may even be made for amusement and doctor. Then, presto, old man jinx brings along an extra month of winter and the budget is disrupted by the payment of an extra $16 for coal: or hubby decides to join the Masonic Lodge, or Kiwanis, or the Ku Klux Klan, or the Knights of Columbus, and away flies twenty to a hundred dollars for initiation fees and regalia. Or in the middle of summer, wifey sees a splendid bargain in winter coats—and the butcher and baker and milkman, who are, sure enough, in the budget, wonder why they are not paid.

Something is always happening. Sybil approached Adolf the other day, (they are newly-weds) and asked for some money to buy a new evening dress. "Where," demanded Adolf, "is the one you had?" "A moth ate it."

One young wife declared the budget system is immoral, because the only time she ever cheated was when she was trying to make the two sides of the book balance. A budget does not make money, but there seems to be no doubt that it makes money go farther. If you have been trying to live on love, and find your fitful supply of lucre is not sufficient, make hubby adopt a system. He may need an anaesthetic during the operation, and in this respect it is recalled that the ancient Egyptian surgeons had a way of hitting the patient on the head in just the proper place and then operating while he was unconscious from the blow.

If you do this you won't have to live on love any longer.

Two may live on love until the bills start coming in.

RED ROSE TEA
"is good tea"
You've been intending to try Red Rose sometime. Why not now?

Animals never go to school as children do, ut they learn just the same.

Now how do they do it?

Moving pictures are the secret of animal ducation. They learn how to earn their daily read, by watching how it is done.

The day will come when every school will be movie house, and most things will be learned om pictures, just as the wild folks have been arning for years.

Let's see how this would work out.

A picture of a lagoon is on the screen: there goes a dragon fly: see how he darts swiftly to one side and seizes a mosquito. Aha! I know that lesson.

And here is a little vale in the woods: how cool it looks, with all those ferns. A little girl comes gathering wild flowers, and she gently touches the delicate ferns: then she examines one, and we can see that she is finding little spots or dots in rows on the undersides of the fronds. She exclaims, "Why, these ferns already have their fruit." Well, we know that lesson, and we shall look for the fern fruit the next time we go to the woods.

But here is a dim-looking part of the nature reel: now I wonder what this can be, for it is just like twilight, and there is nothing in the picture. Wait! I saw something move. Yes, sure enough it is a brownish bat: it is probably the mother, for see! she is going out to seek food in the air, and my word! if the young ones are not clinging to her! She will have to catch many insects indeed for that hungry crew. Well, I know that lesson.

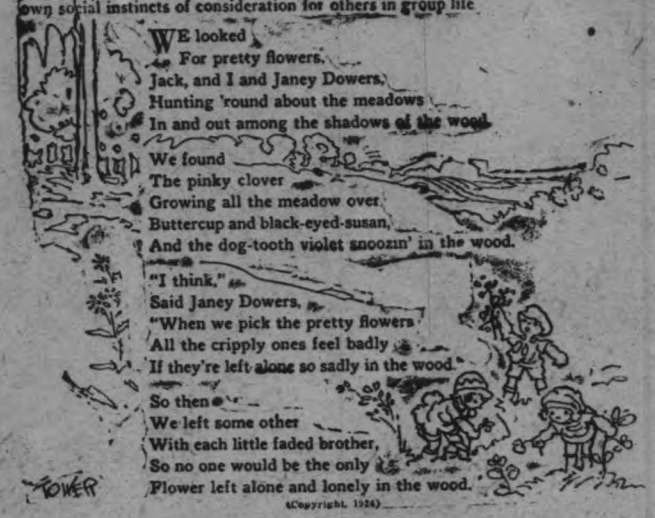
What a mass of jelly-like wigglers those things are: I wonder what they are. Yes, it is water all right, and I often wonder how these movies of the bottom of ponds are taken. Anyway, I should worry about that, eh? It almost makes me wiggle in my seat to see those tadpoles wiggling out of that jelly-like mass where they were born and protected. Well! Ain't nature the crafty old girl? That pond is full of polliwogs, newly hatched.

Movie lessons are not work, they are entertainment: I like 'em.

"Picking Flowers"

By SHIRLEY RODMAN WILLIAMS

CHILDREN are gregarious by nature. They demand playmates and enjoy group sociability. It is beyond the average child's understanding that anyone should ever prefer to be alone. To be with others of its kind is a natural animal instinct and a healthful one—for it is not good to be too much alone. The impulse to leave no blossom alone on a plant when picking flowers is common to sensitive children. It is a sweet, generous little impulse which arises from their own social instincts of consideration for others in group life.



WE looked
For pretty flowers,
Jack, and I and Janey Dowers,
Hunting 'round about the meadows
In and out among the shadows of the wood.

We found
The pinky clover
Growing all the meadow over,
Buttercup and black-eyed-susan,
And the dog-tooth violet snoozin' in the wood.

"I think,"
Said Janey Dowers,
"When we pick the pretty flowers
All the cripply ones feel badly
If they're left alone so sadly in the wood."

So then
We left some other
With each little faded brother,
So no one would be the only
Flower left alone and lonely in the wood.

Why Are We Afraid of Snakes

Fear of snakes is an inheritance handed down to mankind from our remote tree-dwelling forebears, according to Dr. A. K. Fisher, of the United States Biological Survey:

"Perhaps it never occurred to you to reflect that practically the only enemies a monkey has to fear are snakes. Thanks to its tree-climbing agility and alertness, the animal is safe enough from all other foes. But some snakes are themselves tree-climbers, and it is no trick at all for a boat to extend itself along a branch and lie motionless and inconspicuous while slyly waiting for an unsuspecting monkey to come within reach of its jaws.

"Nor is it only the tree-climbing snakes that are to be dreaded," Dr. Fisher continued. "Monkeys, though they spend most of their time in trees, often descend to the ground, and there, in the jungle of low-growing forest vegetation, they are liable to encounter the sinuous, gliding death.

"Glimpse of a snake by one monkey, when its cry of alarm gives notice to its companions, will start a whole troop to flight, with terrified chattering. The effect is one of utter panic.

"The same sort of panic will seize a picknicking party of people if even the most harmless serpent is espied. Doubtless you have seen that happen. The larger the reptile, the more terrifying. To the monkey, a non-venomous snake may be none the less dangerous on that account. A boa has no venom, but that makes no difference to Mr. Monk when he finds himself swallowed whole.

"The average human being regards a snake not only with fear, but with horror, such as is inspired by no other living creature. It is an emotion bequeathed to us from a remote simian ancestry."

SO THIS IS MARRIAGE!

The sporting young gentleman had just contrived a proposal to the lady of his heart.

"Of course," replied the girl, "it must be definitely understood that I could not marry a man who plays cards, drinks, smokes, stays out late or goes to clubs. All the same," she added graciously, "I should like him to enjoy himself."

"Oh, yes," groaned the miserable male, "where . . .?"

SHE GETS HIM

"Spring has come upon us like a sweet and gentle maiden. The little winds are her lightly blowing scarfs. They touch our cheeks and their touch is warm and soft."

"Yeh?"

"The bluebird sits on the blossoming bough and trills and trills and trills. It is the voice of spring. It thrills and thrills and thrills. Oh, her words are blown along on the winds, the winds."

"Huh-huh."

"And the sky is a clear-blue crystal. It is some great bell hanging high above us and all the gladsome notes of spring beat against its sides. What music!"

"Gosh!"

"Somehow you understand me, Dagmar: you really do get the spirit of it all, don't you?"

FELICITY

"What did he say?"

"He said the sweetest words that any woman can hear."

"Oh! Did he propose?"

"Heavens, no! He said, 'My dear, you're a ——— woman!'"

Irresistible

When he entered my office he didn't offer to give me two dollars in payment of my time if I felt he had wasted it.

"I am a book agent," he announced, quietly and without hesitation. "It is quite likely that you won't be the least bit interested in what I am trying to sell you."

"Sit down," I invited. "I'll give you just two minutes."

"I am selling the 'Farewell Addresses of Our Vice-Presidents' in six bound volumes. I haven't read them myself, but most people find them deadly boresome. However . . ."

"Yes?" I was growing interested.

"They help to fill up the book-case. Since you'll rarely read them, you'll never have to search the house for them, or accuse your wife of mislaying them while cleaning. And besides . . ."

"Go on, go on," I urged.

"They're fine to threaten the children with. Imagine—six pages of compulsory reading in 'Farewell Addresses of Our Vice-Presidents!' It'll make an angel out of any child."

"But what do I get, free, if I order them?"

"Nothing. No set of short stories—no volumes on 'How to Be a Success' by people you never heard of—no combination offers of any kind."

"And the terms?"

"Cash—forty dollars. Not thirty-nine dollars and ninety-five cents. No time payments of any kind. You see, we feel—but my two minutes are up. Would you care to look over an order blank?"

Dazed, I nodded. He produced the blank. It was not a closely printed, legal-looking document. It read simply "I hereby order a set of 'Farewell Addresses of Our Vice-Presidents' for $40."

"I don't carry a fountain pen," he said, "but you probably have one if you care to order the books."

Then, as I hesitated, he added, slightly raising his voice

"And you will note that the space in which we ask you to attach your signature has no dotted line. You are not a moron. You can sign your name without the guidance of . . ."

But he got no further. My signature was already on the blank.

M'Losh did not hesitate a second with his dry 'riposte.' "Gar' the ba' awa' an' a' fa' the ha' at a'," he observed characteristically, to the convulsed amusement of every one. Angus is always saying things like that. Few people know what they mean, however.—Passing Show, from "At the Blue Moon Again," by Wyndham Lewis.

"Oh, John!" she cried.

"And then," concluded the very wise young man, "after we've had all the fun out of it, we can lease a small apartment and put the money into a nice new car."

"You are an angel," breathed the blushing bride.

I am afraid the younger generation has become convinced that virtue is its only reward.

A TIP FOR WILLIAM

William Shakespeare had just put the finishing touches on "Hamlet" and had gone to the seashore for a few days before starting on the first draft of "Macbeth."

"Mr. Shakespeare," asked a girl admirer who had recognized him from his picture in a tabloid, "did you ever think of trying your luck with scenarios?"

Daily Short Story

THE RICH NEW YORKER

By ROSE MEREDITH.

Luella Frayne was coming home after her long-talked-about winter in New York City. She had been staying with her mother's cousin, Mrs. Peterby, a rich and fashionable women, who had offered to add the finishing touch to Luella's musical education by sending her to a famous pianist for lessons. And although Luella did not expect to do more than teach piano to the young people of her home town, the fact that she was a pupil of the great Bimskitoff brought her many requests from anxious mothers to register Jane or Jimmy among her prospective pupils.

"Goodness, I will be a rich woman!" sighed Luella as she relaxed in delicious idleness in the chair of the Pullman car. She glanced down at her smart blue serge frock that Cousin Almira had supplied, as well as the short marten jacket and the small hat which had a crown of gold cloth. Mrs. Peterby had given her many other pretty things and promised to send her a check to help with her trousseau, for Luella was going to be married—some day. She was engaged to David Lister, an energetic home-town boy who had built a drug store on the site of the old court house and equipped it in the most modern manner. Dave was a licensed pharmacist, and one of the girls, Cissy Wing, had written enthusiastically, "Dave has the most up-to-the-minute drug store in the country—he is earning heaps of money—you will never spend all the money you can make by teaching piano—everybody in Roseboro will join your class! Poor Maria Barber is heart-broken, Lu! Says her music class has dwindled to two, so far, and neither pupil pays cash—poor old soul, she is a good teacher, too—remember she trained you so that your Bumskeeter, or whatever his name is, said you had been well drilled. Well, we shall all be glad to see you again, and I suppose you are very fashionable now—and have you seen that rich New Yorker again? I told Dave—he looked terribly jealous. Don't mind if we copy all your clothes, do you?"

Luella re-read the letter, smiling mischievously at the reference to David's jealousy. She had a plan that would open the eyes of Roseboro, and Dave could take it or not as a declaration of independence. She had learned a lot of things in New York, among them the delightful fact that she was a very pretty girl. She had met some amusing girls who taught her to smoke, and she had learned golf and to wear knickers on occasions without feeling self-conscious. As for David Lister, when she tired of teaching, perhaps they would get married, but there was that nice Mathieson boy in New York who was a millionaire, and who had whispered that life without her would be something awful, and had frowned at her engagement ring as if he would like to tear it off and put another in its place.

Just then the train reached the junction, and she saw her father's rusty little car, for Doctor Frayne was quite poor, though he had a large practice among the poor. But was a contented man, and his little family was a happy one.

It was an hour after supper in Roseboro, and as the news had gone around that Luella was home, all the young people gathered about Dave Lister's store. Dave had been busy and could only talk to Luella over the telephone, but he was very smiling and happy for she was coming down to the store. He was alone when she arrived. For some reason she had taken a cross cut and come in the side door, and David was thankful—as soon as he saw her, his face went white and wrathful.

Luella Frayne, Luella, clad in white silk blouse and trim gray tweed knickerbockers, her lovely hair bobbed and on her feet sport hose and impudent little tan oxfords.

She was smoking a cigarette! Hands in her pockets! She looked expectantly at David.

"Well, young fellow, what can I do for you?" snapped out Dave.

Luella picked up a soda mug and thumped the counter angrily. "Don't speak to me that way, Dave Lister! You know who I am—p-perfectly w-well."

"You are the girl who is going to marry the rich New Yorker, I believe," said Dave coldly. "I was engaged to Doctor Frayne's daughter, but she has thrown aside all pretensions to femininity, and smokes like—like a chimney!

"You are not engaged to her now, then?" Luella's voice was small and weak. "Didn't you hear that the rich New Yorker was engaged to another girl—and—that I only put these on to have a little fun—and I shall give them to Bobby—and I just hate cigarettes, they make me sick!"

"But, those?"

Luella looked down at the gray tweeds regretfully. "I suppose you wouldn't want your wife to wear these, Dave?"

"The girl I asked to marry me didn't look like that, Luella, but you do look as cute as the dickens—but, somehow, I just can't like them—that pink dress you used to wear, Lu, now that!"

"I'm going home, David, by the short cut and I'll stop and tell Maria Barber that I've decided not to teach music because I'm getting married, and I'll tell father that Cousin Amelia is sending him a new closed car, and I'll put on the pink dress, and then——"

"And then?" he smiled.

"You may kiss me!" And then she vanished, and with her went that foolish rumor, The Rich New Yorker.

QUESTIONNAIRE

In parts of America a man has to answer one hundred questions before he gets married. He does here, too, but they are all alike "Are you sure you love me?"

Lyrics Of Life

(By Douglas Malloch.)

THINGS OF MINE

If words of mine can make the sad
Forget the sorrow that they had,
  If words of mine can bring the lonely
  Content, if but a moment only,
If words of mine can gently touch
A heart that needs a word so much,
  If words of mine can lift the weary,
  Why leave the world so dark and dreary?

If deeds of mine can help the poor
Some sudden poverty endure,
  If deeds of mine the load can lighten,
  The morning bring, the highway brighten,
If deeds of mine can daily prove
Man's brotherhood, and rocks remove,
  If deeds of mine can do God's will,
  Then why am I so selfish still?

If days of mine are spent for gain
At last what treasure shall remain?
  If days of mine are only given
  To thoughts of earth and not of heaven,
If days of mine are merely spent
  On fortune and on fame intent,
  When I shall stand before God's shrine
  What shall I show but things of mine?

UNCLE WIGGILY

Today's Bedtime Story

By Howard R. Garis

UNCLE WIGGILY'S LEMONADE.

(Copyright, 1926, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

(By Howard R. Garis.)

"Look out! Look out, everybody!" shouted Uncle Wiggily as he ran through his hollow stump bungalow one day, toward the back door.

"Whatever is the matter?" squealed Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy to Mrs. Longears.

"It must be that the Wolf or the Skillery Scallery Alligator has come in and is chasing my husband," sighed the rabbit lady. "Oh, dear!"

"Never cross a bridge until you see it coming toward you," spoke Nurse Jane, which means never to look for trouble until you are sure it is around the corner. So the muskrat lady looked out in the kitchen, and what she saw made her laugh.

"Oh, tell me what has happened!" begged Mrs. Longears.

"Nothing, only that Uncle Wiggily has made a big pitcher of lemonade and has taken it out in the shade where the animal boys and girls are playing," was the answer.

"Why did he cry 'look out!' I wonder?" said Mrs. Longears.

"I guess he didn't want anybody to bump into him and make him spill the lemonade," answered Nurse Jane, and that was it.

The rabbit gentleman carried the pitcher of sweet sour cold stuff out under the trees, near the ocean he had made by putting salt in the duck pond, and then Uncle Wiggily sang

"Lemonade in the shade. Come one, come all! Don't be afraid! Lemonade, in the shade I have just made. There's nothing to pay, so walk this way and stop your play!"

Then, indeed, the animal boys and girls stopped their play and ran to drink cool lemonade in the shade. Those who were in swimming paddled out and soon were sipping the sweet sour drink from birch bark cups which Uncle Wiggily filled for them. Others who were playing on the sand or beneath the trees also hurried to drink lemonade.

Uncle Wiggily saw the Lady Mouse Teacher, from the Hollow Stump School, walking across the fields, and he called to her

"Oh, Miss Mouse! You haven't been teaching school today, have you? I thought school was out and this was vacation. Come and have some of my lemonade. You look tired and hot. Where have you been?"

"Over to my school to get something I forgot when I closed it on the last day," squeaked Miss Mouse. "I shall be glad to have a drink of your lemonade," she went on.

Uncle Wiggily saw that the teacher had a small pitcher of something red, which she—was carefully carrying, and he said

"Oh, perhaps that is pink lemonade you have there—pink lemonade such as you get at a circus. Perhaps you don' care for my plain pale yellow lemonade."

The Lady Mouse laughed in jolly fashion. "It wouldn't be very good for me to drink this," she said, holding up the pink pitcher. "This is red ink. I forgot to empty the red ink bottles when I closed my school the last day, and as I didn't want the ink to dry up during the summer I filled this pitcher from the bottles. I'll take it home and, when school opens again in September I'll put the red ink back in the bottles."

"Oh," said Uncle Wiggily. Then the Lady Mouse set her pitcher of red ink down on the table and drank three birch bark cups filled with Uncle Wiggily's cool, sweet sour pale lemonade, and very good she said it was. Then Uncle Wiggily and the Lady Mouse walked to the duck pond ocean to watch a swimming race between Bully and Bawly No Tail, the frog boys.

When the race was over, and Bully had won, all of a sudden Jackie Bow Wow pointed to the lemonade table and cried

"See what the Wolf is doing! He's going to take our nice drink!"

The Wolf had come out of the woods, and, seeing the lemonade table, he said to himself: "I'll drink it all up! Ha! Ha! Pink lemonade and yellow lemonade! I'll drink the pink first!" Then he took the pitcher of red ink and drank it all.

"Oh, Scowzie! Wowzie! Bowzie!" howled the bad chap, as he tasted the red ink, "What queer lemonade!" And away he ran, looking for a doctor, for he was very ill.

"Well, my red ink is all gone, but I don't care," said the Lady Mouse. "I'll get more by next September." Then she helped Uncle Wiggily play games with the animal children and they drank the rest of the real lemonade and everybody was happy except the Wolf.

And if the sugar shaker doesn't sprinkle pepper down in the saltcellar to make the mustard sneeze, I'll tell you next about Uncle Wiggily's ice cream.

POLITE INTEREST

A celebrated Spanish writer with an aversion to things English tries to avoid acquaintances of that nationality. One day, however, he was stopped in the street by an Englishman to whom he owed money.

The creditor wasted no words.

"Rascal!" he shouted. "When are you going to pay me? I've been waiting four months and won't stand it any longer. Haven't you any sense of shame?"

It was a difficult situation for the writer, and his reply, when it came, was for the benefit of the crowd that had collected.

"And you," said he, with affected nonchalance, "what did you reply to all that?"—Buen Humor (Madrid).

The perfect man would be he who never succumbed twice to the same temptation, but this, unfortunately, is impossible of achievement. There aren't enough different temptations to last a man's lifetime.

Liberty ,it seems, consists in giving every one full right to mind every one else's business.

Delaney Wins Light Heavyweight Championship

CRITICS GAVE WINNER LARGE POINTS MARGIN

French Canadian Clearly Out-generals Berlenbach—Victory Was Decisive.

SMASHING FINISH.

New Champion Had Absolutely Unanimous Verdict of Referees.

EBBETT'S FIELD, N.Y., July 17.—In a flashing, smashing finish that swept his foe before him throughout the last five rounds, Jack Delaney took the light-heavyweight championship of the world last night from Paul Berlenbach. The handsome French-Canadian challenger from Bridgeport, Conn., lifted the title with a victory that was as spectacular as it was decisive. He carried off the unanimous verdict of the referee and judges, besides being given a wide margin on points by the big majority of ringside critics.

A capacity crowd of 45,000 which paid the huge sum of approximately $475,000 to witness the spectacle, hailed the new champion with a terrific ovation after he had boxed his way to the championship with as stirring, courageous and skillful a finish as any boxer has exhibited in years. It was the moment for which Delaney had been waiting for two years—the crowning at last of the "uncrowned king" of the ring.

Of Championship Calibre.

Delaney's triumph was gained in a fashion as surprising as it was convincing, for the challenger in his winning finish displayed the sort of stamina and aggressiveness which has been generally expected of the champion. Delaney had the most speed, the sharper hitting power and the ruggedness to turn the tide and carry off the decision in last stages of the struggle.

Delaney turned the tables on Berlenbach, and he did it in spite of fracturing a small bone in his left thumb in the second round of the bout.

Delaney's hardest blows failed to knock Berlenbach off his feet, but in at least three of the closing five rounds right uppercuts to the body and left hooks to the jaw had the champion a bit groggy. One of Delaney's smashes to the pit of the stomach in the eleventh round really turned the tide in the challenger's favor, giving him an advantage which he was quick to follow. Again in the fourteenth round, with the crowd yelling for a knockout, Delaney nailed Berlenbach on the point of the jaw with a swishing right. The champion sagged at the knees for a moment and grasped for the ropes, then fell into a clinch to save himself from further punishment.

Difference in Weight

The challenger conceded the champion a big advantage in weight. Officially their marks were 174 1-2 pounds for Berlenbach and 166 1-2 for Delaney, but the champion gained considerably on his rival in poundage as a result of the 24-hour postponement of the battle caused by rain. Last night Berlenbach scaled at 181, six pounds over his class limit, while Delaney's weight was put at 169.

Monte Munn, Nebraska's "Larruping Legislator," pounded his way to a decisive victory over Gordon Munce, New York heavyweight, in four rounds. Munn floored Munce six times. Munn weighed 208 and Munce 196 1-2.

Arthur deKuh, Italian heavyweight, made short work of Sergeant Jack Adams of St. Louis, knocking the soldier out in the second round of an eight-round match. DeKuh weighed 203 and Adams 188 1-2.

Julius Weiss of Germany and Tommy Walsh of Dublin fought a four-round draw in an added attraction. Walsh weighed 168 1-4 and Weiss 164 1-2.

In an eight-round semi-final, staged after the main event, Ted Moore of England received a decision over Jimmy France of Union City, N.J.

Bantamweights held the opening glare of the spotlight in the preliminaries with Tommy Lorenzo of New York gaining a four-round decision over Billy Reynolds of Jersey City. Lorenzo weighed 118 1-2 and Reynolds 120.

KIWANIS CLUB TEAM TRIMMED

Fairview Ice Cream Social Precedes Rout of Visiting Softball Players.

JUST 26 TO 4.

Kiwanis Club team was trimmed last night at Fairview by 26 runs to 4 in a game with the well balanced Fairview team.

To dilate on the game would show up some of Peterborough's leading business men in unfortunate thing that came his way behind the positions. A banker grabbed everybat, and held on; a grain merchant was content to garner handfuls of stubble while chasing the ball at first base; an insurance man made things safe at left field; a separator man separated the opposing team from a few runs while occupying the pitcher's box; and a couple of automobile dealers jazzed things up at third and short.

Rev. V. McNeely started the rout in the first by knocking a home run, and followed it up in fielding by making a circus catch off third. He led his team in showing up the Kiwanians, and ended by challenging the Kiwanis Club to enter a team in the field day at Chemong on August 12. And the challenge was accepted, for the Club, but not the same team. Never again!

The players were:

Fairview: F. Reynolds, J. Lewis, F. Wood, R. Rosborough, V. McNeely, E. Mullen, E. Rosborough, G. Wood and L. Reynolds.

Kiwanis—Ernest Smith, Walter Kidd, J. Wells Fraser, Ivan Lillico, John Dewart, E. Hatch, Charles Elliott, John Heron and Tom Mark.

Inside Sporting Dope

By A Wise Cracker

Mister Sporting Editor:—

The Petes was never very popular in Kingston, Mac, and right now, after the Wed. game there, they ain't got a friend in the town. And for once I am lining up with Mister Joe Daley. His howl about the Petes sending down a weak line up to the the Penitentiary town is closer to being right than his kicks usually is. When a visiting team turns up without its 1st string battery and ½ it regular infield and acts from the start like it knows its beaten, the cash customers had a real grievance. They pays their money to see a contest and they is entitled to a run for their mazuma. The Petes hasn't sent a full line up to Kingston this season and the Ponies can't be blamed for feeling hot under the collar about it, especially as Mister Daley has always trotted out his whole stable every time the Ponies has played in Peterboro.

The game Wed. was sunk in the 1st innings when Mister Lennox hit 1 man and 4 hits followed, including a triple with the sacks densely popu lated. That made 5 runs and 1 might as well a gone home to his supper right then. They was nothing to the affair after that. Mister Sheriff Halls's 2 lads and Mister Johnston did prevent Mister Cairns getting a no-hit, no-rnn game, which would have been easy so far as the rest of the Petes was concerned.

Last Sat., as you know, the boys took a fall out of Belleville, and they looked like a real ball team. Mister Heckman continued his good artillery work and he was helped by nice fielding by the whole company. Mister Gilly Goyer of Belleville run into his 1st loss of the season. Somehow Mister Goyer got the idea into his bean to show his control by hitting the Peterboro batters as fast as they come up to the plate. Mister Shiner Johnston was delighted with the performance. "Hit 'em all", he advised Mister Goyer, knowing he was fairly safe on the 3rd base coaching line. But Mr. Gerow thought his pitcher had had enough fun and substituted Mister Hoot Gibson who did none too badly for the balance of the matinee.

The soft ball play offs is providing a lot of excitement. I ain't seen none of them myself, but from what the folks tell me the firemen and the C.G.E. is having what the sporting writers love to call a hectic serious. The game billed for Sat. night ought to be a lulu. The C.G.E. supporters sez Mister Chief Gimblett'll be sending in a general alrm before the game is over while the Smoke-Eaters is figgering that the Electricians won't be any harder to put out than a chimney fire. I got friends on both teams myself, so the best I can do is hope the best team wins.

BATTLING BEARS BEATEN IN LAST OF NINTH INNING

Toronto Makes Good Start in Series With Newark.

GOOD FIELDING.

Gilhooley and Rival Pitcher at Loggerheads—Umpire Intervenes.

TORONTO, July 17 (Canadian Press).—Toronto defeated Newark 4 to 3 in the opening game of the series here yesterday, Gilhooley singling to centre to send Schmehl in from second base with one out in the ninth for the winning run. Jess Doyle started on the mound but the first four men to face him hit safely and he was withdrawn. Lefty Faulkner went in and engaged in a pitchers' battle with Twombley. The latter allowed but two hits until the eighth.

The fielding of Miller, Schmehl and Heath featured. Walker, Miller and Heath drove in the other three Toronto runs.

When Gilhooley scored in the eighth he did not like the way Wilson tried to block him off the plate, and took a punch at the Newark catcher. The umpire prevented further trouble.

The Baltimore Orioles retained their margin at the top of the International League standing by nosing out the Bisons 6 to 5 at Buffalo yesterday afternoon. It was a fairly even battle, with each team garnering nine hits.

Brame and Miller engaged in a twirling duel at Syracuse, with Miller obtaining a 3 to 2 verdict for the Stars, although he allowed two more hits than did his Jersey City opponent. The Reading Keys kept up their losing ways by dropping a 6 to 1 game to Rochester at the latter city.

DELORO VICTORS OVER FRANKFORD

Poor Fielding on Part of Frankford Cost Them the Game.

BONAR LAW, July 17.—The third meeting of Frankford and Deloro teams took place on the latter's ground on Friday afternoon, resulting in a win for Deloro by 8 to 0. The attendance was somewhat below the average, though weather conditions were perfect. Leal pitched six innings for the Smelters, being replaced by Ralph.

The pair were in their best form, while Frankford's youthful pitcher, Rogers, turned in a fine game for his team. In the first innings Frankford was totally disposed of. Faulty fielding by Frankford cost them two runs in the second innings. Rogers was applauded for making a neat catch of a fly from Hughes. The third frame was uneventful. Deloro obtained another run in the fourth, Jack scoring. In the fifth Leal flied out, Brown reached first on an error, Narrie grounded out, Regan singled, bringing in Brown, Jack flied out, retiring the side.

Deloro obtained another run in the next innings, A. Quinn scoring on a sacrifice hit by Hughes. In the seventh the Smelters added one more. The best hit of the game was seen in the eighth frame. A. Quinn singled, Hughes doubled, advancing Quin to third; Ralph sent the ball at a terrific pace to deep right field, bringing in Quinn, and himself being put out at the home plate in a fine attempt to circles the bases.

Deloro's next game is with Point Anne on Wednesday next and judging by the previous game, which marked their first defeat, an evenly contested struggle should be witnessed.

PIRATES COME NEARER TO REDS

Chalk Up a 9-7 Victory Against the Boston Braves.

TOLL OF TWIRLERS.

NEW YORK, July 17 (Canadian Press).—Seven runs in the second inning of yesterday's game at Pitrsburgh materially aided the Pirates in chalking up a 9 to 7 victory over the Boston Braves. The win sent the Parates half a game closer to the National league leaders, the Cincinnati Reds, who were not scheduled to play. The Braves fought back and were up to within one run of the Pirates in the sixth, but Songer, who relieved Bush, held the opposition safe.

Brooklyn kept from dropping into a tie for fifth place with their hated Manhattan rivals, the Giants, by scoring one in the ninth to beat the Cardials 8 to 7, at St. Louis. Two by the Robins and four by the Cards were the toll of twirlers, used in the hectic fray which was marked by the Cards were the toll of twirlers, used in the hectic fray which was marked by twenty hits and five errors. YANKEES MAKE AN EVEN BREAK

Gallant Rally in Ninth Beats Detroit By 4-3 Score.

THREE TWIRLERS.

NEW YORK, July 17.—The Athletics gained half a game on the American League leaders, the Yankees, yesterday afternoon by taking two games from the Browns, 3 to 2 and 5 to 4. The Quaker City team would have gained more but for the fact that the New Yorkers gallantly came from behind in the ninth at the Stadium to score three runs and beat Detroit 4 to 3.

The Yankee win gave them an even break in the series. Johns pitched splendidly for the Tigers, yielding but one hit in seven and one-third innings, but he then lost control; his team-mates outhit the Hugmen 10 to 5.

The double win for the Mackmen at Philadelphia gave them a clean sweep in the series, and made it twelve wins in the last fourteen starts.

Cleveland climbed to within one percentage point of Chicago in third place by scoring an 8 to 0 shut-out over the champion Senators. Chicago were idle at Boston owing to rain.

Washington used three twirlers, including Walter Johnson, in an effort to stop the Indians. Jamieson, visiting Cleveland outfielder, had four hits in five times at bat.

TRUTH VERSUS ERROR.

It is a rare thing now to find a minister in any pulpit, who fully and frankly will avow his faith in Jesus Christ as the Redeemer of the whole world and that His death was a sacrifice for the sins of the world, a sacrifice which justice demanded, provided and accepted; and that this sacrifice was an offset to Adam's original transgression, and was the purchase price for the whole world, securing to all mankind in due time, a release from death.

What possible object could there be on the part of the great Creator, in bringing man back from death, if it were not to grant him an opportunity to fall in line with the will of God, becoming righteous, and obtaining everlasting life. Why should Jesus die for every man, and bring about the resurrection of all, if it were not for that very purpose?

We have no reason for doubt, no cause to fear. Man will have a full, free, fair opportunity of gaining endless life. Many who are professedly preaching the gospel do not know what the gospel is. The real gospel is glad tidings of great joy, for all people. The spurious gospel is sad tidings of great sorrow to all men, with the exception of a very few. The apostle Paul was so indignant in regard to the preaching of a spurious gospel, that he said, let them who preach it be accursed. —M. T. Butcher. 1d15 4082

WEDDING BELLS.

GRAY—McBRIDE

MILLBROOK, July 17.—A quiet, but very pretty wedding was solemnized in St. Thomas' Church, at 2.30 p.m. on Thursday, July 15, when Alice Theo May, youngest daughter of the late Mr. John McBride, and Mrs. McBride, Millbrook, became the bride of Ivan Lavergne Hunter Gray, only son of Mr. Dugan Gray, and the late Mrs. Gray, of Peterborough.

The rector, Rev. Canon Allen, performed the ceremony, the church being attractively decorated with early summer flowers, and ferns, for the occasion.

The bride, who was given away by her cousin, Mr. Fred Dawe, of Bethany, looked charming in a dainty gown of sand, georgette crepe, with deep lace flounce, over a pink silk slip, and with large picture hat to match; she carried an arm bouquet of Ophelia roses, baby's breath, and maiden hair fern.

The wedding march was played by Mrs. Canon Allen.

The bridal couple were attended by Mr. and Mrs. Claire Stuart, of Peterborough, the latter wearing a becoming dress of mauve georgette crepe, and carrying a bouquet of pink roses. Her hat was also to match.

Owing to recent bereavement in the bride's family no wedding reception was held, Mr. and Mrs. Gray leaving by motor, immediately after the ceremony, for Toronto, Sarnia and Detroit. For travelling, the bride had a wrap of one of the new shades of green, the cape attached to the coat being fur-trimmed.

Upon their return they will reside for a time in Millbrook.

The groom's gift to the bride was an Orthophonic Victrola; to the bridesmaid a wrist watch, and to the groomsman a handsome ring. Many other beautiful gifts, including a number of cheques, were received from relatives and friends.

NEWSPAPERMAN SHOT.

Had Attacked Doings of Under-world—Refused to Heed Warnings.

CANTON, Ohio, July 17. — Rewards totalled $11,000 late yesterday as every branch of the city's police departments was engaged in a hunt for the two gunmen who shot down Don R. Mellett, publisher of the Canton Daily News, at his home earlier in the day. Other rewards are expected to bring the total above $20,000, as the city's answer to the interests responsible for the newspaper man's slaying.

The first $100 was offered by H. C. Pontius, attorney for the victim, in the several months' battle waged on vice and bootlegging through Mellett's newspaper. Later $5,000 was added by H. H. Timken, president of the Timken Roller Bearing Company, and $5,000 more came from the Scripps-Howard Newspapers Alliance, of Ohio.

Despite repeated warnings that he might be attacked, Mr. Mellett refused to be intimidated and carried on in his efforts to rid Canton of what he believed amounted to control by the underworld.

The shooting occurred shortly after 12 o'clock. Mr. Mellett, his wife and Mr. and Mrs. Walter Vail, had attended the first birthday party of the Molly Stark Club. This institution was founded by and sponsored by Mr. Mellett and the Daily News, because he felt that it would supply a need for better fellowship among the young people of Canton.

They arrived at the Mellett home about 12, and sat on the porch for a time. Mrs. Mellett decided to serve a lunch, and went to the kitchen. Mr. and Mrs. Vail accompanied her as far as the door and were standing there talking.

Suddenly a fusilade of shots pierced the air. They came in such rapid succession that it was impossible to count them. One bullet entered the kitchen window, sped across the room and embedded itself in the casement of an opposite window. Looking out the open door, Mrs. Vail saw the flashes of the gun and screamed. Mr. and Mrs. Vail rushed to the garage, which is only a few feet in the rear of the house, and faces Claremont Street. There they found Mr. Mellett crumpled on the ground unconscious. Blood was streaming from two holes in his head.

Removes the Pain and the Cause instantly

Corns

PEOPLE who try to destroy corns by the risky practice of following old, antiquated methods, find they soon come back again, painful as ever. That's because such so-called remedies do not remove the cause—rubbing and pressing of shoes. Until the cause is stopped, corns will persist.

But now a new method, that works on the only correct, scientific principle of removing the cause, is replacing these old, antiquated makeshifts. Millions of people have adopted it.

It is Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads—a thin, medicated, antiseptic, protective, healing pad, that has completely revolutionized the treatment of corns. You put one on and the pain ends instantly. At the same time the rubbing and pressing of the shoe is completely removed.

A new corn can't come where the old one was, because Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads stops it before it can get started. Made in three sizes for Corns, Callouses, and Bunions. Get a package of Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads at your shoe dealer's or druggist's today. Mail coupon below for free sample.

MYSTERIES OF SEX APPEAL EXPLAINED

Neurologist Tells Why Men Love and Marry Women.

"Why, whatever can se see in that girl?"

You've heard the question often. Quite likely you've asked it yourself.

The answer is, he just couldn't help himself. He had to fall in love with that particular woman. And, if you're still single, the same kind of fate is in store for you; that is, you will find yourself irresistibly attracted to a certain girl, for reasons—if you ever consider them, which is doubtful — quite unfathomable.

The solution of the riddle, writes Dr. Frederic Damrau, New York neurologist, in the August Popular Science Monthly, goes back to your cradle days. Before you could talk or walk— almost before the time you could distinguish objects clearly— you began forming your impressions of the ideal girl.

And the basis of that ideal, the real root of sex appeal, is your mother.

A hand reaches into the crib to tuck you in. The same hand guides food to your mouth; you associate a certain form with your comfort and well-being. Gradually the purely animal satisfaction resultant from gratitude of your physical needs ripens into affection. Your ideal takes the shape of the one who has made the greatest sacrifices uncomplainingly for your sake.

Girls have similar experiences. A girl discovers her heart palpitating when in the company of a man whose voice is of a certain pitch; whose laugh is hearty; whose shoulders are broad. She realizes it would not be difficult for her to fall in love with him. And she will find that the man who was nearest to her in her baby days—the one who bounced her on his knee and pushed her buggy through the park — had the same vocal pitch, or hearty laugh.

"This," says Dr. Damrau, "is no theory of mine. It is the finding of the new psychology. And I have confirmed it to my satisfaction with independent tests."

In a recent survey the youths of a certain college were asked to describe their ideals of womanhood. When they planned to settle down to matrimony, which would they choose for life partners—the flappers or the old-fashioned girls? Despite the students' apparent fondness for the 1926 model as a roadster companion, they voted to cast her out when it came time to switch to the matrimonial flivver.

Why? The answer is simple. The lads at college to-day came into the world a few years after the birth of the Twentieth Century. Most of their mothers were of the old-fashioned type, who looked askance at flappers. And, since a mental p icture of their mothers as flappers shocked them, the young men could not complacently visulize their future wives in the same pose. Not only that, but the students went on record overwhelmingly as opposed to their wives' working. The subconscious reaction was that their mothers didn't —and their mothers, remember, are their ideals.

DRIVER DROWNED HORSE SAVES PAL

Boy Loses Life Attempting To Ford Deep Stream.

PORT DOVER, July 19. — While attempting to ford Sandusk Creek in a buggy yesterday afternoon, Benjamin Birke, aged 16 of R. R. No. 2, Fisherville, was drowned. George Lint, who was with the unfortunate youth, managed to save himself by clinging to the buggy until the horse succeeded in swimming to the opposite shore.

The boys who were on their way to Woodlawn Park, had thought to take a short cut by fording the creek instead of going two miles around by the bridge. They had been warned that the creek was 20 feet deep in places.

When the buggy started to sink Birke jumped out and was drowned in some 15 feet of water. His body was recovered an hour later by grappling irons. His father, Amos Birke, his mother, and his sister, Faith, survive.

French Financial Problem Still Unsolved

MAN IS INJURED BY FALLING TREE AT BRIDGENORTH

John Ledrew, of Hamilton, Was Unconscious After Being Struck.

IN NICHOLS' WOODS.

Attended By Dr. McCulloch and is Now Out of Danger.

John Ledrew a resident of Hamilton, camping in Nichols' Woods near Bridgenorth, was injured by a falling tree during the storm on Saturday. Mr. Ledrew, who has camped in this neighborhood for several summers was sitting under the tree when it was blown down and he was struck on the head. He was unconscious for some time and was attended by Dr. J. M. McCulloch. Although still suffering from concussion, Mr. Ledrew is reported to be in no danger.

Nine trees were blown down in Nichols' Woods during the storm. A large tree was struck by lightning in Kelly's Woods also at Bridgenorth.

Quite a number of the large oaks of Chemong Park were also victims of the high winds.

The floating bridge has been out of commission since Saturday afternoon. Some large logs and trees carried down by the winds greatly damaged the structure on Saturday afternoon, forcing a portion of the bridge out of its usual position and springing many of the planks and rendering the bridge impassable to vehicular traffic.

The broken branches littering many of the streets of the city bore evidence of the ravages of the storm. The large tent of the Chautauqua caught the full force of the blasts but the supporting poles bore up nobly under the terrific strain. The lecture on electrical phenomena of R. B. Ambrose was interrupted twice by natural demonstrations which eclipsed the best efforts of the man on the platform. Although the nervous among the audience looked apprehensively at the poles and stakes there was no general exodus. Mr. Ambrose's humorous sallies played no small part in reassuring the audience, who remained to witness a remarkably entertaining and instructive series of electrical experiments.

'Fight Your Own Battles' Shaw Replies To Women

LONDON, July 19 (United Press).—A woman suffrage organization appealed to George Bernard Shaw for help in lowering the voting age for British women, now thirty years.

"Women must fight their own battles," he replied. "I am not to be lured into the ridiculous position of their male champion. They need no assistance from me."

DROWNED IN DAM.

Repeated Attempts at Rescue Fail—Was on Picnic.

BRAMPTON, July 19.—A drowning fatality occurred at Suttonville Park, four miles west of Brampton, yesterday afternoon, the victim being James Coats, 24 years old, of 121 Parkmount Road, Toronto.

With two young ladies, he had motored over to Suttonville, where the party had lunch by the side of the dam. At this point the water is about 18 feet in depth. After lunch the young fellow changed into a bathing suit and plunged into the water. He was soon noticed to be in difficulty, as he sank twice, waving his hand as he came to the surface.

A young Englishman, Sidney Kidney, who is an expert diver, was in the vicinity and plunged in after the drowning man. Kidney managed to catch hold of him, but lost his grip and the body sank to the bottom. Diving in repeatedly, Kidney managed once to touch the body, but could not get it to the surface. Water was drawn from the dam until there was only a depth of ten feet and grappling hooks were fetched from Snell's Lake, but it was not until six o'clock that the body was recovered by H. H. Payne and was taken to Brampton. Coroner J. A. Lawson is investigating the tragedy.

Judge Is Merciful To Man In Love

NEW YORK, July 19.—Justice can be sentimental.

Hyman Sattler received a wedding present from the court after pleading guilty of violating the Volstead Act and explaining wistfully that he was about to get married.

"You needn't bring him before me again until he's married," said Federal Judge Campbell, communting Sattler's $100 fine. "Let him go through one trouble at a time."

DAMAGE CAUSED IN LINDSAY AREA

Barns and Silos Destroyed—Losses to the Hydro.

FENCES WRECKED.

LINDSAY, July 19.—On Saturday at noon a storm of cyclonic proportions swept Lindsay and district, causing a great deal of damage. On nearly every thoroughfare in the town trees were blown down, fences wrecked and other damage done. The Hydro Electric Commission suffered heavy loss, as the trees fell across the electric wires and completely demoralized the system. The Bell Telephone Company also reports serious loss; reports from the country indicate that much damage was done. Hundreds of trees are down and barns and other buildings are damaged. The large new barn on the farm of Mr. B. McGeough, South Ops, which replaced the one destroyed by fire a few months ago, was partially wrecked, the west end of the structure giving away to the storm. The log barn on the farm of Michael Houlihan, of Emily, was blown down. Mr. Thos. Endicott, of East Ops, had suffered the loss of a silo, which was completely wrecked, and two silos on the farm of Reeve Graham, of Ops were also levelled.

Tourists coming in over the provincial highway from Toronto, report that much damage was done by the storm in the district around Oshawa.

GENESIS NAMES HER RELATIVES, SAYS PRINCESS

Member of Ancient House and Native of World's Oldest City.

BIBLICAL FIGURE.

Talks of Difference Between Syria and U. S. on Divorce.

MINNEAPOLIS, July 19. — A native of the oldest city in the world, Damascus, and a daughter of Syrian royalty of ancient Biblical kings, whose history is revealed in the Book of Genesis, is Princess Rahme Haider of the Syrian House of Anaries, who is now in the United States visiting.

Sitting in her suite at a hotel the Syrian princess looked as if she might be a detached picture of a Biblical woman that had suddenly become animated. There was something about her that made one think of Naomi, or Ruth, or of Esther.

"The story of my people is told in the Book of Genesis," she begins with a gracious smile. "I was born in Baalbrek, a little village at the foot of the cedar-topped mountains of Lebanon. My remote ancestors are easily traced back to the Flood, and they occupied the historic region around Palestine when the Israelites were making brick for the Pharaohs. It was around the decayed ruins of Baalbrek, which was built in Constantine's reign, that I played as a child."

Speaking with an attractive foreign accent, the princess, who is a keen student of humanity, declared she could not resist comparing the life of her ancient birthpalce to that of America.

"Oh, you are so young, so very young," she said, "while we are so old, so very old. Perhaps our two countries are most widely apart on the divorce problem.

"We have no divorces in Syria. Our Syrian girls are taught to become useful wives and that their place is in the home. Your American girls scoff at that."

HALF MILLION DOLLAR BLAZE RAGES FOR WEEK

Fire Was Caused By Lighted Match or Burning Cigarette.

POLES DESTROYED.

Seaplanes Used To Reconnoiter Lewis Lake Conflagration.

VANCOUVER, B. C. July 19 (Canadian Press). — Damage estimated at $500,000 has been caused by the forest fire raging since last Monday around Lewis Lake, 139 miles north of Vancouver.

The fire started near the property of the Brooks-Scanlon Lumber Company and wiped out Camp Number Four, together with considerable equipment, and spread rapidly. Reports are that 125 men are holding the fire. A lighted match or burning cigarette is said to have been responsible for this fire.

On Friday afternoon near Green River, 75 miles north of Vancouver, on the Pacific Great Eastern Railway, fire destroyed 2,500 poles ready for shipment and 16 men fighting the fire had a narrow escape when they were cut off by the flames.

A seaplane was sent from the Jericho air station here Saturday to reconnoiter the Lewis Lake fire and also one at Fanny Bay, on Vancouver Island, which has assumed large proportions.

SPECTCACULAR FIRE.

Toronto Piano Plant Is Destroyed—Fire Menaced Many Homes.

TORONTO, July 19. — Flames leaping 50 to 75 feet in the air from the plant of the Newcombe Piano Company, on Bellwoods Avenue, just south on Dundas street, provided Toronto early yesterday morning with one of the most spectacular fires in the city's history.

Showering sparks from the vast quantities of highly inflammable material which the factory contained, provided a constant menace to hundreds of homes in the immediate vicinity during the entire course of the blaze, and it was not without a very stubborn fight that the firemen were able to confine the damage to the total destruction of the Newcombe building.

Discovered shortly after midnight the fire made rapid headway. The Newcombe factory is one of the old ones of the city, occupying 80 to 144 Bellwoods avenue, five stories in height, and of massive, solid brick construction. Inflammable woods, ivories and other pianoforte materials, however provided the flames with the means of rapid headway in spite of the solid construction of the building, and at 1.40 a.m., the five floors in the structure collapsed with a thunderous crash, and the flames shot to the sky from the remaining skeleton of the building. Definite estimate of the loss is as yet impossible, but it is understood that it will be well in excess of $100,000.

The loss is shared by three firms, who were tenants of the building namely, the Newcombe Piano Company itself, the Ball Bearing Company, and the Dainty Confectionery and Candy Company. The cause of the fire is unknown.

THE WEATHER.

Reports have come in from different sections of trees being uprooted and blown down by the miniature cyclone that passed over this district on Saturday [illegible] the noon hour. Broken branches were strewn on the city streets in many places, while on some of the country roads they made travel impossible for the time being. On Saturday night we had an example of a real thunderstorm, which have been comparatively rare for some years. The lightning was wicked and close, as shown by the fact that the flash and the noise of the thunder were almost simultaneous. The rainfall totalled .63 of an inch. Highest temperature Sunday, 81 degrees.—W. P.

After a consultation with the bride-to-be both walked out. The deserted groom received a two-dollar refund on his license.

PARTY INTEREST GOVERNS POLICY

Progressives at Convention Score Both Liberals and Conservatives.

CAMPAIGN FUNDS.

SASKATOON, Sask., July 19. — Canadian Press. — Leaders of the Progressive party in Saskatchewan, after a two day conference here at which the political situation as thoroughly discussed, issued a statement which declared that it was the concensus of opinion of the gathering "that the extent to which the Liberal and Conservative organizations sacrificed the interests of the country for party advantage, the revelations disclosed in the customs probe of corrupt administration, and the sources of campaign funds of both old parties and their domination by the big financial interests, emphasized clearly the essential need of retaining the Progressive group at Ottawa."

The meeting was attended by the chairman of constituency committees, Progressive members of the last House and Progressive condidates defeated at the last Federal election.

The statement says that while no resolution was passed dealing with contesting of constituencies, "it was unanimously agreed that the absence of Progressive candidates, particularly in rural seats, could only mean the disfranchisement of a great part of the electorate."

TWO AUTOS COLLIDE DUNDAS HIGHWAY

Six People Injured, Two Seriously, in Head-on Collision.

HAMILTON, Ont., July 19.—Six Toronto people were injured Saturday afternoon in an acicdent on the Dundas Street Highway, about one mile from Nelson village. The members of the party were brought here and at St. Joseph's Hospital last night:

The injured are: Mrs. W. R. Wallace, 915 Bathurst Street, lacerations of the face and internal injuries. W. R. Wallace, same address, internal injuries and injuries to back. W. I. Wallace, same address, shock and lacerations. Morris Wallace, youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Wallace, shock and lacerations. Mrs. R. W. Burke, 11 Balmy Avenue, fracture of pelvic bone, internal injuries, suffering from shock. Warren T. Davis, 478 Parkdale Avenue, fracture of the spine, possible interal injuries, lacerations of head and face. His condition is serious.

When admitted to the hospital it was announced that Mrs. Wallace and Mrs. Burke were in a critical condition, and that their recovery was doubtful. During the night and Sunday they rallied, however, and in the case of Mrs. Burke, improvement was noted, although they are still in a serious condition.

The report of the accident states that car owned by Warren T. Davis and W. R. Wallace, crashed. The auto of Mr. Davis was going at a good rate of sped it is alleged, and struck the Wallace machine. So great was the impact that both autos were practically demolished. Highway Officer Shanks was soon at the scene of the accident, and was told that Mr. Davis was forced to turn out to pass an auto parked on the Highway, and as he pulled around it the car of Mr. Wallace came down towards him.

When Mr. Wallace applied his brakes the auto skidded on the wet pavement, and the Davis car crashed into the side of it. Both autos were wrecked completely, the Davis car turning upside down and Mr. Davis being pinned beneath it, and it was not until the machine was tipped over that he was extricated. Mr. Davis was alone in his machine and the others injured were all passengers of Mr. Wallace. Glass showered in every direction, and it took 24 stitches to close the wounds in Mrs. Wallace's face.

The injured were removed to St. Joseph's Hospital. They were all unconscious.

American Coal Producers Export To England and To Her Customers.

POSITION SERIOUS.

Race For Supremacy By Other Powers For Great Britain's Place.

WASHINGTON, July 19 (United Press). — The British coal strike now almost four months old, is bringing millions of unexpected dollars monthly into the coffers of American coal producers.

Coal export figures for June, which will be officially announced this week, will show that more than 2,000,000 tons of coal, mostly high volatile bituminous, has been sent to the British Isles, famous as the great coal producing and exporting region in the world.

Exports to many other countries, formerly Britain's best customers, similarly register large purchases from the United States.

United States, Germany and Polish coal producers are engaged in a race for Great Britain's place of supremacy in Europe and South America market, Commerce Department officials told the United Press to-day.

TAKE SAVAGES AS YOUR IDEAL

Advises President of New Health Society—Is Famous Surgeon.

NO EQUAL TO ZULU.

LONDON, July 19 (United Press).—Women's short skirts and men's plus-fours have revealed that most people are either knock-kneed or bow-legged, according to Sir William Arbuthnot Lane, president of the new health society and internationally famous surgeon.

"Few people have straight legs," he added. It may be recalled that several years ago, before the short skirt era, exhaustive investigation disclosed that most chorus girls and good figured women generally were distinctly knock-kneed.

Arbuthnot Lane declared that civilized people must take savages as their ideals if they wanted to become really good looking again, figuratively speaking.

"There is nothing to equal the splendid physique of the Zulu," he said.

"There are some fine men in the American police forces, but they all come from the west of Ireland, where most people live in one room with a pig and with a plain diet of potatoes and milk.

AMERICAN DEBT CRUSHES EUROPE

American Visitors Learn New Meaning For U.S.—Termed Uncle Shylock.

FALL OF FRANC.

LONDON, July 19 (United Press).—The Daily Mail, commenting editorially on the French Cabinet and financial crisis, emphasizes the crushing effect which the American debt has had on Europe. The Mail points to the shock given Americans visiting Europe when they suddenly find that the letters "U.S." are regarded as standing for "Uncle Shylock."

"The fall of the French franc and collapse of the Briand Ministry are consequences of the burden of the American war debt hanging over Europe," says the Mail.

"The United States forced England into a one-sided settlement of our debt—we agreed to pay in full and in gold for all American goods supplied the Allies at exhorbitant prices. As a net result of the war debt agreement the pockets of the United States are filled while the Allies are left crippled by debts to the American people."

ARREST 200 STRIKERS.

NEW YORK, July 19 (Canadian Press).—Two hundred striking garment workers were arrested to-day, charged with disorderly conduct. Nearly one hundred patrolmen invaded the district bounded by 29th and 35th Streets and Fifth and First Avenues, and herded the strikers into patrol wagons.

To Be London's Mayor Is Costly Privilege

LONDON, July 19.—The cost of being Lord Mayor of London has increased considerably since Dick Whittington's day, and according to the present Lord Mayor, it needs an American super-millionaire to carry on the onerous position.

At present the Lord Mayor of London receives an allowance of $50,000 a year and has the use of the Great Mansion House as an official residence. But it costs him anything up to another $250,000 when there is a heavy year of banquets and official functions.

NINE KILLED BY ELECTRIC STORM

Great Damage To Life and Property in Saturday's Storm.

THREE MISSING.

NEW YORK, July 19 (Canadian Press).—The trail of nine dead and property damage estimated as high as $250,000 to-day marked the path of the week-end electrical, rain and wind storms over Ohio to Maine. Three boys who set out in a canoe from Sandy Hook, N.J., were reported missing also. Four of the deaths in New England were caused by lightning. Four others were killed by fallen trees or drowned in New England.

Bomb Exploded In Jail In Attempt To Escape

CHICAGO, July 19. — Canadian Press. — The record of escapes and attempted escapes from the old county jail, was given its most spectacular entry on Sunday when smuggled dynamite, fashioned into a bomb and believed to have been set by Henry J. Fernekes, the midget slayer, in an attempt to escape his impending doom on the gallows, blew a 15 inch hole in the west wall.

Twenty four prisoners either convicted or awaiting trial for murder, including Martin Durkin the sheik gunman, and Robert Scott, were in the cells leading directly to the broken wall when the explosion occurred. Escape was foiled only by inches.

WILL INVESTIGATE MYSTERIOUS DEATH

Body of Unidentified Man Found Near Dam—Coroner Leaves.

HULL, Que., July 19 (Canadian Press).—Coroner Joseph Isabelle of Hull has left for Maniwaki to investigate the death of an unidentified man whose body was found in the bush near the dam of the Foundation Construction Company built in connection with the Canadian International Paper Company enterprise at Bitohee. It is believed to be the body of a man who disappeared from the works there five days ago, but the nature of his death is not known. The heavy electrical storm which raged over the Gatineau district on Saturday night disorganized the telephonic communications there to a considerable extent.

VILLAGES DESTROYED.

Several Dams Give Way Under Pressure of Water.

VIENNA, July 19 (Canadian Press). — Reports from Cettinje, Jugo Slavia, says floods in that region have destroyed several villages, with a loss of sixty lives.

The latest despatches from Belgrade place the flooded areas in Jugo Slavia at 400,000 acres, several more dams having given way under pressure of the waters.

Grave Difficulties Confront Herriot In Forming Ministry

Radical Leader Contemplates Union National Government But May Be Unable to Find a Cabinet Which Will Agree in Carrying Out His Programme.

CHIEFTAIN OF REPUBLICAN UNION HAS ALREADY ANNOUNCED OPPOSITION

PARIS, July 19 (Canadian Press).—Edouard Herriott, President of the Chamber of Deputies, Radical leader, and former Premier, will, at the request of President Doumergue, undertake the task of forming a new ministry and solving the seventh Cabinet crisis which has occurred in France since he first took power a little more than two years ago.

Financial problems, which were responsible for the downfall of all these governments, reducing the average life of a ministry from nine months to something more than three, have progressively increased the difficulties until cabinet making is now generally considered to be a job for a superman.

M. Herriot, however, apparently is confident and his first consultations indicated that he would try to form a national union ministry in which all parties would be represented except the Communists, Socialist and Royalists. The general feeling is in favor of such a combication, as it was before the formation of M. Briand's tenth cabinet, but there is some question among certain groups of the Chamber as to whether M. Herriot is the man to preside over it. There is doubt if such a Cabinet could agree on M. Herriot's programme.

Borrowing Abroad.

The Briand-Caillaux Cabinet, it is pointed out, fell not only on the question of "full powers" demanded of parliament, but on the policy of borrowing more money abroad. The solution of the treasury's difficulties regarding the stabilization of the franc is admitted to lie between foreign loans and a capital levy. Most of the leaders of the moderate groups with whom M. Herriot had been consulting, have been uncompromisingly against a capital levy.

The new government's policy consequently is regarded as a serious complication in the formation of a national union cabinet by the president of the chamber. Political experts are widely divergent in their predictions, some of them looking for failure on the part of M. Herriot to find men and a programme that will go together. Also there is talk of a Poincare cabinet, in which Herriot, Painleve, and Tardieu would have important portfolios.

Opposition Appears

The first indication of hostility to M. Herriot as head of a national union ministry came from the National bloc. Louis Marin, the leader of this group, who was more instrumental than Herriot in overthrowing Premier Briand, since a majority of this group voted against Briand, while only a minority of the Radicals followed Herriot, declared last evening that his friends would not accept M. Herriot as Premier.

M. Marin's group, the Republican Union, built on the remains of the old National bloc, is second in size in the chamber, numbering 104, as compared with 134 Radicals; its support is regarded as absolutely essential to enable a Union cabinet to live.

M. Herriot has the alternative possibility of rebuilding the old Coalition of the Left, but in that case, it is argued, he will be obliged to adopt the Socialist programme, with a very slight chance of getting it through the Senate.

Public Temper Rising

The public, which for two years has watched the passing show of ministerial combinations with passive indifference, has begun to show signs of impatience. The police held close guard over the Rue de Fauburg-Saint Honore, in front of Elysee Palace yesterday, in consequence of a manifestation on Saturday evening hostile to M. Herriot.

Everybody connects the continued downward slide of the franc with the political complications which have been persistenly thrown into the efforts to solve the financial problem. Public discussions have become more and more vigorous lately, and even the guards around the Chamber of Deputies have been reinforced.

This precaution is due to the fact that the crowds of bystanders always waiting before the Chamber in the hope of getting a sight of some of the notables, have considerably increased of late, and remarks more or less threatening are frequently overheard.

Every effort will be made to hasten a solution of the crisis so as to forestall its effect on the exchange market. If M. Herriot fails, however, it is regarded as extremely unlikely that a new government can be formed before Tuesday.

Date Of Election May Be Known To-morrow

OTTAWA, July 19 (Canadian Press).—Present indications are that the completion of the Government through swearing in of a couple of ministers from Quebec will go over until the return of Premier Meighen from the Maritime Provinces, which he is to tour during this week and next.

Tomorrow night Premier Meighen makes his opening speech of the campaign in Ottawa. The date of election will probably be formally announced then. It is expected that it will fall between September 14 and September 21. There is no definite indication who will be the new ministers from Quebec.

FRANCE TO HAVE RADICAL CABINET

New Ministry of Herriot Will Be Chosen From Radical Group.

SOCIALIST SUPPORT.

PARIS, July 19. Canadian Prehs.—With dogged determination Edouard Herriot, Radical leader, to-day was at work on his arduous task of carrying out the desire of President Doumergue that he form a cabinet to take the place of that of Aristide Briand, which fell Saturday, on the old question of finance.

It seemed apparent to-day that Herriot aimed at, or rather would be obliged to content himself with a Radical cabinet into which there would enter few moderates.

Such a combination, it was declared in political circles, would necessarily have to depend upon Socialist support, which it was asserted, would be given only conditionally. The party's programme inclued a levy on all forms of capital.

The crisis precipitated by Herriot in bringing about the downfall of the government has caused an extra displeasure in the Senate and among some portions of the public and the newspapers.

Because of hostile demonstrations against him on Saturday night, the police are closely guarding him.

MONDAY, JULY 19, 1926.

THE CHAUTAUQUA.

This is Peterboro's annual Chautauqua season, and many citizens will enjoy the fine programme that has been arranged for local presentation.

The Chautauqua plan makes it possible to enjoy music, lectures, etc., from artists of established reputation, who under ordinary circumstances would rarely be heard here, at least not so many of them could be expected to visit Peterboro in one season.

The Chautauqua ranks high in entertainment and educational value, and the complete series of concerts affords a rather unique opportunity for worth-while recreation at a season of the year when there usually is a blank in such things.

To the local committee who have sponsored the visit of Chautauqua to Peterboro and some members of which have been associated with the enterprise since this city was placed on the circuit, the thanks of many citizens are due for the chance to enjoy a series of high-class programmes at reasonable prices.

CIVIC HOLIDAY.

The Great War Veterans' Association are to be thanked for again providing Peterboro citizens with a Civic Holiday programme, and it is to be hoped that their enterprise will be rewarded by liberal patronage.

Civic Holiday has been defined as the day on which people show their interest in their home city by getting as far away from it as possible, and this is particularly true of Peterboro.

Usually this exodus is justified because of the absence of any local attraction to keep people at home.

The programme announced by the G.W.V.A. is varied and interesting and should provide capital entertainment for citizens generally, who may find it decidedly worth their while to spend Peterboro's Civic Holiday in Peterboro on this occasion.

The war veterans are saddling themselves with heavy responsibilities in undertaking such an ambitious celebration, and they should have general support in making the affair a complete success.

THE NEW PRESS.

The passing of many of the old party newspapers in favour of independent journals with a neutral viewpoint will be found to be an excellent thing for the public during the coming election.

As the Examiner points out in another article today, there is every indication that a dirty fight is coming.

Were the old-time party journals in full flower the heat and rancor of the campaign would be appreciably increased.

It is only necessary to read one or two survivors of party organ days to appreciate the bitterness that could be stirred up with two or more partizan newspapers in each community.

The increasing independence of the press in political matters will help to check the abusive tactics of the politicians.

Newspapers in most cases refuse to accept any longer the doctrine that one party is always right and one always wrong; they are frank in stating that there are often cases when both are wrong, and this readiness to speak out, accompanied by a desire to be absolutely fair in their reports of political meetings, is giving such newspapers a standing that was unknown yesterday.

There are a few of the old school left, and their news columns, to say nothing of their editorial page, should be taken with a grain of salt during election campaigns.

THE COMING ELECTION.

While it must be confessed that the election which is upon us promises to be one of the bitterest campaigns in the history of Canada, it is hoped that the good sense of the leaders of the various parties will result in a firm control of the fight to keep it as far as possible within bounds.

There are issues that will be stressed that are replete with possibilities of trouble, and unless the worth-while men of the contending parties make an effort to hold their followers in check, the campaign is likely to be memorable by reason of the amount of mud-slinging and personalities used.

The Financial Post sizes up the situation accurately when it says: "For a full year now political tension has been taut to the degree of genuine nerve strain in Canada. Events of the session over-taxed the atmosphere. The succession of divisions each won on a small majority, the charges and counter-charges resulting from the customs investigation, the final struggle jockeying for position, the Byng episode, have created a background for the kind of deplorable political campaign that obscures real issues and plays up personalities."

The Examiner believes that a large number of electors are endeavouring to find a way out of the present situation; that they are more or less disgusted with the manoeuvring of the political parties, and that they don't want a campaign of mud-slinging that will divert attention away from important issues and policies.

The leaders have an opportunity here for rendering a great service by endeavouring to guide the fight along clean lines.

CABINET BUILDING.

The slow, laborious, tricky task of cabinet-building, as exemplified by the problems of Mr. Meighen in the past two weeks, is one of the unfortunate features of Canadan political life. Each time a new cabinet is formed in Canada, the weaknesses of the British cabinet system as opposed to the United States cabinet system, are exemplified.

In Canada, the prime minister, who sets out to give the country a business administration composed of cabinet ministers chosen from leaders in their respective fields, is beset with virtually insurmountable problems. He must choose men who can get re-elected in their constituencies. He must choose his men so that each province is represented by a proportionate number. Each race, each creed, each religion must get its just due. The premier has only a small group to choose from, a group too small to assure the proper diversification of matesial and yet too large, when personal ambitions and party services are to be considered.

In the United States, the president has the opportunity of choosing his men, if he wishes, regardless of their ability to get re-elected, regardless of local, class or religious considerations. He does not have to consider whether the man's ancestors came from Ireland, Scotland, or France, or whether his wife is a United Methodist or goes to the Catholic church or the Jewish synagogue.

If Coolidge had been hampered by the Canadian system he would never have had a great secretary of state like Hughes, or a Hoover or Mellon in his cabinet. Hughes and one of his predecessors in office, Elihu Root, are regarded as the two brainiest men in America. If King had not been hampered by the Canadian system, he would never have had Bureau, Cardin or Murdock in his cabinet.

The ministers of the government should be chosen for constructive administrative ability rather than for their political services or their affiliatons. They need not even sit in the house. But they should advise the premier and administer their departments soundly, ably and with business acumen and appear before committees of the House and Senate, the chairmen of these committees representing them at other times.

It may be asked, too, if our present cabinet system, with its inter-racial, inter-provincial and inter-religious jealousies, is not helping to destroy national good feeling.—Financial Post.

LIGHT AND POWER.

When Charles Albert Coffin set out in the '80s of the last century to sell electricity to the people, he was inspired, according to his own words, by "a holy faith." That faith has been abundantly justified, though there remains plenty of opportunity for his successors in the industry in the development of new fields of activity. As late as 1912, according to the Washington statistics, the electric light and power stations employed 7,500,000 horsepower of prime movers in the production of 14,000,000 thousand-kilowatts of current. In 1924 the public utility power plants alone produced 60,000,000 thousand-kilowatts. The number of customers served by the central stations was less than 2,000,000 in 1907, but nearly 13,000,000 fifteen years later. With the automobile, electric current holds the rare distinction of escaping the post-war rise in prices. As compared with 1913, prices in 1924, according to the Washington figures, would show, indeed, a perceptible decline.

So well has electricity been "sold" to the people that the "electric age" long ago became a commonplace. In fact, for a number of years and until very recently, electricity was thrown into the shade, as far as publicity was concerned, by that startling newcomer, the gas engine. For a space after the war there was an inclination to think of electric power as on the decline. In the popular mind the trolley car was doomed by the motor bus. Only of late has electricity forged to the front with impressive phrases like Super Power and White Coal. They describe an approaching reality that has already been attained on a large scale in Europe. Austria, Germany, France have made great strides in the development of electric power. Italy almost stakes her future on it. In the Soviet Republic, Lenin captured the imagination with the promise of an electrified Russia. The water power of the Urals was to turn a sewing machine and switch on an incandescent bulb in every peasant hut. In Great Britain Lloyd George has been preaching a revolution in efficiency by turning coal into electricity at the pithead.

In 1919 the public utility plants drew 62 per cent. of their current from fuel—coal, oil and gas—and 28 per cent. from water. In 1924 fuel accounted for 66 per cent. Whatever the source of light and power, it is evident that in certain respects the field for electric current has been only scratched. In 1920 the telephone was being utilized on nearly 39 per cent. of the nation's farms, and the automobile on more than 36 per cent., but only 7 per cent. of the farmers enjoyed modern illumination, either gas or electricity. Of the ultimate possibilities of electric power we have now only the merest promise. There are those who foresee social revolution by the elimination of our overgrown cities through the distribution of power to smaller centres. There is to be a lessening of the lure of metropolitan life by endowing the small town with the comforts of the urban apartment and the splendors of the metropolitan Gay White Ways. The same agency will be employed for running express trains and dish-washing machines.

Such anticipations need not be taken at face value in order to realize one advantage which electricity holds over its elder sister, steam. The latter brought power and wealth, but along with them it brought dirt and grime. The industrial Black Countries have never ceased to weigh on the social conscience. Electric current offers power in combination with cleanliness.—New York Times.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Governments go down in France as fast as the franc.

Saturday's wind gave some impression of what Ottawa people have to put up with when the House is in session.

Now they're worrying about how names should be put on the voters' lists, when the real concern should be over how people are to be persuaded to vote.

Any politician who is looking for a really difficult proposition should tackle the task of opposing Sir Henry Drayton in West York.

CHICAGO GRAINS.

CHICAGO, July 19.—(Canadian Press).—Reports of enlarged crop damage northwest, together with persistent absence of general rains, dominated the wheat market on Saturday, despite heavy selling to realie profits. Closing quotations on wheat were nervous, at the same as yesterdays' finish to one cen higher, with corn varying from 3-8 decline to 7-8 advance, oats unchanged to 1-4 up, and provisions varying from 12c off to a rise of 2 cents.

Rapid fluctuations characteristic of a weather market were the rule on Saturday in the wheat trade, but broadly the trend continued upward. For the most part, speculators appeared bullish, although unwilling to risk a determined stand for large profits. The many strengthening factors in the northwestern crop stiuation were more or less counterbalanced by uncertainty over the price effect of a much increased movement of new wheat looked for next week from the middle west. Expectations are that receipts here on Monday will total 300 cars and that arrivals before the end of the week will be rapidly augumented.

Traders watching the crop reports from the northwest to-day took particular notice of one which said that in the premier spring wheat state, North Dakota, the wheat crop for nearly 200 miles south of the center of the state is ranging from very poor to failure, with the North half varying from poor to good. Abandoned wheat fields in North Dakota, according to a recognized authority, will total 1,000,000 acres. Included among Canadian advices was word that between Edmonton and Calgary, the crop is badly fired.

Corn and oats were responsive to dry weather reports fom the Dakotas, Minnesota., Iowa and Nebraska.

Provisions reflected weakness of hog values.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, Que., July 19.—(Canadian Press).—A market demand for grain stimulated the local produce market here on Saturday, and this was also reflected in an increased enquiry for Western oats, but no price changes were effected. The undertone to the market was firm.

Further advances were scored in flour with an increase of 1-2 to 1 cent a bushel recorded. Some business for local and export account was done. There are indications that values would again be marked up in the near future.

All lines of millfeed were marked up to one dollar a ton, the increase being ascribed to the recent rise in flour values. A steady demand continues from both Canadian and United States buyers.

Egg receipts, 1,331 cases. This compares with 1,486 for last Saturday. The export trade in storage eggs is dull. The market is featureless.

Butter receipts, 5,485 packages as against 6,486 last Saturday. There is an absence of demand for export account and already the supplies are liberal. A steady accumulation of stocks on hand is noted. Purchases locally are mainly for day to day account, and this has resulted in a generally easiness in prices.

Cheese receipts 18,432 boxes as compared with 13,257 last Saturday. There was some demand from speculators on spot and sales of No. 1 white western and colored waxed fere made at 117-12 to 17 cents per pound.

The condition of the market is, however, weak.

Beans were unchanged.

DR. FRANK CRANE'S DAILY EDITORIAL.

LEAVING THE FARM.

By Dr. Frank Crane.

During the past year, according to a report made by the Department of Agriculture, there has been a decrease in the farm population of the United States of nearly half a million.

The year before that it decreased 182,000.

The population of the country as a whole is increasing: that of the rural districts is decreasing.

The definite trend is away from the farm to the city.

A cable from Paris tells the same story.

The population of the country districts of France continues to flow to the large cities in spite of all efforts of the government to stem it.

The general census, just taken, shows a declining population in all rural areas there except those adjacent to large industrial centers.

In America the automobile and the movie have been the two big elements in accelerating this movement from the farm to the city.

In olden times entertainment was found in country affairs: now trips to the city are substituted.

The automobile, making quick runs to the city after supper for movies and other entertainment possible, has given young people of the farming communities a taste of city life in its brightest aspect.

They see the city relaxed. They see it in the role of playboy. And they like it.

The movies, shown in every cross-roads village, picture life in the big city as one of adventure, fine clothes and quick wealth.

There is no hay to pitch, no mules to curry and no meadow larks to listen to before dawn.

However, the dust-filled, sardine-can subways and the high cost of living in the city are left out of the picture.

"The farm is where they work: the city is where they play."

This idea abetted by the auto and movie has its effect in leading young people on the farms to choose the city when they grow up.

It has played a large part in the trend toward urban life which has been noted in recent years.

HOW DO YOU SAY IT?

(By C. N. Lurie.)

Common Errors in English and How To Avoid Them.

(Copyright, McClure Syndicate.)

"NO USE OF ASKING."

"I wanted to leave the office early today, but I knew it was no use of asking the manager's permission."

The phrase or expression used in the foregoing sentence, "no use of asking," is quite common, but it is not considered good English by the grammarians—say instead, "no use in asking."

In this connection, it may be noted that the expression, "to have no use for," meaning to feel a contempt for, or to wish to have nothing to do with, is not considered good English, and is frowned upon by grammarians and other authorities, who call it slang.

It is perfectly correct to say, "I used to go there," meaning, "I was accustomed to going there," but one should be careful, in pronouncing the words, to avoid the vulgarism of calling them "yuster," as is frequently heard.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Over in the eastern lands where they talk in flowers they weave a garland without words—they arrange a bouquet or assemble these "stars of earth" in such a way that human hearts commune without conversation.

Flowers are lover's language—sentiment's sweetest way of saying what no words can tell.

Flowers tell the pure and tender thoughts of the heart and this is why the human heart selects flowers for the finest expressions of its more sincere sympathies.

The thoughts that flowers express never have to be spoken or written. Each and every heart understands the magic language of flowers.

MYSTERIOUS FIRES TO BE INVESTIGATED

Firebug Believed To Be At Work Burning Barns.

KINGSTON, July 19.—The Ontario Fire Marshal is to investigate several fires which have occurred near Oconto, in Frontenac County, recently. The people of the district are of the opinion that the fires are the work of a firebug, and feeling runs high.

The latest blaze was at the barns of Charles Gerrity, which were destroyed on Thursday night. Fire broke out about the same time and in the same mysterious way that has characterized the other cases. One of the insurance companies has decided to bring the matter to a head, and has asked the Fire Marshal to investigate.

Suspicions are rife in the district, and it is felt that nothing but a thorough investigation into all the conditions surrounding the fires will clear the air.

MINES SUMMARY.

Castle Trethewey.

GOWGANDA, July 17.—On the 475-foot level drifting is now under way on what is believed to be the downward extension of No. 26 vein which on surface shows high-grade. This drift is now following a good vein and is just coming in to the productive ore horizon. There is every indication that it will prove to be a producer of no mean size. Cross-cutting north and south in this area is also being carried on. Considerable work is being done on surface opening up Nos. 19 and 26, and to date there shows a length of some 400 feet which in places is extremely high-grade. Castle's future looks very bright.

Tonopah.

Work of erecting the mill on this property is well under way and is being hurried to completion. Most of the equipment has been ordered and foundations for it have been put in. The winze on the 300-foot level on the Morrison property is still in good ore with extremely high-grade ore still coming in occasionally.

Capitol.

A geological study is being made of this property. The surface explorations will determine Capitol's future policy. They have a big property, part of which shows favorable geology, which makes the chances for location ore appear to be good. Twenty-five men are working here.

Beaver.

Cross-cutting on the 700-foot level, with nothing of importance opened up. They are still having trouble with the water, so that the 1,000-foot level has not as yet been reached. The two faults that were encountered in the shaft are a favorable sign, particularly in that district, as they seem to be necessary for ore deposition and the chances of Beaver finding payable ore appear to be fair.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

CONFEDERATION WAS HASTENED BY U.S. CIVIL WAR

Is Opinion of Newly Elected President of Ontario Historical Society.

ANGER OF NORTH.

Canadian Sympathy at Lincoln's Death Ended Reprisal Talk.

That the American Civil War had an important bearing on the federation of the Canadian provinces into the Dominion of Canada in 1867 was the opinion expressed recently by Prof. Fred Dandon of the University of Western Ontario and newly-elected president of the Ontario Historical society.

Prof. Landon regards the influence of the American Civil War, which he insists was really a war of independence for the southern states, as being one of the important, though seldom discussed phases of confederation. During the war in the United States, certain Canadians showed marked sympathy to the southern states by harboring spies and agents of the Confederate army and also in permitting plots to be hatched in Canada. This riled the American north and the New York newspapers frequently discussed reprisals and annexation of Canada. Prof. Landon believes that this peril alarmed the Canadian statesmen of that period to the extent that they forgot their almost insurmountable differences and hastened the federation of the provinces against a common danger.

Documents of the period indicate this. Sir John A. Macdonald himself tells how he and his great political enemy, George Brown, buried the hatchet for the nonce and went to England together to hasten the passing of the British North American Act, and, although they had not been on speaking terms previously, they ate and played cards together. Then, when the Confederation was completed, they resumed their old relations.

The situation between the American north and Canada looked serious at the close of the Civil War, Prof. Landon stated. The New York papers talked of having a reckoning with Canada. And then came the assassination of President Lincoln and a complete change of sentiment in the United States. Such a wave of sympathy swept Canada as has never before or after been shown for an outsider. Towns and cities declared public holidays to hold memorial services. The New York press that had been talking about reckonings promptly commented on the Canadian demonstration of sympathy and the fact that the Americans seemed to have misunderstood the people to the north. Gradually the bitterness subsided and the menace to Canada disappeared.

Prof. Landon described President Lincoln's death at that time as "the tide of God," and as having a bearing on the relationship of Canada and the United States like the death of Christ on the cross had on the world.

FALLS INTO WATER.

Toronto Man Stricken With Heart Failure, Falls Off Oshawa Breakwater.

OSHAWA, Ont., July 19. — The first fatality of the summer season at Oshawa on the lake occurred yesterday when James Maynard, of Main Street, Toronto, who with his family are spending their vacation at the water's edge here, fell over into the water at the newly made breakwater on the south shore of the marsh. Maynard was standing on the breakwater when a man in a boat passed and spoke to him, and directly after heard a splash. When the man turned to see what had happened, not seeing Maynard, he raised an alarm.

After considerable efforts the body was recovered and a hurried call sent into the city for medical aid. Artificial respiration was applied but without avail. From those who were on the scene of the fatality, it was learned that no water was found in the lungs, and it is supposed that he was suddenly overcome with a heart attack. Deceased was a former employee of the Oshawa Street Railway and formerly worked as a news agent on the Canadian National and owned property at the lake front.

VALUABLE NEW VARIETY OF PEA BEING INTRODUCED THIS SPRING

McKay is Name of Strain Developed at Experimental Farm.

HEAVY YIELD

Provides Good Length of Straw in Addition to Grain.

(Experimental Farms Note.)

Announcement is made by the Experimental Farms' Branch of the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, of the introduction this spring, of a valuable new variety of Field Peas called MacKay. This variety is a selection from a cross made at Ottawa many years ago between a variety known as Mummy and another known as Black Eye Marrowfat.

MacKay is a very vigorous growing white flowered variety producing a rather dark cream coloured pea with a black hilum (eye).

On the average for the past five years at the Central Farm at Ottawa the above variety has yielded over 10 bushels more per acre than the well-known variety called Arthur. In length of straw it has excelled the latter variety by thirteen inches, averaging only one inch less than the famous forage variety called Prussian Blue, which variety it has excelled in yield of grain by over 6 bushels per acre. The new introduction has been a consistently high yielder at most the Branch Farms and Stations throughout Canada and is recommended for trial wherever peas are grown throughout the Dominion, except, possibly, where a very early maturing sort is required.

For growing with such varieties of oats as O. A. C. 72, Banner or Victory for the production of hay, MacKay is the vaiety now recommended. The rate of seeding, when grown for the above purpose, is 1 bushel of peas to 2 bushels of oats, the crop being cut when the oats have reached the early dough stage. This mixture, under reasonably favourable conditions, may be expected to produce a very heavy tonnage, even rivalling corn as a producer of feed units per acre in some districts.

When allowed to mature, MacKay, which is a relatively late maturing variety, will ripen well with any one of the above varieties of oats, which fact gives the variety a peculiar advantage over varieties which mature too early. Thus should any circumstance arise, such as wet weather at haying time, the mixture may be allowed to mature although the original intention may have been to make hay of it. It is also possible to allow a sufficient acreage to mature in any case, to provide seed for the following year.

Where grown alone for the production of grain, three bushels per acre is the rate of seeding recommended in most districts, owing to the large size of the pea.

The Secretary of the Canadian Seed Growers' Association, Ottawa, has made arrangements for supplying, in small quantities, a limited amount of this new variety.—L. H. Newman, Dominion Cerealist.

Prof. Vilhalm Bjerknes, who has been awarded by the National Academy of Science the Agassiz Medal, one of the highest honors in the gift of American science. His father was a famous investigator of the physical properties of water and other liquids, and when he died he passed his problem to his son, who has continued in the same field.

MANURE PILE IS FARM NECESSITY

Great Loss Every Year Through Improper Handling of Refuse.

PIT IS GOOD

In a ton of cow manure the liquid part is equal to 61 per cent of the total value. Ontario with her thousands of cows experiences a rtemendous waste each year, partly through neglect and partly because it is human to shun all things considered unclean. Every precaution should be taken to save the liquid, as well as the solids. Fermentation or rotting goes on rapidly in dry loosely piled manure. Nitrogen escapes in the form of ammonia, and the potash and phosphorous are made soluble. Once in gaseous or soluble condition these valuable elements get away through leaching or washing by rains, or by evaporation. Returning to from whence they came, not waiting for the neglectful. The losses due to the changes caused by fermentations and weathering are so commonplace with many farm people that they continue the practice as a matter of course.

Concrete floors and gutters in the stables and feed yards, together with a cement manure pit in which manure may be stored, is the equipment necessary to prevent loss, and insure the proper making of manure. A ten cow herd requires a pit 16 x 16 by four feet deep. The manure from a twenty cow herd can be taken care of in a pit 24 x 20 by four feet deep. A small tank can be arranged at one end, into which the unabsorbed liquid may run. This can be used as it is, or pumped back over the pile to prevent heating. The pit should be covered by a suitable roof. This will keep out the rain, support the manure carrier track and provide shelter for the driveway.

Many of the disease conditions common to live stock are harbored in the manure and for this reason alone it pays well to keep the stock away from the manure pile. Plan and build to prevent waste of fertility, unsanitary conditions and for the maintenance of the health of the farm live stock.—L. Stevenson, Dept. of Extension, O. A. College, Guelph.

KILLED ON TRACKS.

Mysterious Death of Italian Laborer—Believed To Be Suicide.

MILTON, Ont., July 19.—A fatal accident occurred about five miles west of Milton on Saturday, when an unmarried Italian, Luigi Sertori, aged 25 years, of Hespeler, formerly of Christie, was killed on the C.P.R. tracks.

Sertori, who was employed at the lime kilns at Hespeler, was on his way to visit friends at Christie, four miles west of Milton. Getting off the eastbound passenger train at Guelph Junction, he started to walk east on the track towards Christie, although the train stops regularly at his destination. He had only walked a short distance when, as the fireman of the engine and other eye-witnesses state, he either slipped or deliberately threw himself on the track in front of the engine, which killed him instantly. An inquest was opened by Dr. H. A. McColl, coroner of Milton, and adjourned to Thursday next, at 7.30 p.m.

In one of Sertori's pockets was found a list of names of Italians and others who had subscribed to a fund to help the family of the late P. Zecca, who committed suicide a few weeks ago by blowing his head off with a shot gun at his home at Christie. Both Zecca and Sertori had been taking trips to Toronto to take treatments from a specialist, and it was suggested at the inquest Saturday that this man be summoned to attend the adjourned inquest as it is generally believed that Sertori committeed suicide. The object of asking the specialist to appear at the inquest is to ascertain what the two Italians were suffering from.

PILES GO QUICK

Without Salves or Cutting.

Thousands who have piles have not learned that quick and permanent relief can only be accomplished with internal medicine. Neither cutting nor any amount of treatment with ointments and suppositories will remove the cause.

Bad circulation causes piles. There is a complete stagnation of blood in the lower bowel and a weakening of the parts. Dr. J. S. Leonhardt was first to find the remedy and called his precription HEM-ROID. Dr. Leonhardt tried it in 1000 cases with the marvelous record of success in 98 per cent. and then decided it should be sold by druggists everywhere under a rigid money-back guarantee.

Don't waste any more time with outside application. Get a package of HEM-ROID from McDermid & Jury. to-day. It has given safe and lasting relief to thousands and will do the same for you.

CLIMATE MADE TO ORDER BY SCIENCE

Climate Factories Established the John Hopkins University, Baltimore.

It's a sweltering day in midsummer. Lifeless, muggy air seems to close in upon you like an oppressive wall as you try to go through the day's work. Somehow your job has lost its thrill. Tasks that ordinarily command your interest become plain drudgery.

"Its not the heat," you say; "it's the humidity. I could stand the heat if it weren't for this muggy air."

The commonly accepted explanation for excessive discomfort on hot, muggy days has been that humid air —that is, air saturated with moisture —raises the temperature of our bodies by preventingr the cooling evapoation of moisture from the skin. The latest experiments, however, says Popular Science Monthly for August, seem to show that the extent of our discomfort depends not so much on the rise in body temperature as on the increased speed with which our hearts beat. They have led to other discoveries, too, concerning the influence of hot weather on the endurance of our muscles, nerves and senses — discoveries which promise future benefits in promoting the efficiency of workers and determining the effect of weather on bodily resistance to disease.

This new knowledge is being brought to us largely through the perfection of a remarkable mechanical apparatus with which it is now possible to manufacture all kinds of climate to order in the scientist's laboratory; in other words, to reproduce artificially the varying changes of atmosphere and temperature nature hands out to us day after day. Such "climate factories" recently have been established at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore under the direction of Dr. H. W. Howell, professor of physiology, and by the U. S. Bureau of Mines.

Tests of human subjects with this apparatus have shattered a number of popular beliefs about hot weather. For one thing the belief that there is danger of cramps from drinking ice water while exposed to high temperatures was found to be groundless. Two subjects exposed to extreme heat consumed a quart of ice water within a period of fifteen minutes without suffering ill effects. It was revealed further that the world has wasted a lot of sympathy on fat people, who always are supposed to be the greatest sufferers in hot weather. It was found that fat subjects could stand the heat much longer than thin ones. The stout men grumbled less, too, and complained less of exhaustion.

BIG FEET MADE HIM CHAMPION SWIMMER

Johnny Weissmuller's Number Elevens Helped Paddle Him to Fame.

Large feet have had much to do with giving Johnny Weissmuller, at the age of twenty-one, the right to call himself, and to be proclaimed, the world's premier swimmer. Even as a kid, out at the Larrabee Street Y.M.C.A., Chicago, where Johnny first began to attract attention from swimming coaches, his feet stood him in good stead, for in them the coaches saw the "paddles" that might enable him to develop into the fastest human in the world before he even reached maturity.

And Weissmuller has done just that!

More than half the world's records for men's free style swimming were owned and controlled by the big-footed, long, lean lad from America when the last statistics were made public by the International Amateur Swimming Federation in 1925. Since that time Weissmuller has added to the list, and has mastered the back stroke, establishing new records in the events under that classification.

According to the Amateur Athletic Union of America, in its latest publication of records, which cannot keep up with Johnny's smashing six-beat, double trudgeon crawl stroke he holds thirty-two out of sixty records for all individual swimming efforts, and certifications of additional forays into the sixty are now in the hands of the Union, and have been favorably acted upon. Among them is the amazing time of fifty-one and one-fifth seconds for the 100-yard free style event, which cut his previous world record by one and one-fifth seconds.

Back in 1919 Johnny was like all the other boys in the North avenue neighborhood, which was adjacent to Lake Michigan. He had spent much of his time swimming and playing about in the lake—and he was good then.

"I watched the life guards, and all the good swimmers," he explains in the August Popular Science Monthly, telling how it all started. "I copied the strokes from all of them, until I guess I didn't have any style at all."

Even with his crazy style, however, he could beat any kid on the beach except one "Hooks" Hugo Miller, and it was Johnny's ambition to beat "Hooks" that really started him on his way to swimming glory. Later it was "Hooks" who put his friend on the right road to success by introducing him to Coach William Backrach, swimming trainer for the Illinois Athletic Club.

"Bachrach got right after me," says Johnny. "He taught me to get in an extra kick. He taught me how to pull the water with my hands so that I could get more power from each stroke. He made me throw my right shoulder higher, and helped me put an arch in my back that enables me to swim with the least possibly body resistance in the water."

Coach Bachrach, in turn, says that Weissmuller has "the great gift of muscular co-ordination." Because of this, and also because he can think when racing—and also because his feet feel snug in No. 11 shoes—the lad from Chicago can swim faster than any man on earth.

OVERPOWER WOMAN ROB APARTMENT

Toronto Woman Has Harrowing Experience—Is Suffering From Shock.

TORONTO, July 19.—To have two unknown men rush up from behind, seize, bind and gag her while she was dusting in the front room of her apartment at 430 Roncesvalles Avenue, was the horrowing experience of Miss Teena Tennant on Saturday afternoon. As yet the unknown men, who took some money from an adjoining room, have not been located, nor has their identity been revealed. Outside of a bruised side, Miss Tennant had no physical injuries as a result of her experience, but she is suffering greatly from shock.

The thieves entered the apartment, which is on the second floor, by a flight of steps leading up from the courtyard in the rear. Advancing quickly behind Miss Tennant, they seized and quickly overpowered her. While one of the men tied her hands securely, the other seized the duster which she was using and gagged her with it, tying it around her head.

Leaving the front room, the pair searched the other rooms of the apartment and found $35 in the top dresser drawer of the room occupied by A. Tennant, the girl's father, who is employed by the Laidlaw Lumber Company. The thieves took the money and left the place by the same route as they entered.

Although she was bound and gagged, Miss Tennant was able to make her way downstairs, where she was released by a neighbor. Her father was immediately communicated with. It is thought that the thieves, who are described by Miss Tennant as being about five feet seven inches in height and dressed in dark suits, must have been familiar with the movements of Mr. Tennant, as he invariably spends his Saturday afternoons at home, but on Saturday last stayed at work.

DREAMERS VICTIMS OF MEMORY LAPSE

Amnesia Causes Hundreds To Drop From Sight Each Year.

Are you a dreamer? Do you find yourself staring continually far beyond the hard facts and responsibilities of the everyday grind—the bills, the family difficulties, a desk piled high with work, the maddening sameness of a drab existence? And does your tired mind seek relief by shutting out the details of the actual world about you and by conjuring up visions of a life so different that there sems no hope of bringing it about?

If so—if you grow to hate what you are doing and become a painter of fantasies, in your heart shirking the responsibilities, which outwardly you shoulder—then some day, before you are aware of it, there is a chance that your weary nervous system may choose an astonishing way of taking a rest. In an instant you may lost your identity. Your humdrum life, your family, your friends, your memory of the past—all may be blotted out of your mind as completely as if they never had been. And you may wander away, counted as dead by the world you have known, to take you place as a new person in new surroundings.

Months or even years later you may "come to." In a flash all the memories of the first life may return, and you may awake again to your old personality.

Such is amnesia, one of the strangest and most baffling, yet one of the most interesting of all mental pranks known to man. It is defined simply as "loss of memory." Yet so mysteriously does it come and so odd are its effects in many cases, writes Edwin Ketchum in Popular Science Monthly for August, that physicians have been at a loss to trace its causes or to prescribe definite remedies. They have found, however, that very often its victims are dreamers. The more practical person, they say, seldom falls victim to the mental disturbance which every year causes hundreds of men and women to drop suddenly from sight as if the earth had swallowed them up.

The most common form of the ailment is known as hysterical or "dreamer's" amnesia, as distinguished from the serious form of epileptic amnesia, or organic disorder which sometimes results in criminal acts or suicide.

Dr. Menas S. Gregory, noted authority on mental diseases at Bellevue Hospital, New York City, declared recently that many cases of hysterical amnesia can be avoided simply by facing disagreeable facts and surroundings, instead of trying to escape them.

"For instance," he said, "if a man is unhappy in his home, but hasn't the moral courage to face the situation, he is the type likely to have amnesia. He lets the situation prey on his mind, not having the will power to set things right, and at the same time shirking the unpleasantness of telling his wife the truth, until his nervous system becomes so impaired as to bring about a mental break. He is a man accustomed to doing things in the easiest way, following the line of least resistance. Amnesia is his way of escaping reality. If he could face the siutation squarely, the mental break would never happen."

There was a large crowd out to meet them, and the splendid singing and addresses were enjoyed by all present. We hope they will come soon again.

Rev. Mr. Totten of Cavan visited at the home of Mr. Melville Jones on Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Shield, Mr. and Mrs. Fred. Cann, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Scott and the Misses May King and Clare Cann of Peterboro attended the garden party on Tuesday evening.

Strawberry Festival.

The Mount Pleasant branch of East Durham Women's Institute held a very successful strawberry festival and garden party on Tuesday evening, July 6, on the lawn of the former Methodist Church. There was a large audience and the proceeds were very gratifying. A game of softball was played between Omemee and Mount Pleasant girls teams. The usual good supper was served by the ladies, the main item on the menu being strawberries. The tables were decorated with daisies and orange crepe paper. After supper an evening's entertainment was given in the church by Mr. Chas. A. Cooke, Canada's Indian entertainer, from Ottawa, who delighted the audience with his humorous songs, recitations, etc., and during the entermissions a piano duet was given by Mrs. L. H. Winslow and Mr. Herman McLean, and a piano solo by Mr. Herman McLean, who also accompanied Mr. Cook. Mr. Garnet Shield acted as chairman in his usual capable manner. Messrs. Herbert Lowes and Eric McLean had charge of the booth. A good time was enjoyed by all present, and the institute is to be congratulated on the success of the evening.

St. John's Picnic.

St. John's Church, Ida, held their picnic on July 1 to Wallace's Point. A good time was reported by all present.

FIRST CIRCUS DAY.

F. H. Dobbin Recalls Visit Of Sears Brothers and O'Connell's Gigantic Show in 1868.

Touching the matter of elephants, ever a ponderous and highly interesting spectacle to the juniors and edifying to those of longer years, for the elephant, when he is enrolled in the panoply and display of the circus, places the hall mark of reliability on the promises that the placards on the bill-boards flaunt, that all who ride may read. Today, with the incoming of the motor, no one runs and reads. It's not done, you know.

And as to those elephants. Word came along the street that there were no less than thirty-two on the grounds, and that it required twenty-four tons of hay to feed the thirty-one huge beasts, or was it thirty-one tons for the twenty-four. Anyway the provender provided quite a meal.

My, it was a real deprivation, the lack of the street parade. And on the last day of school, too. It was rumored that the city council had placed such a price on the license to show that the parade had been cancelled. Not so, for no council would willingly deprive the kids of the rare and rich sight, for the Aldermen were once kids, themselves, and have a broad human sympathy for little fellers and small girls.

In writing this writing it was the intention to tell of the first appearance in Peterborough of the astonishing foreigner, the elephant. When he arrived he was not a very large specimen. There were two of him, but enough to form an attraction. He came with the first circus to put up a show on the town plot, in the autumn of the year 1858, sixty-eight years ago. The cavalcade was known as Sears' Bros. and O'Connell's Gigantic Show. For several weeks the modest handbills, supplemented by a few flaring streamers, had been placarded on the fences and blacksmith shops of the town and on the country roads wherever a barn or other structure afforded wall space. The cavalcade travelled by road, making use of wagons and vans and other vehicles. It came from the East, and reached town by way of the road from Norwood, where it didn't show, but at Belleville. As many as twenty rigs in the dusty procession, for the retinue had been all night on the road. And then the speed limit was fixed by the capacity of the elephants to step out and keep moving at the head of the procession. Putting them at the front ensured that they should not carelessly get out of line and step on a misplaced buggy or loitering wagon.

Welcomed By Boys.

It was felt by the boy population of the town that the visiting cavalcade should be properly received and accompanied fom the township to within the town limits, or rather the limits of Ashburnham, as East City was at the time known. In fact it had just ceased being known as the Scotch village, though for what reason, has never been divulged, for most of the natives were of good Irish extraction. So about four o'clock in the morning, of a September day, all boys who could sneak out of their homes unnoticed, barefooted and straw hatted hiked to the East, climbed over Armour's Hill, for a short cut, and met the procession about three miles out on the country road, making its way rather slowly and cussing the elephants for ambling so slowly. The boys were warned off the road, and had to navigate back precariously, on the sides of the ditches and inside the snake fences that bordered the fields. As the crops had been recently cut, most of the time of the trip the boys were squatting on the heaps of stines that adorned the fields picking the thistles out of the soles of bare feet.

The parade wound its way slowly along, passed down Concession road, along Douro street and by way of Elizabeth street (now Hunter street East), reached the bridge over the Otonabee river. Here it came to a halt. Indeed more than a halt, a stoppage. At the eastern end of the bridge was the Warden of the newly formed County, and he stoutly refused to allow the elephants to be driven over the bridge. The structure, he averred, was all right for a team load or two of green lumber, but as for elephants, none for him. The bridge (built by public subcription) was not calculated to stand such abnormal strains. The Mayor of the town was on hand, but he was not so much concerned, for he knew that the elephants would have to attempt the county side, or share of the bridge, before tramping over the town side, and if the county side stood the passage, why then....

Fording the Stream.

His further speculations were cut short by a movement of the elephants backward, to the entrance of the road, or lane, that gives access to the now ball park. Several local industries were standing along the road, including John Clarke's tannery. The big animals were driven through the tannery yard to the edge of the river and urged to make a passage, on foot, at the place where the old ford, used by the first settlers provided something of a safe footing in the bed of the river for horses and cattle. It was no trick, seemingly, for the elephants to wade a stream. And while the bridge and shores were lined by the entire population of the town and environs, the beasts strode in, the deepest part of the water coming about up to their seamed and rugged back, and whooping tokens of approval walked out on the shore of an island, just opposite the gas works. Apparently they were of a mind that they were disporting themselves on the banks of the Congo or other native river, for they immediately plunged in again, and floundeed around, to the dismay of the trainer or gamekeeper or caretaker, which ever expression be correct. Nor would they be ordered out, but stayed and drawing up huge trunkfulls of water squirted it over one another in great glee. Talk about bathing facilities, here was the real thing.

Then some fertile mind hit on an idea. Two of the spectators, those hanging around are always willing to get into trouble, travelled up shore for fifty yards and borrowed a punt that belong to Lex. Cope. Cope, who was a turner by trade, fell in with the idea, and supplied, in addition to the transportation, a long ash pole with one end sharpened to a delicate point. The two men, John Cragie and Parley Ayres, floated down stream, and getting behind the largest elephant, prodded him from the rear in an effort to get him forward to the other side, (the after to be gas house side) of the stream. Such form of Christian endeavor invariably brings its speedy and effectual reward. The elephant dipped his trunk in the drink, filled it with pure and sparkling river water, and gave the two in the punt the surprise of their lives. They were drenched as effectually as if the hand fire engine had turned on a two inch stream. The other elephant caught the infection and turned and helped. When the punt made for shore they followed it and bestowed large portions of water on the inmates. It was a great day for Ireland. The crowd roared and cheered and some one proposed a collection for the benefit of the elephants.

Strategy is Successful.

Then the caretaker came to the rescue. He was a man of parts, he was. He sensed that strategy might accomplish wonders where brute force failed. He and two others repaired to the show ground, a short distance along Simcoe street and came back with large armfuls of hay. It was now about nine o'clock of the morning, and the elephants had not had breakfast. What Bryon termed "the tocsin of the soul, the dinner bell", appealed to them at once. The men waded through the shallow water to and across the island and exhibited the inducements, to which the gamboliers responded. They came out of the river and followed hastily to shore and while lunching were securely pegged and haltered by both front legs.

But to return to this, the First Circus. The "big top," not a very large canopy, was pitched on the ground now covered by the home of Roland Denne, on Simcoe street, opposite the entrance to Queen street. There was nothing on the corner but the old Government log building, that was presently to be burned down or taken away. There was quite a space of ground to the south of the dwelling, now covered by the buildings along Water street. In all there was quite room enough for the circus and for the crowd. The admission fee was one shilling, or twenty-five cents. How the concern managed to get along on such a trifling fee was never divulged. But the buying power of a little real money in those years was really marvellous.

Only two side shows accompanied the circus. A few desolate and dejected animals formed the menagerie. A bear (black), a couple of wolves, a cage of monkeys and one of parrots and an eagle or two, with a horned pig. Indeed there were those who affirmed that the horn was artificial and only glued on its head. Its grunt was all right and sounded like home. There were four horses for the "big ring," a space about twenty-five feet in diameter, which was outlined by the ground being plowed up to form a border. But in one thing the accomodation excelled, there was plenty of sawdust. Loads of it. Three inches thick in the ring space and mounds of it scattered along the seats and paths. The circus had struck the Home of Sawdust for a certainty. The ringmaster put on a claw-hammer coat and a white tie as concessions to ideas of social importance, and occasionally wore a plug hat, to be knocked about by the one and only clown. It is said that in after years, (thirty, or more), this same maker of fun was to re-visit Peterborough as one of the Robinson Bros., owners and managers of the circus that showed in the town in 1891. Taken altogether it was a day. The hotels and saloons did a thriving trade, all sorts of improvised eating places were in luck, a viand particularly in favor was hard-boiled eggs. But eggs at the time could be had for 10 cents the dozen. In that age of the world the hot dog had not fyled an appearance.

Some Excitement.

During the afternoon an incident caused some excitement. In backing one of the heaviest wagons to the extreme edge of the lot (towards the edge of the bank, above the shore of the river) the hind wheels disappeared into an excavation, upsetting the contents of the vehicle. Inspection showed that the rig had fallen into a cave, or excavation made in the bank, and for quite a distance. One of the elephants was brought and the wagon pulled out and in the hollow was found some old and mildewed clothing, a rusty gun, a couple of old pots, a frying pan and an axe. It was conjectured that the find was all that remained of the time of the Robinson immigration, when many of those who came to settle in Peteborough(to be afterwards named), lived for nearly eighteen months in shellings and covering, along the banks of the river, the shelters being made of slabs, bark, and poles, and built, partly in the ground behind. It was a case of any port in a storm.

"Circus Day, has ever been a great day for the people. No spectacle offers so much for so little money as the circus. It shows the benefit of organization and incredible system and that misused word, efficiency. All methods of management and order pale beside that of the circus. To come, move its countless belongings, entertain the multitude, and then disappear inside the twenty-four hours displays a marvel of concentration and utility. Circus day has given pleasure to men, women and boys and girls, as it is designed to do, and it has brought its tragedies, as well. Many times have extra constables been sworn in that they might be at hand to suppress disorder. For there were ever those who wished to make a fuss for the sake of a fuss. Minor hostilities there have been and two or three deplorable happenings.

A Point of Time.

For many years circus day has been an infallible point or time from which to date other happenings. A sort of local snubbing post from which to reckon forward or backward. To identify times and places, incident and story. Dates were not of consequence so long as circus day was the positive event in question. And for the sake of people wish to remember, indeed to settle bets, and modify disputes, suppose we supply an authorative list of the circus days Peterborough has seen during the last fifty years. Here they are:

1880. Forepaugh's Great Show. Displayed on the grounds bounded by Stewart, Rink and Bethune streets.
1881. Sept. 9. Cole Brothers' Mammoth Show.
1882. Meyer's and Smith's Collossal Circus, August 12.
1884. Sept. 15. Forepaugh's Circus here.
1885. Doris' Monster Hippodrome and Circus.
1886. August 21. Forepaughs' Circus exhibits.
1888. June 23. Howe's Unrivalled Circus and Menagerie. This circus exhibited on the market square.
1889. Sept. 3. Barnum and Bailey's Giant Circus.
1891. Sept. 8. Robinson Bros. Big Ssow. This circus opened in Ashburnham.
1895. Aug. 24. Sells' Bros. Circus here.
1899. June 24. Forepaugh's and Burke's Bros. Circus.
1901. June 14. Ringling's Circus shows in town.
1904. July 2. Forepaugh's and Sells' Bros. Show here.
1906. June 8. Coles Bros. show here.
1906. Aug. 10 Barnum and Bailey's Circus. Draws the largest crowd to the city and has largest attendance of any circus as yet exhibiting.
1908. June 17. Coles Bros.' Circus and Wild Animals.
1913. June 23. Barnum and Bailey's Circus here. An employee of the circus, Joe Ryan, hired a canoe and went fishing in the river. He was drowned the Sunday afternoon, following the cicus day.

A Tragedy.

Mention has been made of a tragedy. Howe's Circus showed here on June 24th, 1888. An employee of the circus named W. Farley, shot and killed another employee, an Indian name Elijah, or Simon Elijah, from the Oneida reservation, N.Y. The wounded man was taken to the hospital, where he died. An inquest followed, while the circus passed on. Farley was held for trial, and on October 12th was found guilty and sentenced to be hung on November 8th, following. Great interest was shown in the case and strong endeavor made to have the sentence commuted to imprisonment for life. A mass meeting of workingmen was held, of those inteersted in the situation and petitions were signed and forwarded to the Minister of Justice, at Ottawa, asking for clemency. The Council, at the request of citizens, supported the appeal and forwarded a memorial praying for mercy.

On October 27th, Mayor James Stevenson, who had presented the memorial, advised that the efforts had met with success. Further, a very handsomely and elaborately prepared complimentary resolution, suitably illuminated and framed expressing thanks to the Mayor, Council and citizens was received from relatives and friends of Farley, living in his home town. This production hung, for many years, in the city council room, and for its beautiful and elaborate illumination and script was generally admired.

DEAL CALLED OFF.

Proposed Sale of White Star Line Suddenly Falls Through.

NEW YORK, July 19.—Although ratified without question or dissenting vote at a meeting of International Mercantile Marine Company stockholders on June 18, the proposed sale of the White Star Line to a British syndicate was suddenly called off in London yesterday, without explanation.

At the special stockholders meetings, P. A. S. Franklin, president of the International Mercantile Marine, explained that the sale up to that time had been left in a tentative stage because of the development of the British general strike and because the prospective buyers—headed by Furness, Withy and Company, had stated they could take final action only after a thorough audit of the company's books.

It was taken for granted, however, that the deal was practically complete, since stockholders are seldom called upon to ratify a proposal of this nature, while it is certain of consummation, Mr. Franklin went to London recently for the purpose of contributing negotiations. The proposal ratified by stockholders was for sale of the White Star ships representing 500,000 tons and the best of the I.M.M. flet, for between £7,000,000 and £7,500,000 depending upon the amount of cash paid and the nature of deferred payments, if any. It was also made clear that as a condition of the sale the I.M.M. would "withdraw from certain specified trades now covered by the White Star Line."

He who covets what belongs to another deservedly loses his own.

The ORACLE

This day we fashion Destiny, our web of Fate we spin —Whittier.

Fixed fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute. —Milton.

Ann.—You have a strong, active, creative nature, rather domineering, but logical. Circumstances of your life point to the road of happiness along the line of loving service to others, so that you will have to fight some of the traits of your nature at times to ensure peace to yourself and those about you. You are very strong in your likes and dislikes, and thrive best when surrounded by those you care for. You are fearul of poverty, burglars and robbery, and dread being left alone at night. You are noble and large-hearted, but are inclined to be jealous of your friends and companions. You are fond of money and may develop a miserly habit as you grow older. Youhave stong healing powers within yourself but shoud guard against the inroads of any disease, as medicine is slow to act with you. Watch your throat, lungs and kidneys. You are rather changeful, and resent very keenly any personal criticism. Seek always good cheer and sunshine, and try to conquer your sensitiveness. You were born on Sunday. Your colors are the many variations of flame, ranging from yellow to gas blue.

L. P.—You have a natural ability to do well in things pertaining to business or commerce. However, you have a certain quality of fickleness and change in your makeup that will not always make for happiness or stability in your life. You have a good deal of will power and considerable skill with your hands. You are fond of good things to eat and to wear. You have the very bad habit of putting things off, and you like praise and flattery too much. You are apt to scold and nag, a very disagreeable trait. At times you wish to work very hard, again you are indolent. You like pleasure, and have a great aversion to rules and regulations. You have a quick temper, a scolding habit, and a tendency to sarcasm. You are inclined to be extravagant. Try not to be so careful of your own feelings, and more tender of the feelings of those about you. Remember that love comes to those who give out love. Marry a man born in June, July, December or January. You were born on Friday. Your colors are tan and buff.

L. E. S.—You should have a very nice life, and not much difficulty in doing what you like with it. You have a peace-loving, gentle nature, with strong influence in art, philanthropy and inspiration. It is essentially the type that is best fitted for marriage. You will find your best success in life along the road of diplomacy and tact. Do not try to gain your ends by the use of force, but by cleverness. You would make a very good nurse or physician. You have only to try hard enough to do things in order to accomplish them, and you have much ability, both of head and hands. You should try, above all else, to cultivate your spiritual nature to the highest point, as you have a tendency toward the material side of life. You are a fine worker in fancy embroidery and have very good taste and sense of color. You are apt to be capricious, and will find this a barrier to a happy married life. Remember that marriage is a life-long contract. Marry a man born in January, September or October. You were born on Wednesday. Your colors are grey and scarlet.

J.A.A.—As the major portion of your life is behind you, you probably know much better than I what have been your stumbling-blocks in life. Or do you? You are not of the type that cares to place the responsibility where it belongs. You were born with a good deal of heavy physical power, creative ability and tenacity, but your life has been ruled to a great extent by change. You have never been able to decide promptly on a course of action, and Fate has had to push you into many of the major happenings of your life. You have worked hard, sometimes too hard, and you have had a large nature, in which the really great qualities have often been smothered by the small faults that have driven your friends to almost despise you at times. You have a large capacity for jealousy and for suspicion. You have tormented yourself and others many a time with this trait, and you have sacrificed much to prove to those associated with you that you could get along without them. Only a very good person, one who could be fine enough to overlook much can get along with your type, and yet, in essential points, you have a very wonderful character. It is not yet too late to look yourself squarely in the face, if you care to.

You were born on Sunday. The day you ask about is one for accepting new positions and undertaking new enterprises. Your colors are blue and cream.

A.R.B.—You should be a very fine type of man, better, perhaps, than you think yourself, as you are of the sort that is inclined to self-depreciation. You will not always make the most use of what talents you have, because you are not assertive enough for your own good. Almost any ignorant person can put you completely in the background, at any time, and you will only feel hurt, and wonder rather helplessly just why such things happen. You are well able to cope with the circumstances of daily life, although they give you many a sting, and your quality of love for your fellow-men will bring you much happiness, although not of a material type, if you can resolve to allow nothing to discourage you. Service to others is your watchword, my friend. You will not make much money, perhaps, as you go through life, and you will get some hard knocks, but there will be many pleasant little events for you along the road. Try and conquer sensitiveness and do not allow other to hurt your feelings. Learn the value of silence and keep your hands and feet still. Do not worry, and do not put all your trust and confidence in one person. Make as many friends as possible and few intimates. You were born on Wednesday. Your colors are red and brown.

H.G.B.—You are rather powerful, physically, and have a good deal of creative power and tenacity. Your way of success in life lies along the road of bringing happiness and joy to others. You will not find this easy, as you are inclined to be selfish and to have the bad habit of taking dislikes to others without any real cause. You have also a very violent temper, at times. Try to control it. It will bring you much unhappiness in life, if unchecked. You are kind-hearted, generous and magnetic, and have the ability to inspire others to good, if you so desire. You are a person of one idea at a time, and do not think much of the judgment of others who disagree with you. But the wisdom of the world is not contained in one head, nor ever will be. You are very fond of home and make an ideal "home maker" and a splendid wife and mother, if you marry the right person. Being controlled mainly by your emotions, you are apt to make a blunder in your choice of a husband. Think carefully before marrying, and marry a man born in September, October or December, only after you have learned to control your temper. You were born on Wednesday. Your colors are blue and silver. The day you ask about, a Thursday, is one for co-operating with your fellows, and lending a helping hand, wherever possible.

C.A.C.—You were born with a great deal of creative power and tenacity, but success in life will not come to you through standing alone. You must always associate yourself carefully with others in any enterprise you take part in, and do not attempt either, to play the lead in others' affairs. You cannot control the destinies of those about you. Do not try. You are a natural leader and thinker, especially in commercial affairs and are active, independent and persevering. You like moving and travel and have a wide and varied acquaintance. You are a good worker, are kind and have a good disposition. When jolly, you are very jolly, and when wretched, are absolutely miserable, without a real reason, sometimes. You would make a good teacher, a manager, or agent, or succeed well, indeed, in any commercial position. You will be most successful when you gain self poise, and absolute control of your temper. Be careful of falls and accidents to your legs, hips and feet, also be careful of stomach trouble. Your mind is so active that you often neglect your personal appearance.

You were born on Friday. Your colors are blue and cream.

I. C. E.—You have a good deal of poise and self-satisfaction in your makeup, and an inclination to conservatism and retirement. You will not shine in a social way, but you have much liking for religious and occult matters. You have too quite a highly developed money-making instinct, and should do well in any commercial or financial enterprise. You have a strong individuality and noble ideals, but you have also a strong temper and are often governed by your emotions, which are not always of the highest type. You should try to control your temper, also a tendency to take a dislike to persons without a real cause, and a tendency to laziness at times. You make an ideal homemaker, and are very fond of home and its comforts. Avoid rich, highly-seasoned foods. You would do best in a city, where the bustling life would take you out of yourself, to a certain extent.

You were born on Sunday. Your colors are steel and purple shades.

Den.—There is a good deal of weakness in your nature, and a good deal of charm. You could do much with your life, but I doubt if you would have the stamina to attempt to correct your very manifest faults. You have naturally a peace-loving, gentle nature, which is marred by jealousy, temper and suspicion at times, and, although you should make a good wife, you will do much to hurt yourself and others by a quality of fickleness and change which keeps you always uncertain of yourself and others. The way in which you can best achieve success and happiness is by loving service to others. You would make a good nurse. In this way—the way of helping those about you—you can control to a great extent faults which may ruin your whole existence. You are suspicious, easily offended, jealous and hot-tempered. You will work very hard at times, and yet spoil it all by your tantalizing demeanor. You crave only for that affection which escapes you, and are tormenting in the way you hold a lover to exacting attention toward yourself. You must learn to conquer indecision of character. Never touch strong drink or drugs. Marry a man born in December. You were born on Tuesday. Your colors are orange and gray.

Meg.—You, like many others, have the mistaken impression that I can read the future. The best I can do is point out the paths which you should follow to secure success, and even this is absolutely worthless if you read it idly and let it pass from your mind.

You should do well in any work involving science or business, but habit or circumstance at present tends to make your life somewhat retired and morbid at times. You will always have to fight shyness and introspection. You are nervous and dissatisfied most of the time, constantly wishing that you were somewhere else and occupied in some other way. You are kind and sympathetic and would make an excellent nurse. When ill yourself, you are very disagreeable. Whining, scolding and fault-finding are your greatest faults. If you try to eradicate these, you may achieve a very lovable disposition. Marry a man born in February or November. You were born on Thursday. Your colors are tan and buff shades. The day you ask about, a Saturday, is one for lending a helping hand and obeying the instructions of superiors.

D. E. F.—You are rather self-satisfied and conservative, being unfavorable to new enterprises of any sort. You are very fond of studying things occult and religious in nature. Your best success in life will be along the lines of business achievement. You have an aptitude for commerce and finance. You are practical and executive, but very impatient of results. You wish to hurry everything to a swift conclusion, and have little sympathy with those who do not see things exactly in the way that you do. You are very honest and conscientious and regard a promise as absolutely sacred. You are apt to love with whole-souled concentration, but resent keenly any interference with your individuality. You mind your own business and keep your own secrets. You should have comparatively few friends and take care not to offend them. Do not try to correct the faults of others. Concentrate on your own, and do not depend on appreciation and gratitude, which will not always reward your kindly actions. Marry a man born in April, August or November. You were born on Wednesday. Your colors are brick and purple. The day you ask about, a Saturday, is one for avoiding arguments and undertaking nothing new, especially in social relations.

M. L. L.—You have a good deal of personal attraction in your makeup, but not overmuch depth. You are inclined to be fickle and changeable, but you have a type of nature, pleasant and amiable, that counteracts this quality to a certain extent. You will find your success in life by always giving loving, personal intimate service to others. You make a good wife. You should have musical ability, if you choose to cultivate it. You have the fortunate faculty of minding your own business, and the affairs of your companions do not cause you much concern. You are practical and executive, and have your own method of doing most things, becoming impatient if your companions do not always see things just as you do. You have not much sympathy with those who have failed to achieve success. Do not rush matters, as you are inclined to do in any undertaking. Cultivate the faculty of not seeing little things which annoy. You were born on Saturday. Your color is pink.

D. E. R.—You have a natural quality, shared by another member of your family, of attraction, combined with a good deal of vacillation and change. To gain success, you must cultivate tact and diplomacy. Cleverness, rather than force, should be your watchword. Tactfulness will not come easily to you, as you are of an enquiring type that is apt to seldom weigh the consequences of words. You have a somewhat irritating habit of asking many questions about things which interest you, notably those matters connected with religion or education, which have a strong appeal. You have a deep love nature and are almost too ready to help those in need. You are not self-assertive or self-reliant enough, and need to cultivate these qualities. An inner nervousness and restlessness will do much to spoil your life, if you do not try to control it while young. Marry a man born in September, October or July. Dress in pale, delicate shades. You may have a serious illness before your thirty-fifth year, but will be quite robust after that. You were born on Sunday. The day you ask about, a Sunday also, is one for acquiring knowledge on and reading informative books. Your color is pink, similar to that of your relative.

R. L. M.—You have a strong character, well equipped to face the circumstances of daily life, but you may never achieve all that you are capable of, on account of a changeful, uncertain quality in your nature that will do much to spoil your success, unless you can watch for, and control it. You have too much self-assertiveness and self-reliance. Although you are keenly interested in matters educational and religious, you are apt to undertake too wide a scope in them and kindred subjects. You will try to attain a wide knowledge of many things, rather than a specialist's lucrative store of information along one line. You are well-fitted for positions of trust and responsibility, and would make a fine cashier, bookkeeper or accountant. You have also a fine feeling for art, architecture and design. An inner restlessness and nervous anxiety should be controlled also by you, and you should try to keep your hands and feet still. Think long before you marry, and then choose a girl born in September, October or July. You were born on Thursday. Your colors are red and brown.

H. E. T.—You have quite a different reading from that given your sister. You have a great deal of attraction in your makeup, but little stability. You have not much depth and are inclined to be fickle and changeable. The best way for you to succeed, at least as long as you remain unmarried, is to work very hard. Keep everlastingly plugging away at your job—whatever that job may be. You are of the type that is said to be the strongest and weakest in the world, endowed with great possibilities, but not always living up to them. You are fond of happiness and seem to have the power of making others about you happy also. You have a high sense of honor, and a great deal of sensitiveness that often causes you much unnecessary worry. You are a natural home builder and will make a good wife, if you resolve to conquer this fickle instinct in your nature. Remember that perfect honesty and truthfulness are necessary to the formation of great characters. Marry a man born in October, January or June. You were born on Thursday, like your sister. Your color is pink.

G. T.—Although you have a nature that is inclined to be retired and withdrawn, with a tendency toward study of the religious and mystical sciences, you will find your happiness and success in life by giving service to others. You would make a good nurse. You are generous, ambitious and talented, full of hope and enthusiasm, and not easily discouraged by defeat. You will find other people quick to advantage of your kindness, so you must guard yourself always against a certain type of confused thinking about others. Try always to seek the company of earnest, steadfast people, and do not allow yourself to ever assume the burdens which may be thrust upon you by selfish companions. You have the bad habit of dropping and losing things, and rarely return a borrowed article, resenting keenly, however, any criticism of this fault. Do not worry and do not give way to a quick temper and you will be successful. Marry a man born in February, May, August or March. Decide early in life what talent you wish to develop and then stick to that one thing. You were born on Thursday. Your colors are steel, purple, brick.

Elf.—You have some contradictory elements in your makup that give you considerable concern at times. You have naturally an inclination toward quietness and reserve, without much liking for new enterprises and quite a leaning toward conservatism in most things. But your way of success in life lies along the path of bringing joy and happiness to the lives of others. Even if you are not joyful yourself, you will never succeed in any way unless you try to make others happy. It is a strange destiny, but inescapable, and means grafting on a new disposition over the old one. However, you are usually enthusiastic about your endeavors, and are not easily discouraged by defeat. You are apt to be careless in money matters and to care a great deal about the pleasures of social life. You can accomplish much by conquering your quick temper and tendency to worry. Wear an opal in your tie pin, and remember this: "Think often of your friends and seldom of your enemies." You were born on Thursday. I am undecided as to whether you are enquiring about a date last year, or one still to come. The past date was a Sunday, and a day for taking advantage of every opportunity. The one to come, a Monday, is one for confidently assuming any responsibility offered you. Play no games of chance on that day, however. Your colors are steel, purple and brick.

Lou.—You have quite a strong character, capable of much assistance to those about you. The service inspired by love for others will have been your best way of success in life, but you may not have always followed this path, as you are inclined to be somewhat selfish, also to have a liking for material things. The development of your spiritual nature should be your chief aim. You have a great deal of ability, both mentally and physically, and have the fortunate faculty of merely wishing hard enough to do certain things, in order to accomplish them. You make a loyal friend, as long as you are permitted to have your own way, but can be quite a bitter enemy. You have a fine memory. You are apt to be snobbish, setting too much store by showy people and things, rather than looking for real worth. Capriciousness has always been a trait of yours, and has caused you some unhappiness in your married life. You do not care much for housework, preferring to do embroidery. You were born on Wednesday. Your colors are red and brown.

M. J. B.—You should be able to accomplish a good deal along any line connected with mentality or business achievement, as you have a natural aptitude for science, business and commerce. You will be able to do much as you go through the world, both in a material way and along the lines of understanding and sympathy for those about you, that is, you try to control certain traits of character that will not make for success or happiness. You are apt to have a double nature, and must always watch that the higher and better is in power. You are inclined to be dissatisfied and nervous, constantly wishing that you were somewhere else and doing something else than the work you are engaged on. You are able to attract birds and animals to you, and to promote the cultivation of flowers about the home. You are a born whiner and scolder, and must fight these traits every minute. You are suspicious and easily offended and should try to cultivate trust and confidence in your associates. Try and remember always that the secret of all power and greatness lies in being lovable. Keep your hands and feet still, thus helping to conquer your inborn restlessness of spirit. You were born on Monday. Your colors are tan and buff shades.

Tell him to take McCoy's Cod Liver Extract Tablets for a couple of months and get enough good healthy flesh on his bones to look like a real man.

Tell him, it's the only way to take those grave-like hollows from his cheeks and neck.

Tell him that thousands of thin, puny, peaked, scrawny men all over America have improved their physical health and appearance and bless the day they first heard of these wonderful sugar coated tablets so full of weight producing vitamines.

Ask for McCoy's Cod Liver Extract Tablets. McDermid & Jury, Jas. Lynch and Bond's Drug Store and every druggist sells them—60 tablets—60 cents. Any thin man or woman can put on five pounds of healthy flesh in 30 days or your druggist is authorized to refund the purchase price.

CHAMBERLAIN HAS EMERGED AS OUTSTANDING STATESMAN

Rapidity of Rise To Fame Astounds Even His Friends.

POLITICAL METEOR.

Dealt Blow Between the Eyes To Europe's Hopes —Then Evolved Plan.

By P. W. WILSON.

It is seldom indeed that John Bull, cautious and unemotional, is plunged, hook, line and sinker, into a flood of enthusiasm for a quantity so uncertain is the career and personality of a statesman. That Austen Chamberlain, after one year at the Foreign Office, should be a Knight of the Garter, and that, on the occasion of his accolade at Buckingham Palace, his wife should receive the highest rank in the Order of the British Empire, are events, the prospect of which would have been dismissed twelve months ago as incredible.

The question that then disturbed Britain and her dominions, especially South Africa, was whether Austen Chamberlain would remain in the Government at all. To an observer like General Smuts, the Foreign Secretery seemed to be committing the empire hopelessly to entanglement in European wars. Over his policy the Cabinet was sharply divided. The press and public opinion were alarmed and hostile. It is out of this situation that Chamberlain has emerged triumphant. His critics are bound to his chariot wheels.

Fame Comes Swiftly.

It is the rapidity of Sir Austen Chamberlain's rise to fame that has astounded even his friends. Slow he is, devoid of imagination, modest, reliable. It is strange, indeed, that destiny should have cast him for the role of meteor. Of his pre-eminence there is, however, no kind of question. At the Congress of Berlin it was, after all, Bismarck and not Beaconsfield who presided over the deliberations of Europe. At Paris, after the Armistice, the Chairman was Clemenceau; the most conspicuous figure, Woodrow Wilson. But in London recently, when the Treaties of Locarno were signed, it was Austen Chamberlain who sat at the head of the table.

And this was on an occasion held to be of an importance so momentous that, despite the death of Queen Alexandra and the cancellation of a banquet at the Guildhall, the foremost statesmen of Europe—Prime Minister Briand of France and Chancellor Luther of Germany—thought it imperative to attend. It means that today Austen Chamberlain occupies the position in the counsels of the Old World to which Viscount Grey attained during the Balkan troubles of 1911, 1912 and 1913. Russia alone stands outside the range of his direct influence.

What was it, then, that turned his expected failure and his near-resignation into a success thus astonishing? The man himself is what he always has been—efficient in routine, chivalrous in loyalty to his colleagues and to his subordinates, obvious in mind and method, Victorian in costume, courteous, correct, an excellent friend, but as an orator uninteresting.

Not His Own Policy.

The description of Sir Austen Chamberlain as a civil servant in the House of Commons is as true today as it always has been. And the secret of the whole situation is that as a civil servant he has been carrying out a policy that was not his own policy at all, but one imposed upon him—a policy in which, at the outset, he did not believe. He is today the embodiment of the plan for Europe which yesterday he regarded as an ideal, too good to be possible.

On taking office Sir Austen Chamberlain at once became skeptical of peace in Europe. Wherever he turned his eyes there were points of friction. War, so he thought, was bound to come. There was nothing for Britain to do save to limit her commitments in Europe to a simple guarantee of the French frontier.

At Geneva, therefore, Mr. Chamberlain brusquely scrapped the protocol, approved in general terms by the League of Nations, and so shattered the hope of a peace thus based upon security, arbitration and disarmament. He said outright that to no such general treaty of compulsory arbitration would the British Empire affix its numerous signatures. The ultimatum—for it was nothing less—appeared to condemn Europe to another balance of power; a balance that could not indefinitely insure stable equilibrium, yet a balance which, if upset, would mean in very truth the end of historic Christendom.

A Staggering Blow.

To Europe and indeed to the world Chamberlain's pessimism came as a blow between the eyes. Here was Britain, a country that had worked incessantly for the unity of Europe, giving up that aim as a bad job and trimming her sails for the typhoon, already indicated by clouds on the horizon. Before the disaster of August, 1914, Viscount Grey believed the best against hope that war would be averted. Austen Chamberlain has assumee the worst. He let Europe know—that is, the peoples of Europe, not merely the Governments—precisely what were the fears in his mind. And at a critical moment Ambassador Houghton, representing the United States, declared that Europe must choose between her ancient animosities and her financial credit. She could not retain both of them.

Where Lloyd George had woven his webs of compromise and where MacDonald had waved the magic wand of internationalism all in vain, here was a statesman who got down to brass tacks; who, in fact, hammered them into the heads of Europe, putting up the plain question: "Do you or do you not want to talk yourselves into another war?" What is called "The spirit of Locarno" was Europe's answer. The stupendous folly of further fighting had become too dangerous.

We can now understand how it is that Chamberlain has emerged from a cloud of criticism into the sunshine of popularity. Yesterday he was breaking up Europe's idealism and consigning her to a perdition—in which he did not hesitate to include Britain. To-day a repentant Europe is sitting at his feet and promising to be good. It is a transformation wrought not by subtlety but by simplicity. About Sir Austen Chamberlain there is something of the stolid Whiggery that distinguished the late Duke of Devenshire—a characteristic independent of party and accountable for the enormous influence exercised in his day, despite his Toryism, by the Duke of Wellington. It is an influence based not on conscience but on character. Austen Chamberlain is one of those men whom it is impossible to mistrust. It is not his word only but his face that is his bond.

A Statesman's Last Card.

When once you have talked as plainly as he talked about peace and war, every other issue sinks into insignificance. Such talk is the last card in a statesman's hand, but if it wins the rubber is his. In July, 1914, Grey's warning to Austria-Hungary—a warning of revolution if war were permitted—was futile. One reason may have been that it was whispered only into the ears of an Ambassador. Chamberlain has spoken from the housetops. And from the valley of the dry bones of diplomacy there has sprung up a democratic sentiment that even the mandarins dare not ignore. What does the corridor to Dantzic matter compared with the roof to one house and the lives of one's children? It is possible that Sir Austen Chamberlain himself was astonished by the depths that he had stirred. And his very determination at Locarno to limit publicity meant that the attention of Europe was not distracted by details and cross-currents from the main issue—which he had defined.

In Chamberlain's success there was another factor which he himself generously acknowledges. That factor was the British Foreign Office. As Prime Minister, Lloyd George had his own Foreign Secretary, which, to say the least, was trying for a bureaucracy that had been taught by Lord Salisbury to regard Wales as a Celtic fringe. To have your "principal Secretary of State"—and he Lord Curzon—treated as an office boy was a humiliation to public servants, most of them drawn from aristocratic families and all of them trained to teach Paris how to talk French.

When at last Lloyd George was relegated to history and Lord Curzon—Marquis—assumed a real command of policy, things were not much better. For he also was one who knew better than his bureaucrats. Of Ramsay MacDonald it could be said with truth that he was much more acceptable than anybody expected, but even he had ideas of his own, including a recorded condemnation of every assumption on which, before the war, British diplomacy had proceeded.

A Reasonable Attitude.

Hence the satisfaction when Austen Chamberlain, with his dispatch box, arrived. Here at last was a man who would not try to know better than his department, who would take advice, obey the rules and himself resign—as he resigned from the India office—if his subordinates made mistakes. The Foreign Office has regarded Sir Austen as their own man. It was determined in Downing Street that he should not be allowed to fail. In support of his policy there was aroused all the suavity, the promptitude, the knowledge, the draftsmanship, the adaptability for which British diplomacy was at once famous and formidable.

The machine, noiseless and unresting, worked with the ease and punctuality of a clock. All the little courtesies were shown to statesmen in touch with Secretary Chamberlain. Every hour of every day was smoothed with tact and forethought. The Foreign Office would show intruding Welshmen and Socialist Scots precisely how—when the department was given a chance—peace and goodwill among men should be promoted.

As part of his education Austen Chamberlain in earlier years had been compelled by his discerning father—the late Joseph Chamberlain—to learn both French and German. That ignorance which Talleyrand declared to be the prerogative of an Englishman—an ignorance firmly upheld by Grey and Lloyd George—was thus surrendered by Sir Austen Chamberlain to modern languages. And at Locarno the discovery of a Briton so internationalized acted on European envoys as a continual compliment.

Where Culture Wins.

Secretary Chamberlain could understand and make himself understood. He could entertain and he could be entertained. And, as an invaluable reinforcement, he could introduce his wife on a steamboat gliding over Lake Maggiore. It was impossible—in the presence of ladies—to start the next war. It would have been impolite—not bad statesmanship, merely, but bad manners.

The more irritable grew the nerves of a representative the more charmingly were those frayed nerves soothed by the hospitality of Mrs.—or, as she must now be called, Lady—Chamberlain. As her husband talked French and German, so did she administer cakes and cups of tea. With the woes of every land she was sympathetic. To the faults of every land she was blind. Of the virtues of every land she was appreciative. She did not merely entertain; she radiated. And to her has been accorded, therefore, no small part of the credit due to the reconciliation of France and Germany and of Europe as a whole.

The future? If today Sir Austen Chamberlain could resign, his place in history would be secure. But he has years still ahead of him and must beware of the perilous fortune that leads all men to speak well of a man. The acclaim with which he was received on his return to London is not to be regarded, strictly, as a popular acclaim. His gifts are not, and never will be, popular gifts. He was acclaimed by society, by the court, by diplomacy, by finance and by Parliament.

It is society that has decorated him with the Garter. It is the same society, predominantly Conservative, that found room for Bonar Law in Westminster Abbey. When Queen Victoria conferred the Garter on Palmerston and offered it to Gladstone, she was responding, unwillingly, to a public demand. She dared not withhold her official recognition of their services to the State. The Garter, in this present case, is conferred by the governing classes in order to impress the nation and the world. It is, in effect, an announcement that the spirit of Locarno is not a passing mood in Britain, but the considered national purpose, fully endorsed by her elder statesmen, irrespective of political affiliation.

Assuming that the co-operation in Europe, thus inaugurated, is to continue, there are still problems to be solved, at once perplexing and urgent. What is to be the basis of permanent peace in the Balkans? What attitude is to be maintained toward Russia? How is the League of Nations to deal with the French mandate in Syria? And when are steps to be taken to promote disarmament? These are among the matters that, in any ordinary period, would tax to the utmost the sagacity of a Foreign Secretary. Sir Austen Chamberlain has scored heavily but, as yet, he has merely turned his first page.

Even at moments of international solemnity, when nations stand silent in the presence of their glorious dead, we cannot wholly ignore the game called politics. In the praises showered on Sir Austen Chamberlain we may discern not only a genuine personal regard but also a quiet consideration of eventualities.

A Dark Horse.

Stanley Baldwin is still firmly in the saddle. But criticisms fly like poisoned arrows about his head. In any case, it is well to have a successor in reserve for an office so important as the Prime Ministership. A successor is waiting. His name is Winston Churchill, Chancellor of the Exchequer. Winston Churchill, however, has a name which still arouses contention. Rightly or wrongly, his budget has been attacked from diverse angles. Austen Chamberlain is thus invaluable as a dark horse.

Since Lord Balfour retired in 1911 from the leadership of the Conservative Party, Chamberlain has been mentioned for the post. He was denied the succession, a dozen years ago, by the civalry of the late Lord Long, who represented the squirearchy of the countryside. And it was thus that Bonar Law had his chance. Holding Birmingham and some of the Midlands, as Chamberlain does still hold them, he may be looked upon as still in the running for the highest office in the State. If, at the conclusion of the miners' truce, the industrial crisis again develops next year and the Government has to be reconstructed, we may see Austen Chamberlain in his former role of Coalitionist.

Peterborough, July 19, 1926

Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir.—Hon. Mr. Gordon, in his letter of Saturday last, again repeats in more detail that I voted against penny postage, income tax reduction, automobile and other reduction of taxation, and now again I emphatically deny his statements.

The want of confidence motions referred to in Hansard on pages 3683 and 3685 do not support him.

The vote then recorded took place on 19th May last. The first legislation dealing with above matters was not introduced into the House until the 26th May. It is, of course, impossible to vote against a bill before it is moved.

All the legislation dealing with revenue matters introduced last session consisted of three bills, namely: No. 114, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, 1907, No. 115, an Act to amend the Special War Revenue Act, 1915, and No. 116, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, 1917.

These measures were introduced severally, received each first, second and third readings and were passed without any division. How then can it be possibly said I voted against them.

That there may be no question upon the point, may I quote from the Official "Votes and Proceedings" of the House: 26th May (page 342).

"Mr. Robb, by leave of the House, presented a Bill, No. 114, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, 1907, which was read the first time and ordered for a second reading at the next sitting of the House."

Same date (page 344).

"Mr. Robb, by leave of the House, presented a Bill, No. 115, an Act to amend the Special War Revenue Act, 1915, which was read the first time and ordered for a second reading at the next sitting of the House."

27th May (page 349).

"Mr. Robb then, by leave of the House, presented a Bill, No. 116, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, 1917, which was read the first time and ordered for a second reading at the next sitting of the House."

2nd June (page 383).

"Bill No. 114, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, 1907, was read the second time, considered in committee of the whole, reported with an amendment, considered as amended and ordered for third reading at the next sitting of the House."

4th June, (page 387).

"The Bill No. 114, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, 1907, was read the third time and passed."

10th June (page 406).

"The Bill No. 116, an Act to amend the Income War Tax Act, 1917, was read the second time, considered in committee of the whole, reported with an amendment, considered as amended, read the third time and passed."

Same date—

"The Bill No. 115, an Act to amend the Special War Revenue Act, 1915, was again considered in the committee of the whole, reported with an amendment, considered as amended and ordered for third reading at the next sitting of the House."

11th June (page 410).

"The Bill No. 115, an Act to amend the Special War Revenue Act, 1915, was read the third time and passed."

If any vote had been taken the result would have been officially noticed, but, as I have stated, no division was had.

I have a copy of "Votes and Proceedings" in my office and shall be glad to show same to any one interested. I have given the facts and the discussion is ended so far as I am concerned.

Yours sincerely,
E. A. PECK.

PRESCOTT, July 19.—The beautiful Japanese home on Deer Island in the St. Lawrence owned by B. J. Miller of Albany was destroyed by fire, caused by a defective flue in the fireplace chimney. A collection of books and antiques valued at $75,000 was lost in the flames. The building was valued at $40,000. Mr. Miller spent many years in making the collection, and owned one of the very few hand-printed Bibles in the world, some rare first editions and numerous antiques, as well as an extensively modern library, all of which were totally destroyed.

Here is a 100 per cent French frock, the sort that has given Paris the sartorial leadership of the world. The ingredients are blue crepe, and a blue and white foulard, plain blue crepe, and a white silk vest but the result is perfection. The sleeves are the new exaggerated bell-shape that threatens the popularity of the long, close-fitting type. And notice how well the small velvet hat fits into the general architectural scheme.

WEDDING BELLS.

FITZGERALD—MILNE.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at St. Colman's church, Cleveland on Thursda, morning at nine o'clock July 8th when Gladys oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Milne became the bride of Mr. Leo Fitzgerald oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. John Fitzgerald of Peterboro. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Collins.

PICNIC AT S.S. No. 4 DUMMER.

On the 1st of July many children, parents and people gathered on the school grounds for the annual school picnic.

The afternoon was started by a game of baseball between the school team and a chosen team from the visitors. This caused much fun as the game was very close and resulted in 11 to 14 in favor of the visitors.

The races were as follows:

Girls and boys, 5-9 — Theodore Zinsten.

Girls and boys, 9-12—Ottie Crowe.

Girls, 12-16—Doris Payne.

Boys, 12-16—Howard Hamilton.

Girls, 16 and over—Velma Payne.

Boys, 16 and over—Edwin Moore.

Coat race—Gordon Hamblin and Velma Payne.

Ladies over 130 lbs.—Velma Hamilton.

Trustees' race—Henry Little.

A tug-of-war was then held, in which two sides were chosen from the school and Trevor Little's side won the box of candy.

All were then hurried into the school and Mr. Geo. Parsons, chairman of the School Board, took the chair. The chairman gave a short address, and then the school sang a chorus. Miss Sage was then called to give out the prizes. There were two special prizes, one for attendance, which was for Doris Payne and Clinton Crowe, who attended every day during the year. Also a prize to Walter Payne, who had his arithmetic and spelling correct the greatest number of times during the year; a second prize went to Lorraine Hamblin, who was next. Miss Sage then had a few words for all, in which she told them that regular attendance was one of the main things in school work, making it easier for pupil and teacher, also those who did their homework were the ones who advanced.

Lunch was then served and everyone returned home.

Auto 'buses are proving popular is India and many lines are expanding.

HER OWN WAY
by a Girl of Today

IT IS DISHONORABLE TO LISTEN.

Although he didn't deserve it, I couldn't help feeling a little bit sorry for Mr. Robinson.

Poor old man! He seemed to have aged ten years in the time since I saw him the day before and this morning.

I really had much more respect for him than for Doctor Flint, whom I knew to be one of those men who would sacrifice anything for money and a certain standing with his employer.

Pointedly I turned away from the doctor and spoke directly to Mr. Robinson, "I will not stay any longer," I said, "for evidently I will be quite in the way if you wish to consult with Doctor Flint."

I turned to go with sinking spirits. The day was passing rapidly. I had to have that money some way, and I was sure that hypocritical doctor would keep Mr. Robinson as long as he could.

Much to my delight, however, Mr. Robinson said, "Miss Dean, will you step into my office and wait. I will be down immediately, and I want to see you."

I bowed my head. Whatever Mr. Robinsons' omission or commission, he was always a gentleman.

As I left the room I heard Doctor Flint say angrily, "Why did you acknowledge to that girl that you had that bottle in your hands?"

I stopped quickly just outside the door. I knew it was not honorable to do so, but I told myself that the course I had determined upon was not honorable either, and that I was not going to allow anything to interfere with my getting that money for poor little Joan.

"I didn't see that I could do any differently, Flint," I heard Mr. Robinson say wearily. "I was never so shocked in my life as when after I had glibly told Miss Dean that Miss Cleaver was suffering from an epileptic fit to have her thrust that bottle into my hands and express the opinion that poor Martha had taken poison. She told me she had picked it up from the floor beside her.

"Why didn't you tell me, Flint, that Miss Dean was up there when you reached Martha Cleaver? Certainly you must know that Miss Dean is one of the cleverest girls that ever made her appearance in this store. You could never brow beat her and cow her as you have done to many of the other girls——"

"At your request," broke in Doctor Flint bitterly.

TOMORROW: An Epitaph.

HOROSCOPE

"The Stars Incline, but do not Compel"

MONDAY JULY 19 1926.

This is read as a planetary government in which adverse influence outweigh the benefic aspects. Astrologers read the signs as rather threatening.

This is held to be an auspicious sway for the affairs of women who will cause many reforms to be pushed with energy.

Beginning with their own faults, which they will see with unusual distinctness, wives and mothers will make efforts toward progress along spiritual as well as material ways.

In politics there is likely to be little success for women office-seekers, but the influence of clubs, churches and other organizations is to be positively felt.

Again the stars smile on theaters, operas and other forms of entertainment which make appeal to the public.

There is a forbidding sign today for big business deals which may not succeed quickly if launched under this direction of the stars.

Lawyers and legislators now come under the malefics which encourage auspicion and criticism.

Courts and criminal procedure will be much discussed in the coming months when scholars and educators will seek methods of improvement in modes of dealing with law-breakers.

Aged persons may be affected by the influences of the stars while this configuration prevails and they should avoid fatigue or worry.

Again the seers foretell many sudden deaths, as heart disease and nervous maladies will be usually prevalent.

Uranus today frowns upon those who put their faith in occultism, or even in religion. Opposition to certain church organization may become apparent at this time.

Children born on this day probably will be endowed with unusual charm of manner as well as definite talents. They may be too easily influenced and may have too many friends for their own good.

Persons whose birthdate is it have the augury of a quiet year. They should carefully study their best interests.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

(By Mildred Marshall.)

Facts about your name, its history; its meaning; whence it was derived; its significance; your lucky day, and lucky jewel.

(Copyright, McClure Syndicate.)

CAROLINE.

It's a curious fact that some heroes lose, rather than gain popularity, when their deeds are recorded in romance. Such was the case of the famous Karl of the Franks, who is responsible for the origin of the feminine name Caroline. The great emperor has suffered at the hands of romantic chroniclers but history preserved the memory of "Carlo Magno," and from his name came a long series of masculine and feminine proper names.

The first feminine translation known is Carlota. This name is synonomous with Charlotte in those early times, and indeed, Charlotte and the Caroline of today are almost interchangeable, if their origin is to be observed, no matter how separate and distinct they seem to be. Charlotte, or Carlota, of Savoy, married Louis XI. and introduced the name to French royalty. Charlotte d'Albret had the misfortune to be given in marriage to Cesare Borgia and had one daughter, who married into the House of Le Tremouille whence the brave Lady Derby carried it into England.

The Huguenotism of that house connected it with the House of Bouillon, whose heiress Carola, or Charlotte, was married in 1588. There, the House of Orange derived it and it became known in Germany and was brought to England in its full popularity by the good queen of George III. It gained sentimental vogue and an international fame through Goethe who chose the name for his heroine of "Werther."

The first Carolina was evolved in Italy but was quickly adopted by Southern Germany and in turn brought to England by the wife of George III, who made it extremely popular among the nobility. America received it first through the Carolinas (North and South), and its fame and popularity as a feminine proper name spread rapidly.

Caroline has numberless derivatives and contractions. England calls her Charlotte, Lotty, Chatty, Caroline, and Carrie. In France she is Carolina, Charlotte and Lolotte. Carlota and Lola are purely Spanish and Carlotta and Carolina are the Italian versions. Germany preserves the original preference for Charlotte, Carolina, and Lina.

Caroline's talismanic gem is the diamond. It promises her faithful love if she is married, it will enhance the love of her husband, but it should never be purchased as it is only potent when it is a gift. Her lucky day is Saturday and 1 is her lucky number.

Whom they have injured they also hate.—Seneca.

YOUR JEWEL COLOR FLOWER

By Mildred Marshall

Today's talismanic stone is the carnelian, symbolic of marital felicity. It was believed by the ancients to have the power of assuring a happy home to the married woman who wore it.

The Beryl, today's natal stone, brings good luck in mental battles and endows its wearer with keen mental vision. Those whose success depends on alertness and quick judgment will find this stone most potent.

Rose color is the hue prescribed for wear today. Especially fortunate will it prove for those who are seeking social preferment, since it attracts to them those whom they would know.

The white chrysanthemum is the significant flower for today. It is said to bring realization of social ambitions and to attract influential friends.

Short Jackets Go a Long Way Towards Chic

BONNIE Prince Charlie suits from over the water show the short jacket of quasi-Scottish ancestry and a semblance of kilts in the frock beneath. Paris is making many ensembles for Summer with the short coat and quite frequently it is in contrast to the frock. Jackets of wool crêpe are worn with frocks of printed silk, and flat crêpe or taffeta coats with plaid silk dresses. One of Broadway's brightest and best-beloved stars, who looks like a little girl in spite of her stardom, wears this type of costume in bisque-colored Canton crêpe. If you are going abroad this Summer you will find it a smart and always-in-order suit for traveling or sightseeing.

The Examiner does not sell these patterns.

SAVE YOUR TEETH

Prepared by the Oral Hygiene Committee of Canada, with which the Peterborough Dental Society is Collaborating.

THE HOSPITAL DENTAL DEPARTMENT.

No more significant step has been taken by the dental profession in this country than that recently entered upon under the guidance of the director of dental services of the Province of Ontario, when a public dental clinic was inaugurated in the Western Hospital, Toronto, as a hospital department.

Concisely—it means that dentistry has at length outgrown the limitations which have for so long hedged it round, despite its status as a profession, and has achieved its due recognition as a branch of the healing art and as a vital factor in public health welfare.

Conceivably—not even medicine itself, would have enjoyed the recognition it has attained, nor have been able to render the great humanitarian service it has performed, had it not provided great institutions of healing and placed public weal before private gain.

So it is, perhaps, not difficult to see that dentistry, while enjoying its splendid isolation wholly as a series of independently managed offices, was not equipped to serve unselfishly along broad humanitarian lines.

The possibilities now visioned in the fields of research, of public health welfare, and of more splendid achievement in all of its endeavors on the part of the profession, are tremendous.

Consider for a moment that in the realm of pure medicine, there is perhaps no one disease so widespread throughout the peoples of the globe, as that of dental caries or tooth decay. That is challenging! And that there is no disease of greater prevalence nor more baffling in its solution, than that of periodontitis or pyhorrhea. That is challenging!

And that no more confounding problem presents itself to the medical practitioner than that of focal infections, of which, as has been said, over eighty per cent are directly traceable to the mouth and teeth. That, too, is challenging!

For, too long have diseases of the teeth been looked upon by both profession and laity, as dental irregularities presenting mere mechanical problems. So that, if through this latest step there evolves a closer co-operation of medicine and dentistry from which men will learn to think of the mouth or oral cavity not as a separate entity, but as a component part of the whole body: then in a larger measure does the dental problem become a medical problem and vice versa, and then are we farther along the road towards the successful working out of these problems that are so challenging.

Thus—towards the realization of that humanitarian service that is the foundation stone upon which the healing art is built.

LOVE LETTERS THAT MADE HISTORY

(By Joseph Kaye.)

(Copyright, McClure Syndicate.)

CHARLES DARWIN AND EMMA WEDGWOOD.

The man who is responsible for the greatest controversy the world has known shows himself a simple, not unusual, straightforward lover in his letters.

Charles Darwin, propounder of the famous Darwin Theory of the origin of man was married to Emma Wedgwood, his cousin. It was a love match, and the extracts from letters given below covering the period immediately preceding their wedding, tell a realistic story of the everyday embarassments of a groom-to-be.

"November 23, 1838, Athenasum, Tuesday Night.

". . . . I positively can do nothing, and have done nothing this whole week, but think of you and our future life. . . . You may then well imagine how I enjoy seeing your handwriting. I should have written yesterday but I waited for your letter; pray do not talk of my waiting till I have time for writing or inclination to do so. . . . It is a very high enjoyment for me as I cannot talk to you, and feel your presence by having your own dear hand within mine. I will not relate my annals: On Saturday I dined with the Lyells, and spent one of the plea santest evenings I ever did in my life. Lyell grew quite audacious at the thought of having a married geological companion, and proposed going to dine at the Atheneaum together and leaving our wives at home. Poor man! He would as soon 'eat his head' as do such an action, whilst I feel as yet as bold as a lion. . . . "

"November 30, Friday evening.

"Powers of sentimentality forgive me for sending such a letter; it surely ought to have been written on foolscap paper, and closed with a wafer. I told you I should write to you as if you really were my own dear, dear wife and have not I kept my word stoutly? My excuse must be that I have seen no one for these two days; and what can a man have to say who works all morning in describing hawks and owls, and then rushes out and walkes in a bewildered manner up one street and down another, looking out for the words 'TO LET'. . . .

"Saturday, Shrewsbury, Jan. 26, 1830.

". . . The house is in such a bustle that I do not know what I write. I have got the ring, which is the most important piece of news I have to tell. My last two days in London where I wanted to have most leisure, were rendered very uncomfortable by a bad headache, which continued two days and two nights so that I doubted whether it ever meant to go and allow me to be married. The railroad yesterday however, quite cured me. Before I came to Maer last time I was eager in my mind for the advantage of going straight home after the awful ceremony. You, however, made me just as determined on the advantages of not going straight home, and now your last letter, (for which I return you thanks, for being so good a girl as to write) has just put me half way between the two plans. This will give you hopes of my being a very docile husband, thus to become twice an absolute convert to your scheme. I settled the matter by telling the housemaid to have fires lighted on Tuesday, and if we did not come then, to have them Wednesday, so that you may decide precisely as you please at any moment you please. I went as near a falsehood as any man could do by pretending to deliberate and saying in a very hesitating voice, 'You need not have a fire on Monday,' by which anyone would suppose we were to be married on that morning. Whether I took them in I do not know. . . . "

YOUR HEALTH

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D.,
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

This is the time of year when you have more or less leisure if you are a business man or woman. Of course, if you live in the country, this is your busiest season. What I have to say today is intended particularly for the town dweller, but it will be well if country folk bear in mind the advice and act on it later.

This is a good time to have your eyes examined. If the office you usually patronize is open, it will not be so busy as it is in the Winter. More time can be spent on your particular case.

As I study people I am more and more convinced that many of them suffer from eye-strain without realizing it. Headache, dullness of intellect, unwillingness to work, indigestion, and many other symptoms may be present, and pronounced as they are, they may not suggest eye strain as the cause.

If the sight is so bad that reading and writing are difficult, it is perfectly natural to think about glasses. But even though such glasses help to make things clear nearby, they may not relieve the headache or other symptoms.

In testing eyes, the first step is to try the distant vision and see what lenses make it clear. As a matter of fact the distant vision may be distinct and yet be so at the expense of eyes strain. Without consciousness of the fact, you may be making terrific effort to see and are seeing only because of the effort.

I want to make clear to you that the mere fact of having good sight is no proof of the absence of eye strain. Recently I saw a young woman who suffered the most intense headache for a year or more. Hardly a day has passed but she has had this symptom. It has been a great hardship to her in many ways.

In this case glasses for reading have been fitted time and time again. As a matter of form, perhaps, she was given distance glasses, but, like most folks, since she could see well without them and had the usual aversion to wearing glasses all the time, she rarely puts them on.

After taking all manner of treatment and endless quantities of medicines, it was suggested that she wear her distance glasses all the time. In one day the headache disappeared and the health of the young woman has steadily improved since.

Of course, this is an extreme case of what eye strain is capable of doing, but there are thousands of persons in this world who are needless victims of headache and other nervous troubles who can be relieved in this simple way. If you suspect you have eye strain, see about it at once.

Too commonly we defeat our own good by being too confident of our own powers of discernment. Let the experts have a chance.

A.B.C.—Q: Is it harmful to take a teaspoonful of salt in a cup of water every morning for constipation when the blood is thin?

A—I would not advise it. If you watch your diet, drink water between meals and take plenty of outdoor exercise you should benefit generally. For further particulars send a self-addressed, stamped envelope and repeat your question.

MRS. M. M.—Replying to your letter I would advise that the blotches you have reference to may be due to a form of hives or urticaria. From your description the intestinal elimination probably plays an important part in your condition. First of all watch your diet, avoiding excessive sweets and too much meat, drink plenty of water between meals and avoid constipation.

The itching may be relieved by bathing with a solution of hyposulphite of soda, 2 tablespoonsful to a pint of water and allowing to dry.

If your daughter watches her diet and takes plenty of outdoor exercise, drink plenty of water between meals, etc., she should not have to resort to enemas to move her bowels, since taken too frequently they are apt to prove weakening.

Constipation.

Have your meals at regular hours.
Eat simple, well cooked food.
Avoid foods unduly rich in fats and starches.
Add bran muffins and stewed fruits to your diet.
Take two tablespoonfuls of bran daily. Sprinkle it over your cereal, or dissolve it in water and drink it.
Eat coarse breads such as whole wheat and graham with your meals.
Get plenty of fresh air and out-of-door exercise.
Sleep in a well ventilated room.
Take a tablespoonful of mineral oil daily. This should be swallowed when the stomach is empty—either at night, three hours after eating, or a full half hour before breakfast. If you don't like the oil, take it in the morning, washing it down with the juice of an orange.

"HERE COMES DAD."

Who's that comin' down the street?
I'm the one she's gonna meet.
Gosh, amighty, is she sweet?
Sure she is—my daily treat!

Surely, things would seem quite wrong, if I didn't hear her song.
Sing a song of, "Here come's dad."
That's the song she's always had.

Always up to same old tricks, when the hour is nearin' six.
Wonder why she thinks it's fun, just to meet me on the run?

Every day, when work is through, I do what all fathers do.
Hie for home. The story's told—so's to meet my three-year-old.

Nothin' like a tiny mite. Cheerful—makin' things look bright.
Gee, you don't know what you miss, if you've never lived like this.

Work may make you all tired out. Still that feelin' swings about, when a child struts down the street—an' you're the one she's gonna meet.

Doesn't matter, but wonder if shoe dealers ever walk to work?

Daily Short Story

THE OPPORTUNIST PARENT

Old Damon Cahoon was very angry indeed. Young George Braisted had had the impudence to ask permission to marry Damon's daughter, Laura. Now Laura was one of those girls so profusely endowed by nature with brains and beauty that she might reasonably aspire to higher things. Damon had resolved that he would have for a son-in-law no ordinary mortal. George Braisted was merely Damon's ward and a clerk in his office. He was the son of an old friend, it is true, and had inherited a comfortable little fortune. But not such a fortune as Laura was going to bring into the family!

So old Damon had driven George from his presence with contumely and had forbidden Laura even to think of the young man. Laura and George, of course, were cast into the doleful dumps; but they declared they would never, never cease to love each other and never, never marry anybody else. George's fortune was so tied up by will that he would not come into it until he was twenty-five; and he had six months to wait before he arrived at that mature age. When he did! Well, he would be his own master then and old Damon would see. He rather expected to be "fired" from his job in Damon's office but he was not. He thought of resigning but concluded to hang on until his final settlement with the hard-hearted tyrant of a guardian.

For several weeks George got only black looks and short words from his employer and repaid them in kind. Then Damon's air toward his ward began to thaw. In the course of a couple of weeks more it became quite genial. George was uneasy: what did this change of front portend? Had Damon seen the error of his ways, and was he preparing to rescind his former interdict? Or had he some subtile scheme up his sleeve? George was very much afraid that it was the latter that the old man had. Could it be that Damon had won over his daughter to consent to marry some person of her father's choosing and felt so elated at his victory that he could afford to be genial?

George had been forbidden to call upon Laura and they had been forbidden to write to each other. But, somehow, they managed to meet each other quite "accidentally" with amazing frequency.

Whenever Laura was allowed to go shopping unattended by a dragon aunt, she was sure to run across George. And George had perceived no faltering of Laura in her love for him.

The very next day Damon came to George's desk and said, "George, perhaps I was rather hasty about you and Laura. You may call at the house again if you want to."

The fact was that Damon was in a Dickens of a fix. The "market" had gone against him; he had been caught and "squeezed." To protect himself he had been obliged to use some of his ward's money, and while he had thought to be able to replace it almost immediately he now saw with horror that there was every prospect that he had sent some of George's money after his own. He was "over extended" and faced an appalling crisis. One thing he would not do: he would not touch another cent of George's, even though it might save him from bankruptcy. But if the crash came the fact that he had already used some of his ward's money was bound to come out, and he shuddered as he thought of it. But if George was his son-in-law—why, then the matter might be quietly "ironed out." Hence his change of front. And one night, when Damon had decided that there was no possible hope for his pulling through, he went so far as to say: "Well, well; I suppose you young folks will want to get married some day. Go ahead—you have my permission." He said it laughingly—for Damon was a great dissembler.

But the very next day something happened which caused Damon to go into his private office, lock the door and dance a double shuffle. His joy was dimmed by only one thing—his sudden remembrance of what he had said to George and Laura the night before. But—well, he could unsay it. He was an opportunist, was old Damon. The cause of Damon's rejoicing was this: The stocks which he was carrying had all started to go up and they were going up "a whooping." Another day like this and he would not only be out of the woods but he saw his way to a handsome profit. George's money would be put back where it came from; the incident would be closed.

And Damon did have another day of it and saw that all was well with him financially. Then he turned his attention to his domestic affairs and walked in upon Laura and George in the evening, as they sat unsuspectingly billing and cooing in the back parlor. He walked in upon them scowling. "I have been thinking over what I said about you two getting married," said he, "and I have come to the conclusion that it won't do. No, not for a minute."

"Oh, papa, I am so sorry," said Laura, "for you see George and I thought it would be all right—and got married this morning."

Damon gasped. Then, stretching out his hand, he said: "Bless you, my children" an opportunist to the last.

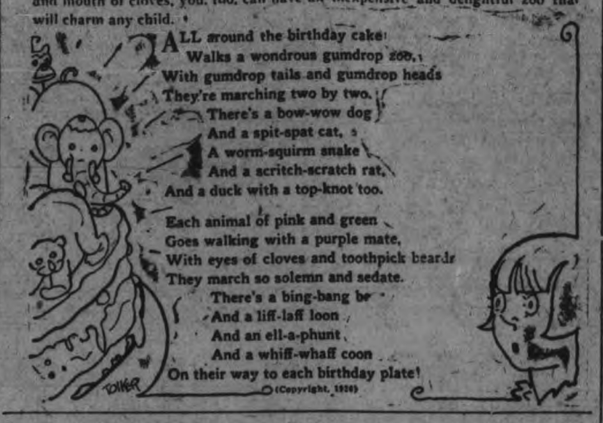
The Gumdrop Parade

By SHIRLEY RODMAN WILLIAMS

I ATTENDED a children's birthday party where among other things the little guests squealed with delight at the marvelous and variegated parade of gumdrop animals around the cake. "What a delightful extravagance to have so many," I said. "But it wasn't extravagant; I made them all," replied my friend. If you buy a variety of gumdrops, big fat ones, little round ones, and long lean ones, at a confectionery and fasten them together with toothpicks making eyes and mouth of cloves, you, too, can have an inexpensive and delightful zoo that will charm any child.



ALL around the birthday cake
Walks a wondrous gumdrop zoo,
With gumdrop tails and gumdrop heads
They're marching two by two.
There's a bow-wow dog
And a spit-spat cat,
A worm-squirm snake
And a scritch-scratch rat,
And a duck with a top-knot too.

Each animal of pink and green
Goes walking with a purple mate,
With eyes of cloves and toothpick beards
They march so solemn and sedate.
There's a bing-bang bo
And a liff-laff loon
And an ell-a-phunt
And a whiff-whaff coon
On their way to each birthday plate!

UNCLE WIGGILY

Today's Bedtime Story

By Howard R. Garis

UNCLE WIGGILY'S ICE-CREAM.

(Copyright, McClure Syndicate.)

"Howabout it, Unkie Wig?" asked Baby Bunty one day, as the little orphan rabbit girl hopped up close to the old bunny gentleman, and pretended to tickle his pink nose.

"How about what, Bunty?" asked Mr. Longears in his turn. But well he knew Baby Bunty was going to ask some favor. She always did when she spoke child talk in this way, calling him "Unkie Wig."

"How about some ice-cream," said Bunty, making a funny little face, and sort of twisting around on one leg, bashful like.

"Ice-cream!" exclaimed Uncle Wiggily. "I didn't say anything about ice-cream. Ha! Ha!"

"I know you didn't. Ha! Ha!" and Bunty laughed when it came her turn. "But all us animal girls and boys think it isn't much like the seashore without ice-cream."

"Oh! seashore ice-cream, I shee—I shee—I mean I see what you mean!" and once more the rabbit gentleman had to laugh at the funny way his tongue twisted when he tried to shay I shee shome shea shore icesh-cream—I mean when he tried to shee—shay—shaw—Oh, dear! Now I'm all twisted.

Anyhow, Uncle Wiggily knew what Bunty meant. You remember that, early the week before, Uncle Wiggily had put a lot of salt in the duck pond. Then he got Old Mr. Mucker, the mud turtle, to bob up and down in the pond, splashing waves and this, with the salt, made it like the ocean seashore. So, of course, when the children played there they wanted peanuts, popcorn, lemonade and the like of that—just as if it was the real shore at Raspberry Grove.

"Naturally we want ice-cream to make it more like the seashore, Unkie Wig," said Orphan Baby Bunty. "How about it?"

"Ha! Ha! This about it!" cried the rabbit gentleman with a jolly, hop, skip and a jump. "I'll make some ice cream!"

"Goodie! I'll go tell the others!" shouted Baby Bunty and off she hopped on the run.

Uncle Wiggily got some sugar, cream, vanilla, salt and ice and mixed them all up together in a wash tub and began to stir it with the egg beater. But after he had been fussing around for half an hour, he tasted the stuff and cried

"Boo! That's funny!"

"What is?" asked Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy.

"This ice-cream I'm trying to make!"

The muskrat lady looked at it and laughed.

"You'll never make ice-cream that way not in a thousand years!" she squeaked. "Better go to the store and buy some!"

"I guess I better had," said Uncle Wiggily. So away he hopped to the ice cream store where he bought a big paper box full of the frozen pudding and started back with it to the make believe duck pond ocean.

The rabbit gentleman was almost there, and he was thinking how jolly it was to make treats for the animal children, when, all of a sudden, the Bob Cat popped out of the bushes.

"I'm going to nibble your tail instead of your ears, for a change!" howled the Bob Cat. "I'm going to nibble your tail!"

"Oh, please don't!" begged the bunny, for he only had a very little tail at the most, and if it was nibbled there would be none left.

"Yes, I'm going to nibble your tail!" howled the bad chap again, and then Uncle Wiggily held out the paper box of ice-cream, which was very cold by this time, and said

"Please hold this for me a minute."

"What for?" asked the Bob Cat, not knowing what it was.

"I want to get out my handkerchief so I can cry when you nibble my tail!" sighed the bunny, as he began digging into his pocket.

The Bob Cat took the package of ice-cream, but, no sooner did he have it in his paws, than he howled

Oh, I'm freezing!" he howled.

"Oh, how cold! Oh, I'm freezing! Oh, I'll catch the sniffle snuffles. Oh, what a trick you played on me!" And, dropping the ice-cream, back to the woods he ran.

"Ha! Ha!" laughed Uncle Wiggily, as he picked up the paper box, which hadn't broken open, luckily. "Ha! Ha! I fooled the Bob Cat!"

Then the bunny hopped along with the ice-cream, for he didn't mind his paws getting a bit cold. And the animal children all thanked Baby Bunty for reminding Mr. Longears about the treat. They thanked the bunny gentleman also. And if the bark on the dogwood tree doesn't growl at the pussy cat when she climbs up, I'll tell you next about Uncle Wiggily's blackberries.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

(By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.)

Harry R. Hill, advertising manager of the Fargo (North Dakota) Forum, says:

That we hear a great deal of complaint from retail merchants in all lines of business with reference to people trading with out-of-town concerns, patronizing mail order houses nd peddlers, and one is inclined to sympathize with them, and to condemn the peddlers and mail order concerns.

While we hold no briefs for these people, we must at least give them credit for their enterprise in going after business in an aggressive way instead of weeping about hard times and worrying about the profits the other fellow is making.

If retail merchants would put just half the effort behind their selling campaigns in proportion to the size of their business as the mail order house does, the mail order business would find pretty poor pickings in most any community.

If the people behind the counters in the average store knew half as much about the merchandise they are supposed to sell as the average peddler does, and would be just half as willing to show their lines, and just half as anxious to make a sale, the peddlers would soon be forced into other lines of business.

Merchants in many cases encourage buying away from home. For instance, we'll say Mr. Jones is in the grocery business, his wife needs furniture—does he always buy from his fellow townsman across or up or down the street? No, he can save a few dollars by purchasing through some friendly salesman who doesn't happen to be selling the furniture man. The furniture man places his order for fruit for canning with a friend of his in the wholesale business in a nearby city; the jeweler buys his new suit from a peddler; the dentist sends away for his automobile accessories; the lawyer's wife buys her clothing in the big city, and so it goes. Others should buy at home, but when it comes to practicing this good rule, one is inclined to forgetfulness.

If retail merchants will try out these suggestions, then go after business in an aggressive way, using local newspaper advertising and attractive window displays, two of the most effective mediums of advertising known to modern merchandising, and neither of which is available to the peddler or the mail order house, it will be but a comparatively short time before they will have little cause to worry about either of these competitors.

Women Find

Great comfort in this new hygienic pad that discards easily as tissue—no laundry

ON many important counts, women are deserting the old-time "sanitary pad."

There is a new way. A way that multiplies protection. A way, too, that solves the old problem and embarrassment of disposal.

It is called "KOTEX." Ends the insecurity of the old-time sanitary pad. Five times as absorbent! And deodorizes—ends ALL fear of offending.

As easily disposed of as a piece of tissue. No laundry. No embarrassment.

You get it at any drug or department store simply by saying "KOTEX." You ask for it without hesitancy.

Costs only a few cents. Eight in 10 better-class women employ it. Proves old ways an unnecessary risk.

KOTEX

No laundry—discard like tissue

PONTYPOOL NEWS

PONTYPOOL, July 17. — The Young People of Balyduff put on their play, "Broken Links," at the strawberry festival at Shiloh Church on Wednesday evening. Mr. Percy Preston gave some enjoyable songs between acts.

L.O.L. 82 held their annual church parade on Sunday last to the United Church here. A good turnout of the members was present and enjoyed the sermon by Mr. Ponton of Bowmanville, who is relieving Rev. Mr. Terril, who is on his holiday.

The lodge turned out in large numbers on Monday, and celebrated the 12th with their brethren in Lindsay. The lodge made a very presentible appearance in their white suits with cap and badge, making the best showing they have for many years. The music was of a good nature; Jas. Malley handling the fife in his usual capable manner, assisted by our local drummers, W. Hamilton, N. D. Chambers and Rusk brothers. The parade was marshalled by T. Farrow, who is a veteran at that job, and J. Payne, carried the Union Jack to lead the procession. H. M. Richardson, W.M., is to be congratulated on the showing the lodge made this year.

Car Stolen

E. Nicholson of Liskard had the misfortune to have his car stolen in Lindsay on June 12th. It was practically a new car, being a Chevrolet and purchased from Richardson's one year ago.

Lawn Social

Carscadden's Sunday School is holding a lawn social on Mrs. W. Ilman's lawn on Wednesday, July 21. Ball games and other sports. Proceeds are in aid of organ fund.

The Entrance Class at Carscadden's School and Pontypool School should be congratulated, as they all passed successfully; the former with honors. Those trying were: from Pontypool, Misses Iva Shaw, Grace McMahon, Annie Bernstein, and Eric Russel. The teachers of these schools were Mr. Lorne Wannan and Mr. George Beggs.

Every effort is being made to make the annual field day, August 11th, a huge success. "Meet me at Pontypool, August 11th," is the slogan.

Mr. Robert Payne sold a choice bunch of young cattle to Mr. R. Fitchette of Orono last week.

Charleston dance is said to be healthy. So is hurdle jumping.

Have You Tried

Grape-Nuts Lunch Sandwiches
Grape-Nuts Muffins
Grape-Nuts Raisin Pie ?

YOU'VE known, of course, that Grape-Nuts is one of the most delicious and highly nourishing foods that you could possibly put upon your family breakfast table. But did you know, also, that thousands and thousands of women use this famous food in making delightful luncheon and dinner dishes? They do! Women have sent us any number of recipes for entrees, desserts, sandwiches, hot breads—so many good things that they serve for all occasions. And they all agree that it is the unforgettable flavor of Grape-Nuts which makes these good things to eat quite out of the ordinary.

It's such a delicious flavor—nut-like, with a delicate suggestion of malt sugar. Indeed there is no other flavor just like it. But whether you enjoy Grape-Nuts at breakfast just as it comes from the wax-wrapped package, or at luncheon or dinner in some delicious dish, consider this:

Grape-Nuts Contributes to Your Health Five Essential Elements of Nutrition

Grape-Nuts is made from whole wheat and malted barley—health-giving grains! It supplies to the body five essential food elements often deficient in modern diet—dextrins, maltose and other carbohydrates for energy; iron for the blood; phosphorus for teeth and bones; protein for muscle and body-building; and the important vitamin-B. Grape-Nuts is specially prepared so that it is very easy to digest. Even its form is beneficial—the delightful crispness tempts you to chewing, thus giving healthful exercise to teeth and gums.

As a breakfast food, Grape-Nuts costs less than one cent per person. Serve at the side of a bowl of milk or cream—four teaspoonfuls is enough. Used as an ingredient in other dishes, Grape-Nuts adds to the food value of any meal.

Here are some particularly good Grape-Nuts recipes which women have sent us. Try them soon! Your grocer has Grape-Nuts—or you may wish to accept the offer below.

GRAPE-NUTS RAISIN PIE

¾ cup Grape-Nuts
¾ cup raisins seeded and chopped
1½ cups brown sugar
2¼ cups hot water
½ cup vinegar
2 tablespoons butter

Mix in order given, and cook for 10 minutes. Cool. Put into a paste-lined plate and cover with half-inch strips of paste placed half an inch apart to form a lattice top. Trim edges neatly, moisten and finish with a half-inch strip of paste around the edge. Bake about 40 minutes. The oven should be hot for the first 15 minutes and then the heat should be reduced. This recipe will serve six persons.

GRAPE-NUTS LUNCH SANDWICHES

1 cup Grape-Nuts
6 hard-cooked eggs chopped very fine
2 tablespoons finely-chopped onion
2 tablespoons finely-chopped celery
2 tablespoons Chili sauce
1½ teaspoons salt
¼ teaspoon paprika
¾ cup thick mayonnaise

Mix the ingredients until they are well blended, and will spread easily. Use a silver knife and spread on buttered slices of graham bread. This recipe makes filling for eighteen sandwiches.

CRITIC IS SHOT BY CLERGYMAN IN HIS CHURCH

Fort Worth Pastor Shoots Lumberman Who Comes To Remonstrate.

CLOSE FRIENDS.

Daughter Wires Toronto, Saying Act Was Committed in Self Defence.

FORT WORTH, Texas, July 19.—Elliott D. Chipps, a lumberman, was shot and fatally wounded late Saturday in the First Baptist Church here by the Rev. J. Frank Norris, the pastor. Chipps had gone to the church to remonstrate with Mr. Norris about some of his utterances.

Mr. Norris, fundamentalist and revivalist, immediately went to the County Court House and talked with officials there.

Shot Three Times.

Chipps died at a hospital. An examination showed that he had been shot three times.

The Rev. Mr. Norris first came into the spot light in Texas when the church of which he was a pastor was burned under mysterious circumstances in March, 1911, resulting in his trial on charges of arson. He was acquitted.

Mr. Norris recently turned against the teaching of evolution in Baptist schools. Some of his views have met with opposition from other Baptist ministers of Texas. The pastor's delegates were not seated at the State Conference of the Church at Mineral Wells last December.

Alleges Self-Defence.

Chipps, who was 50 years old, came to Texas from Virginia in 1905, and entered the lumber business. He was prominent in club circles, in Fort Worth, where he had lived three years.

Norris, in a statement, made a plea of self-defense, alleging that Chipps had threatened to kill him, whereupon Norris reached in a desk drawer, took out the night watchman's pistol, and fired four times at Chipps.

Norris immediately after making this statement furnished bond of $1 0,000, signed by thirty persons, many of whom were members of his congregation.

Chipps yesterday had visited Mayor H. C. Meacham but said nothing of his intended visit to the pastor, the Mayor said last night.

"Chipps and Mr. Norris were close friends," he added.

The Minister's Version.

According to Dr. Norris's version of the shooting, given last night, Chipps called at his study and threatened to kill him. He demanded, according to the pastor's statement, that the latter desist from attacks on certain of Chipps's friends. Dr. Norris had launched an attack on Mayor H. C. Meacham for the purchase by the city of land for the opening of a street. In his church publication, The Searchlight, and in sermons, Dr. Norris is said to have charged that the street opening was designed to benefit Meacham's own property. He is owner of a large department store.

Dr. Norris said he tried to induce Chipps to leave his study, and he escorted the visitor to the door. The latter, however, returned with a threat and was apparently about to attack him, when Dr. Norris, according to his statement, took a watchman's pistol from a drawer and fired at Chipps.

Wire Received

TORONTO.—Rev. Dr. T. T. Shields of Toronto, who is a close personal friend of Dr. Norris, in whose church he has frequently preached, received yesterday the following telegram from the daughter of the latter:

"Roman Catholic came to papa's office and attempted to kill him, but papa shot and killed him in absolute self-defence. The Catholic started trouble on account of sermon papa preached last Sunday. All Protestant population standing solid with us, and, above all, our faith is in God."

Dr. Shields immediately despatched the following telegram.

"Assure your father my deep love and unwavering confidence, in which my deacons, whom I have consulted, join. Profoundly regret tragedy, of course, but observe victim the aggressor. If I can be of service will take first train for Fort Worth. Please wire me fullest possible information before evening service to anticipate report in Monday's papers. Assure you mother and father and whole church of our sympathy and readiness to stand with you at all costs."

In reply Dr. Shields received the following:

Church Behind Pastor

"Church solidly behind pastor as never before. Just closed one of the greatest services ever witnessed, and everybody tender and trusting. The tragedy inevitable, and grew out of sermon preached in last week's Searchlight. Aggressor broke into Dr. Norris's office, and we rejoice pastor is living. Dr. Norris delivered most marvellous discourse of his life today on Romans 8:28. Made no reference to tragedy. His self-control perfect. Everybody calm and, while deeply regretful, yet more determined and united than ever to do a great work. Your message deeply appreciated. Keep praying. (Signed) "Jane Hartwell."

Preached in Toronto

Known as "The Texas Tornado," Rev. J. Frank Norris has frequently preached in Jarvis Street Baptist Church, Toronto and in Massey Hall, and was well known as one of the leading Baptist fundamentalists in the United States. He was born in Alabama and attended Baylor College in Waco and the Southern Baptist University in Louisville.

His first church was in Dallas. He fought race-track gambling and has been credited with having been largely instrumental in bringing about the enactment of a law that makes race-track betting a penitentiary offence in Texas.

After the usual wait for all the players to get there, the game was finally got under way in time to play five innings before darkness set in. Fairmount won the game by 10 to 5. Mount Pleasant had their strongest line-up of the season with the Guest brothers of Linsday, former Mount Pleasant boys, playing with them. PETERSON COBALT MINES TO BE REOPENED AT ONCE

Adequate Financing For Complete Development Understood To Have Been Arranged—Large Virgin Area Will Be Explored in Contact With Fault Which Strikes Through Property Under Lake — Most Favorable Unexplored Area in Cobalt.

COBALT, Ont., July 19, 1926. — Peterson Cobalt Mines, Limited, which, under reorganization, has taken over the property of the Peterson Lake Silver Cobalt Mining Company, and which holds the largest and most favorably located area yet undeveloped in Cobalt Camp, has, it is understood, made financing arrangements adequate for complete operations, and the mine will be reopened at once.

The former company made most of its money and paid dividends by leasing sections of its 224-acre property, from 110 acres of which 7,500,000 ounces of silver were recovered worth $4,700,000. The remaining 114 acres have not, as yet, been explored, and it is the intention of the management to push the present underground workings into this new territory and open up the diabase, in which formation the adjacent O'Brien mine has secured phenomenal production.

A study of the map of Cobalt will indicate more effectively than any description the exceptionally favorable location of the Peterson Cobalt Mines. The property consists of the beds of both branches of Peterson Lake, together with Cart Lake, and is entirely surrounded by Nipissing, McKinley - Darragh - Savage and O'Brien Mines.

Under-lake mining has been unusually profitable, and justifies the theory that lakes and rivers are, very often, lines of geological weakness, or faults, and it is well known that under such conditions the greatest mineral values in Ontario mining have been found. Examples of this are the Kerr Lake, which has paid $10,000,000 in dividends, and Crown Reserve, which has paid over $6,000,000 in dividends. Lake Shore Mines, in the Kirkland Lake field, and McIntyre Porcupine, in the Porcupine field, are other examples of phenomenal results achieved in under-lake mining.

A fault occurs at the Peterson Cobalt Mines, striking approximately north and south through the bed of Peterson Lake. Having regard to this and the favorable surrounding geology, responsible engineers who have examined the property have expressed confidence that substantial ore bodies will be encountered in the large virgin area of the dia-base to be explored.

The new company has another advantage in that deep shafts have been sunk and lateral work done in such positions relative to the area to be explored that, with comparatively little outlay, new territory may be opened up. Any reasonable discovery of silver values, therefore, should have an instant favorable effect on the stock.

The present financial arrangements are most favorable. It is understood that, as developments progress, the expansion of the fiscal plan will cover all requirements. Application has been made to list the stock on the Standard Stock and Mining Exchange, Toronto.

MINES SUMMARY.

PORCUPINE, July 20.

McINTYRE. — This property is rapidly developing into a property of tremendous importance and has a long and prosperous future ahead of it. There has been nothing particularly new in regard to underground conditions for some little time. Connections with the new shaft are being made as sinking proceeds, so that when the new shaft is ready for operation production from the lower levels in this section of the property can readily be obtained. We believe McIntyre to be one of the best in the country.

CONSOLIDATED WEST DOME LAKE. — Sinking is still being held up and efforts of the management confined to upper levels with nothing of particular importance developing recently. The property is, as has been the condition for the past three three months, meeting all expenses, and showing very little profit. The story of Dome Lake will not be told until sinking is completed and No. 3 vein opened up at a lower horizon. We believe the chances of getting this ore at lower levels to be fair, but the history of the property has been that of oreshoots short in length and fairly narrow carrying values that were too low, with the small milling capacity, to do more than break even with mine costs.

CONIAURUM. — Cross cutting is being proceed with rapidly and the mine in general is taking on a much better appearance. Plans for a mill are well along and the ore showing to-day is sufficient to take care of a mill having 500 tons daily capacity. This mine is practically certain of getting into the producing stage within a year from now.

VIPOND — The enlaged mill at Vipond is in operation and treating approximately 300 tons per day. This increase will practically double former production, which means earnings of approximately $900,000 a year, which is equivalent to a return of nearly half the issued stock. With this production as above it will show a profit of half total production and dividends at a fair rate will be well assured. This property has progressed rapidly in the last little while and ore reserves have been very materially increased. They have sufficient ore in sight now and every indication that other ore will be developed to a sufficient point where the mill could easily be increased 500 tons.

Wheat Much Stronger

Liverpool Quotations Drop

CHICAGO, July 19. Canadian Press —Wheat prices took a sudden upward swing to-day after a wavering start. Continued high temperatures in the northwest with only scattered rain, more than counterbalanced here the influence of the unexpected low-municipal bonds, but apparently was without effect on the stocks, buying of which was influenced by lowering of the call money rate, and a generally favorable week-end trade and earnings reports. Steel shares held relatively steady softening, of scrap steel prices in some districts being counteracted by the reports of unusually small seasonal decrease in the production and incoming business.

In the oil group, Simms Petroleum sank to a new low level for the year and others were in supply on the reports of another new field being opened in Texas.

er quotations at Liverpool. Opening unchanged to 1 1-4c lower. Chicago wheat market quickly rose nearly 3c above the initial bottom figures.

Corn, oats and provisions were firmer, corn starting 1-4c to 3-4c up and scoring further gains later.

General Motors Common

Makes New High Record

NEW YORK, July 19 (Canadian Press).—Establishment of a new high record for all time by the General Motors Common which crossed 170, on a large volume of trading, featured the resumption of the broad upward movement in to-day's stock market. Bear traders, aided by the large volume of profit taking in the recent strong spots stubbornly contested the advance and succeeded in bringing about sharp recessions in several specialties.

Renewed collapse of the French franc caused some urgent liquidation of the French Government and

Consolidated Smelters

Show Greater Activity

TORONTO, July 19 (Canadian Press)—Consolidated Smelters, International Nickle and Massey Harris common resumed their activity of Saturday in the trading on the Toronto stock exchange today. Smelters closed 1 1-2 points higher at 220, but Nickel was one point off at 39 1-8, while Massey Harris common advanced 7-8 to 62 7-8. Preferred was unchanged at 94 3-4.

Noranda continued its advance with 16 point gain to 17.40 after touching 17.55 while Dome was still weaker, 35 cents down at 10.65. Standard Bank showed strength with two point gain to 194. F. N. Burnt common was up half to 57 and Kelvinator common jumped 3-8 to 16 3-8.

WET GAS WELL FOUND.

CALGARY, Alta., July 19. Canadian Press. — A wet gas flow of 3,020,000 cubic feet a day was struck in McLeod No. 2 well in Turner valley on Saturday night. The gas has a high gasoline content.

The other night I sat in a movie and saw a picture of a gloomy-looking schoolhouse on fire. It was no fake, for the whole works was burning, and it was just by accident that the movie camera man happened to be near.

Everybody loves to see a fire. And when it is a school on fire, well, the taxpayers hate it and the kids just love it. The camera man must have been a Red too for he took the whole show from beginning to end.

Nobody was hurt but the building. The thing which made me feel like a kid myself, was the children dancing around in a circle and cheering and yelling and laughing. I became one of them in my imagination, and I again saw the punk old pile of bricks and trouble which tortured me under the school system of my day, and which is not yet entirely corrected. I was glad the old dump was afire. My heart began to dance with the children, keeping time to the jumping flames and belching smoke. As the lips of the children moved, my eyes could read their song.

The old school is burnt,
The old school is burnt,
All the kids play hookey,
And the lessons ain't been learnt.

And after the reel showing the school on fire, came a reel of nature studies. I was struck by the difference in the studies of things in movie form and the plugging at them in the old way.

Here was a close-up of a lovely flower. Now, into this flower came an ugly beetle, stealing nectar but not helping the flower in any way. Presently there was a rush of air which swayed the flower very gently, and a ruby-throated humming-bird hovered in the air before the flower. He gobbled up the beetle, sipped some honey and was gone. No sooner had he gone, than a fly tried to steal some honey from the flower, but again the hummer had a meal of fly, washed down with the sweet nectar. How easy it is to earn from pictures.

SEARCH CONTINUES IN M'PHERSON CASE

Police Attempt To Locate Stores in Which Evangelist Purchased Clothing.

LOS ANGELES, July 19, — Canadian Press. — Officials investigating the Aimee Semple McPherson kidnapping case, are attempting to locate the stores in which the evangelist purchased clothing during her absence from Angelus Temple, in an effort to complete the evidence for presentation to the county grand jury when it reconvenes to-morrow. Through the location of the store in which a corset was purchased for Mrs. McPherson the District Attorney hopes to establish her approximate location a few days before she appeared at Agua Prieta, Mexico, and told of being held a captive for 36 days, part of the time in a desert shack.

Meanwhile search is being continued for Kenneth G. Ormiston, the former Angelus Temple radio operator, and friend of the evangelist. Latest reports were that he was somewhere in North Carolina.

He is sought to testify before the grand jury concerning charges that he accompanied the evangelist to various coast cities after her disappearance from the Temple.

DYNAMITERS SEEK EVANGELIST'S ROOM

Says Attendant at Angelus Temple—Unidentified as Yet.

LOS ANGELES, July 19 (Canadian Press).—Antonio Tardero, 16, attendant at the Angelus Temple, reported to the sheriff's office late last night that an unidentified man had woman twice approached him to learn what room Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson, the Temple pastor, slept, saying they intended to dynamite the place at dawn.

A guard was thrown about the Temple, but nothing happened.

Tardero said that he was accosted first in Echo Park, near Angelus Temple. There the pair searched him for the key to the edifice.

Later, when he was on his way home, the two stopped him again at Pasadena and Whittier Boulevards, some distance from the home and the place of worship of the woman evangelist who had the centre of the sixty-day disappearance and re-appearance mystery, and offered him $50 if he would tell where Mrs. McPherson slept and how they might gain an entrance to the Angelus Temple.

Noranda Fairly Active Touches New High Level

TORONTO, July 19. — Canadian Press. — Noranda featured an active session of the standard mining exchange to-day in which the turnover exceeded 200,000 shares. Prices were on the strong side.

Noranda advanced 40c per share to 17.50 after touching a new high for movement of 17.55. Gold Hill gained 4c from the previous close at 67 while McIntyre closed at 25.85, a jump of 60c, after touching 26.10. Hollinger was 5c higher at 19.70 and Lake Shore was down same amount at 11.50. Kirkland Lake gained ½ to close at 99. Keeley led silver list with 5c advance to $1.69.

Peterborough Pitcher Scores Fourth Consecutive Win

PETES BEAT KINGSTON PONIES, HECKMAN OUTPITCHES CAIRNS AS LEAGUE LEADERS GO DOWN

Two Unearned Runs Only Counters Scored By Joe Daley's Men.

FINAL COUNT 6 TO 2.

Petes Bunch Hits on Cairns in Two Innings to Win Verdict.

Efective pitching by Al. Heckman and their ability to bunch hits on Bruce Cairns, the Ponies' left-handed ace, enabled the Petes to handily win Saturday's Central Ontario League game here from Kingston, the final count being 6 to 2. The Ponies two counters were unearned and had it not been for fumble by Helson in two sucessive innings, with a man on third in each case, Heckman would have whitewashed Joe Daley's crew for the second time in succession.

It was the fourth win in a row for the Petes' leading pitcher, who is the only unbeaten twirler in the Central loop. Although the Ponies hit him more often than on their last appearance here, when they garnered but two singles, he was always on top of them in the pinches and in the only two innings they loomed up as dangerous he was invincible. In the sixth he fanned Purvis with men on second and third, and in the next frame, with the bases loaded and one out, he refused to allow Halbert and Batstone a hit. Heckman is at the top of his form and with him in the box the Petes are a formidable team.

Cairns pitched nice ball for Kingston but he was unable to keep the Petes from bunching their hits, two doubles and pair of singles, assisted by a couple of errors, giving them four runs in the second and a single and a double on top of a base on balls adding two more in the seventh.

The game was notable for the exhibition of short stopping given by "Bubbe" Britton, the Pony short fielder, and by the demonstration of high class outfielding by the Hall brothers. Britton handled twelve out of thirteen chances, throwing out eleven batters during the afternoon and his pegging was swift and accurate. It was a tough day for outfielders, with a half gale blowing, but Jimmy Hall gathered in five flies in great style. He retired the side in the eighth and one of his catches in the inning of a fly that started for deep centre and was carried by the wind into short left was a masterpiece. His seventeen-year-old brother in right field made two fine stabs, his second effort being a running catch of a hard smash from Batstone with the bases full, that would have caused a lot of trouble if the ball had got away from the youngster. Tommy Holyman played good ball at short starting two double plays with Ray Rose as the pivot in each case, while Fred Ash looked after first base in good style in the absence of Hap Harrison.

The Petes won the game in the second inning when they tossed in four hits, stole four bases and scored four runs. That was ample in view of Heckman's steady pitching.

The Game By Innings.

For the Petes, Wolfe singled to centre and Rose sacrificed, but Britton made two fine plays on fast rollers from Swanston and Heckman, to retire the side.

Opening the second Batstone got a soft hit on a wind-blown high fly which dropped back of second. Britton hit into a fast double play, Holyman to Rose to Ash. Purvis singled to centre but Arniel rolled to Heckman.

The Petes had a big inning. Jimmy Hall doubled past third to start with, and Ash single to left. On a double steal Hall scored and when Britton threw high to the plate Ash reached third. Helson doubled to centre, scoring Ash. Jack Hall bunted and Batstone lost the ball in tagging Helson at third when Cairns threw there. Hall stole second. A wild pitch scored Helson. Holyman fanned, but Wolfe singled past Halbert to send Jack Hall in. Wolfe stole second, the fourth stole base of the inning, but Rose fanned and Swanston was thrown out by Britton.

In the third Tetro flied to Jack Hall, a nice catch by the youngster. Cairns singled to short, the ball hitting Holyman on the chin. Teepel fanned and Thompson flied to Jimmy Hall.

Britton tossed out Heckman, Jimmy Hall and Ash in quick succession in the Petes' half.

Halbert, first up in the fourth, was hit. Batstone struck out and Halbert was out stealing second, falling over the bag. Britton's fly was easy for Jimmy Hall.

In the Petes' end of the frame Helson struck out, and Jack Hall grounded to Purvis, Cairns covering first. Holyman walked but was forced at second by Wolfe, Britton to Halbert.

In the fifth for the Pones Purvis fanned, Arniel singled to right and stole second but Tetro struck out and Helson tossed out Cairns.

Rose fouled to Purvis. Swanston for the third time rolled to Britton. Heckman shot a single to centre but was forced at second on Jimy Hall's rap to Britton.

An error gave the Ponies their first run in the sixth. Teepel singled down the first base line and went round to third while Rose throwing out Thompson and Holyman was tossing out Halbert. Helson fumbled Batstone's easy roller, Teepel scoring. Britton singled to centre, sending Batstone to third and the short stop stole second. Heckman got out of a hole nicely by fanning Purvis.

Ash cracked a hot one off Batstone's foot to Britton, who threw him out. Helson rolled to Halbert and Jack Hall fanned.

The Ponies had a good chance to tie it up in the seventh, but Heckman was invincible in the pinch, although another error by Helson gave them a run. Arniel started it by singling to short. Tetro flied to Wolfe. Cairns singled to centre sending Arniel to third, and on Wolfe's throw to Helson the Pony pitcher reached second. Helson lost Teepel's tiny roller and Arniel scored. Tepel stole second. Thompson walked, filling the bases with one out. Halbert hit to Heckman who tossed Cairns out at the plate and the play on Halbert at first was very close. With the bases full Jack Hall made a fine catch of Batstone's smash to right centre, to retire the side.

The Petes came back with a pair. Holyman walked and pulled a delayed steal on Tetro, sliding under Britton. Wolfe popped to Britton. Rose's hard smash to Batstone was recovered by the third baseman in time to throw out the hitter. Swanston bounced a single over Britton's head, scoring Holyman, and rode home himself from first when Heckman cracked a beautiful double over Thompson's head. Britton tossed out Jimmy Hall.

Jimmy Hall retired the Ponies all by himself in the eighth, catching flies from Britton, Purvis and Arniel. His second catch of the inning was a beauty, as the ball started out to Wolfe but was caught by the strong wind and the left fielder had to come in on the run to snare the drive.

In the Petes' half Ash fouled to Tetro, Helson flied to Purvis and Batstone threw out Jack Hall.

Tetro grounded to Ash to start the ninth. Young batted for Cairns and singled past thrid but Teepel hit into a double play, Holyman to Rose to Ash, and the game was over.

Steady Work of Zachary on Mound Wins For Browns.

NEW YORK, July 19 (Canadian Press). — The New York Yankees had another setback yesterday, when the St. Louis Browns blanked them 4—0. The steady work of Tom Zachary, on the mound, was too much for the league leader and their heavy stickwork. It was the second victory for the Western outfit during its present eastern tour. Ken Williams drove for the circuit with Rice on base in the third inning. The Yanks were robbed of some hypothetical runs by four double plays, three of which were started by Gerber.

At Washington, Coveleskie slipped Cleveland seven hits and the visitors got 5 runs, for two more than the Washingtonians. Karr and Haute between them yielded nine safeties, but the home team could not convert.

There were only two game scheduled in the American League yesterday.

SOFTBALL GAME RESULTS IN TIE

C. G. E. and Firemen Play Second Tie Game in a Week.

TAYLOR CUP FINALS.

The C.G.E. and Firemen played their second tie game inside of a week at the James Stevenson Park on Saturday night, for the Taylor Cup. If opportunities mean anything in softballl the C.G.E. should have won the game as Dunkerley walked nine men to Powells one, and the C.G.E. scored one more hit than the Firemen. But the C.G.E. were unable to hit at the most opportune times, and as a result they had twelve men left on bases. Dunkerley for the Firemen was far from being as steady as he usualy is getting no strikeouts. Powell pitched a very steady game having 48 men face him in the ten innings to 55 men being at the plate for the C.G.E. The two left fielders on each team made some very sensational catches. Hall aso made a fine catch but made a very poor throw to home plate to try and catch a man who was coming in. McDonough, in right field, made a wonderful catch of Lewis' high fly and then made a perfect throw to home cutting off Crary who was coming in. Hall in five times to bat got a triple, a double and a single and was cut off at first the other two times. J. Jones faced the pitcher seven times in the ten innings and got on bases four times, being walked twice. Powell in six times to bat got on five of them. Chief Gimblett who batted for Astels in the ninth was the only strikeout in the game.

QUAKER OATS BEAT MASSEYS IN GORDON CUP

Wind Made Play Very Uncertain—Quakers Gained Goals in First Half.

CURTIS BRILLIANT.

Blowers Reduced the Lead —Two Players Ordered Off—Masseys Unfortunate.

After two very hard fought soccer cup ties btween the Masseys and Quakers, the latter gained the right to go into the next round, with a two goal to one victory over the former, on Saturday afternoon, at King Edward Park, before a good attendance of spectators.

The opening exchanges were very keen and fast, and in the early moments, Clark's solo run terminated in a weak finish when he was two feet in front of goal. Owing to the high wind that was blowing in every direction, the players found the ball the master of the situation.

Wind Carried Ball Through

Both goals went under a bombardment for a while but the Quakers were more fortunate when T. Williams carried the attack close upon goal when he passed across to his inside man who rattled the crossbar. Frick was right on to avert disaster but he had to admit defeat when the ball took a peculiar turn to register the opening counter. This set-back to the losers did not impress on their moral, in fact, it gave them greater encouragement to battle against the terrific wind that was raising havoc with the players.

Wind Difficulties

At this period of the tussel, the Masseys half-backs were putting all their talents against the attack of Quaker forwards and dominated in close-tackling which aided only individual play of their forwards who paid repeated visits to Curtis' charge. Cridland cleared with a long punt, J. Mitchell trapped the ball on the line, tricked Laidler with a back-heeler, then passed across to his brother, who sent a low ground drive for goal but Blowers right got touch diverted to a fruitless corner kick. A few minutes later, the same player sent a nice overhead kick into Frick's arms from far out. A flow of corner-kicks in favour of the Quakers kept Blowers and Mann busy around the goal but they never faltered at any time as the wind increased in volume. An individual effort by Clark carried the sphere up into Quakers territory where a fierce attack was raised in front of goal. The Quakers' defence replied with heavy body-checking and long punting while the Masseys' defence did likewise, to let Begg and James test Curtis in goal.

George Logan's Snappy Goal

Eventually Cridland punted upfield to Carmichael who dribbled his way down into proximity of goal but he passed out to Williams who lifted the ball overhead to George Logan. Trapping it quickly he let drive from 20 yards range to put the Quakers still further ahead with a low drive inside the upright. Just before half-time, the Masseys paid an unsuccessfrul visit to Quakers goal. Quakers 2, Masseys 1.

Half Time

On resuming, Masseys aided with the wind, went down in full force against the Quakers defence to find them unbeatable. It was very evident at this stage of the game, that the Quakers were giving a better account of themselves against the wind than when kicking with it, while the Masseys never seemed to get any breaks in their favour. From a throw-in George Logan touched the ball foward and broke fast on the run to beat the full back and shoot for goal. Frick punting clear with a one-hand drive. A succession of goalkicks in favour of the Quakers was the result of erratic shooting of the Masseys forwards.

Two Ordered Off

As time rolled on the pace and heavy tackling was hard and fast. Hodgson retired to the touch line injured, then a fistic exhibition between two players resulted in them receiving "marching orders" and to appear before the Board to give an account of their conduct on the field of play. The Massey continued to press hard but failed to gain any success. Time and again, they succeeded in beating the full-backs but their aim of marksmanship was always a goal-kick for W. Curtis who seemed to enjoy kicking the ball out.

Blowes Scored from Penalty

The Quakers altered their style of play to defensive tactics to offset the Masseys continued siege on goal. They succeeded until W. Logan conceded a penalty-kick for handling inside the dreaded area. George Blowers took the spot shot and made no mistake. Encouraged by their success, the Masseys tried hard to even up the score but fate was against them.

Curtis Unbeatable

No matter what kind of shot was ranged at the Quaker custodian, he gave a first class exhibition in goal. His spectacular save of Blowers' long distance shot that landed inside the upright was smartly picked up from amongst a bunch of players. Exchanges continued on an even basis for a while until the closing minutes when another bombardment from the Masseys brought out the goal keeping qualities of Curtis which certainly gave the Quakers the verdict in a very hard-fought game. Quakers 2, Masseys 1.

Goal-scorers—Quakers, A. Wilson and George Logan; Masseys, Blowers.

Quakers—W. Curtis, goal; Cridland and H. Curtis, backs; W. Logan, Carmichael, and A. Maker, halves; J. Mitchell, G. Logan, A. Mitchell, A. Wilson and T. Williams, forwards.

CHAMPION JACK WARMLY WELCOMED

Has Sprained Thumb—Cancels All Engagements For One Month.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., July 19 (Canadian Press). — Jack Delaney, French-Canadian, came back to his home here Saturday with the world's light heavyweight title, one hundred thousand dollars and a sprained thumb on his left hand. These things he gathered in his fight in New York Friday night with Paul Berlenbach.

The light heavyweight king was received with shouts by the Bridgeportians to whom he made it known that he had called off all his engagements for a month, postponing his proposed matches with Francois Charles, European light heavyweight champion, and Jack Sharkey, Boston heavyweight.

CRICKET NEWS

GLASGOW, July 19 (Canadian Press Cable). — Having practically established their conquest over England, the touring Australian cricketers at the week-end turned their attention to the north of the Cheviot Hills, and invaded Scotland. That it was little more than a courtesy call is generally conceded, for while the Scots hold their own well in games of a more rugged character they have never taken kindly to the national sport of the Sassenach. They were no match for the Australians. An eleven drawn from the west of Scotland, captained by S. F. Maguire of West of Scotland Cricket Club, and including representatives from Glasgow High School Cricket Club, Glasgow Academicals and other college organizations, opened a two-day game with the Australians at Partick. The day's play resulted in the West being dismissed for 163 runs, while the Australians, in an expositionary spirit, rang up 259 for three wickets.

Despite other athletic attractions, there was an excellent crowd. West batted first, and after Maguire had been ousted at two, a good stand was staged by Kerr and Parker. Ackroyd and Collins also had a fine parenership, but the remainder of the team were indifferent.

GAME TO-NIGHT.

Fourth Game of City Finals at Riverside To-night.

Tonight at 6.30 at the James Stevenson park the C.G.E. and Firemen will meet for the fourth time in the Taylor cup finals for the City Softball championship. The first and third games have resulted in ties, each going ten innings in length. It is expected that the C.G.E. will start Nichols, who defeated the Firemen on Wednesday night, and it is likely that Dunkerley will pitch for the Firemen. He had an off night on Saturday and it is more than likely that he will turn in a good game tonight for he is one of the best pitchers in the league and always pitches a good game of softball when he is up against it. The Firemen have to win to remain in the running for the cup.

LEADERS BEATEN

NEW YORK, July 19 (Canadian Press).—The league leading Cincinnati Reds succumbed to the Brooklyn Dodgers yesterday, 2 to 1. The Reds now lead by the margin of a single game, regretting several lost opportunities in yesterday's game which they played before their home bleachers.

At Chicago, the Giants lost 2—1 in a pitching duel between McQuillan and Root. McQuillan's score card showed two less hits than that of his contra worker on the mound, but Root managed to keep his seven scattered.

At St. Louis, Southworth's homer in the ninth after Hornsby had walked gave the Cardinals a 9—7 victory over Philadelphia and advanced the locals to within a game and a half of first place.

SECRETS of STARS on INSIDE BASEBALL

as told to BILLY EVANS

HEILMANN

BY HARRY HEILMANN,
Champion Batsman, American League.

Natural ability is an asset that every great bastman must have.

By natural ability I mean a keen eye, a rhythmic swing and the ability to co-ordinate. If there is power back of the swing all the better.

However, there are many great batters in baseball who are not hard hitters. Power is not absolutely necessary, but it helps considerably.

Every batter, if ambitious, can cash in to a greater degree on his natural ability, if willing to make the extra effort.

Using the head, as we say in baseball, will help every player improve his batting to a marked degree. It is possible to benefit greatly by studying the style of opposing pitchers and the system employed by the various catchers.

A great many catchers have a more or less set system in the handling of their pitchers. A close study of such catchers will give the batsman a pretty good idea of the style ball that is to be pitched him. Such knowledge always helps.

One can learn much by watching closely the work of other star batters. I have learned much from Cobb. Of late years I have made several changes in my style at the plate which I feel have worked to my great advantage.

Confidence in one's ability is most necessary. Try to feel that you always have the edge on the pitcher.

Perfect a strong, free swing without any hitches that ends in a follow through, as they say in golf. Such a style gets the weight of the body back of the swing and makes for distance.

HELPFUL HINTS to GOLFING STARS

BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH GOLFERS MAGAZINE, CHICAGO

ABE MITCHELL—STAND CLOSE WITH IRONS.

The ball must be hit firmly and crisply with the mashie, with all the irons in fact, and that cannot be done easily if we stand too far away.' A close stance gets more over the ball, and from that position we are better able to control the club-head. It is power as much as accuracy that is essential in the approach on that very point. When, however, the stance is far from the ball, the swing is seldom true, and, worst of all, the balance of the body is apt to be upset.

There is little body movement in the mashie shot, but that will creep in if the stance is far from the ball.

Watching the players in a tournament a short time ago I saw many who had this fault, and as there was a good deal of wind blowing, many approaches never found the greens at all. That is, of ocurse, fatal in a stroke competition; in fact, in any match.

Standing too far away, the club does not come up straight enough in a mashie approach. It inclines to be swung round the right leg.

HOW TO SWIM

by Lillian Cannon

MISS CANNON DEMONSTRATING PROPER BREATHING

First and foremost, get used to water. Get used to having your head under so that you don't mind. Keep your eyes open all the time under water for the sake of confidence—and believe that swimming is a natural thing, just as natural as walking.

There is no need to learn to swim in a day. It can't be done. But with confidence and not too much hurry, progress can be made in a day and it is progress which counts.

In a week, if one really tries, enough can be learned to make the idea of swimming feasible and a few strokes can be made.

Never "duck" anyone learning to swim and never let anyone "duck" you. The psychological effect of being ducked is very bad on the beginner and will last a lifetime. The person learning to swim should be allowed to take his own time in getting accustomed to having the head under water.

To get used to having one's head under water, kneel in water about a foot deep and place the hands on the bottom. Take a breath and put your face down in the water. It doesn't matter at first if nothing but the nose is under water. Keep at it, getting deeper and deeper until the whole head is under. You will find very soon that the terror of being under water has been lost. It isn't there.

Keep the eyes open and look for things under water. In the interest of tryng to find something, the idea of being under water will be forgotten.

Breathing is perhaps the biggest thing to learn in swimming. The swimmer must expect his face to be under water for much of the time while he is swimming. Therefore the novice should be prepared for that. Breath should always be taken in through the mouth and expelled through the nose. This permits the exhalation to occur after the head is under water.

Try the ducking exercise and breathing together. Inhale through the mouth and then put the head beneath water and exhale. Go slowly at first and keep at it until the hang of it is attained. Get used to it in quiet water until it is the natural thing to do.

CHAUTAUQUA OPENS WITH FINE CONCERT

Excellent Musical Program Given By Greenfield Orchestral Quartette.

By an odd combination of circumstances, the weather man provided a very extraordinary opening for the Dominion Redpath Chautauqua's first night programme in this city, which took place on Saturday evening. Mr. R. B. Ambrose's very interesting demonstration of electrical phenomena, which formed the opening number on the Chautauqua bill for this year, had a prologue, as one spectator termed it, of natural electricity which quite outdid any of the speaker's efforts along the same line. The crowd of people gathered in the big tent at the Park appeared to be vastly relieved when Nature's demonstration was over, and they could turn their attention to the platform and speaker, whose words were on two occasions absolutely drowned out by the thunder of the elements overhead.

This year's Chautauqua program, judging from the quality of the opening day's offerings, promises to be one of the best given in the city up to date. The Paul Vernon Concert Company, directed by Paul Vernon, director of the violin department of the Cosmopolitan School of Music in Chicago, was an admirable quintette of players, who gave the afternoon concert and provided the prelude for the evening demonstration. Their music was beautifully rendered, following along the lines of chamber or "room" music, as their director phrased it, the type of music which is rendered by four or five stringed instruments alone, with each individual player as a soloist. Mr. Vernon gave an interesting brief description of this type of music, during the afternoon and evening performances.

In quintette numbers, composed of piano, first and second violins, viola and violoncello, in quartette renditions by the strings alone, in trios of violin, 'cello and piano, and in solo numbers by violin and 'cello, the Paul Vernon Concert Company earned much applause during afternoon and evening, by the excellent quality of its music and the pleasing quality of the selections chosen.

In the afternoon, when the programme opened with a few words from Mr. G. A. Gillespie and from this year's superintendent, Mr. B. F. Davis, who was a popular manager of the Chautauqua on its visit here three years ago, the musicians played a number especially written for five pieces of this type, entitled "A Quintette," followed by a quartette rendition, "A Declaration of Love," descriptive of the romantic conversation of a pair of lovers, the man's voice simulated by the deep-toned 'cello, the lady's accents by the first violin, and an arrangement for quartettes of Schubert's "Moment Musicale." A trio composed of piano, violin and 'cello played the haunting melody of Kreisler's arrangement of "A Londonderry Air" and Moszkowski's "Serenato." Solo numbers by the 'cello, played very beautifully, were the well-known "Berceuse" from Godard's 'Jocelyn' and a 'Scherzo,' with an encore in "Love's Old Sweet Song," and the string quartette came on again for a rendition of "Evening Breeze" and "A Humoresque on Two American Folk Songs," the "Dixie" and and "My Old Kentucky Home." Mr. Vernon, in violin solo numbers, was heard to fine advantage in Kreisler's "An Old Refrain" and 'Rondo Brilliante,' the latter with a great deal of difficult double-stopping, adequately handled. The quintette concluded the afternoon's programme with Gillet's "Loin du Bal," and Schubert's "Marche Militaire."

The evening quintette numbers included Tschaikowsky's "Andante Cantabile" and "A Minuet," by Bozoni; a quartette arrangement of "Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes," and a violin solo by Mr. Vernon, in Musin's "Mazurka de Concert," with a lovely rendition of "The Rosary," as an encore.

Mr. R. B. Ambrose, whose demonstrations of electrical phenomena were an exceedingly interesting portion of the programme which followed the storm, referred to the kinship of his wife, whose maiden name was Fitzgerald, with others of that name living in the city.

The first demonstration included the use of the recently-discovered selenium salts, which, in the dark, offers very high resistance to the passing of electrical current, but is quite amenable to its influence in daylight hours. With the aid of about forty dollars' worth of this magic mineral, enclosed in a small glass tube which was rigged up by means of a ratchet and a pawl, small electric wires, and an ordinary flashlight, held in his hand, the demonstrator turned on and off the lights in a miniature house on the platform, by simply directing the beam of his flashlight on the working apparatus.

Some experiments in radio control were interesting. The operator used a crystal receiver and loop antennae, with an ordinary radio outfit, and, standing on the ground some distance away from the platform, caused a small cannon to fire a salute on the stage, a small flag to hoist itself on its flag-pole, while a row of red, white and blue lights beneath burst into radiance.

With assistance from what he called a "freak transformer," Mr. Ambrose did some welding stunts, welding together ordinary nails held in pliers in his hands, and also forming a small arc light in the same fashion. Examples of high voltage frequency current were carried out with the use of a specially-constructed transformer capable of building up one and one-quarter million volts and of making 750,000 oscillations a second. A minature tree of forked lightning shot up from the ball on the top of this machine, when the current was switched on, and the demonstrator proceeded to give a number of interesting experiments with this current, drawing it to him like a fiery serpent with a rod held in his hands, placing his hand on top of it and causing the current to pass through the bodies of two small boys along a wire held by another little chap, and to light a lamp at the end of this wire. Mr. Ambrose explained that voltage of this degree was incapable of harming the human body, and he imbued his hearers with such confidence in this assertion that they were quite willing to help him demonstrate with such a tricky medium. One of his assistants was Mr. Bert Gray, of The Examiner staff, who held an alcohol torch while Mr. Ambrose, his body impregnated with the current, lit it by several means, using his foot, his cloth-covered elbow, his fingers and finally, his tongue, to ignite the torch. A final lighting was done by means of water, poured past the end of the torch from a glass held in the demonstrator's left hand, while his right hand rested on the current. "Electric Osculation," in which Mr. Ambrose and Mr. Gray held metal plates between their lips, the current causing a kiss of fiery, electric intensity to burst into flame between their visages, was another amusing section of the electrical programme.

Mr. Ambrose concluded his demonstation with a few words relative to the conflict between Science and Religion, age-old and unsettled. He said that Science, with all its wonders, had never yet been able to produce a man, and went on to recommend an interest in matters scientific to the parents of growing boys. "I would rather have my boy fooling around with a bunch of old wire than have him worrying about the stuff that Rudolph Valentino uses on his hair, or shooting craps. His mind might be better occupied with the wonders of natural phenomena than in reading "Snappy Stories" or quoting from "Whiz Bang" and "Hot Dog."

FOREST FIRES STILL CONTINUE

Daring Rescues By Volunteer Fire Fghters Prevent More Deaths.

UNCONTROLLED.

SEATTLE, July 19 (Canadian Press)—Forest fires continue out of control in northeastern Washington, Northern Idaho and Western Montana, with daring rescues by the volunteer fighters preventing a growing death toll.

Montana and Idaho rangers are leading two thousand fighters in a campaign to stem blazes in national forests, which fanned by high winds continue to devastate large stands of valuable timber. Fires were generally reported under control in other sections of the northwest.

British Columbia reported four fires uncontrolled with continued high winds and heat forecast.

FARMER FOUND HAD THROAT CUT

Resident of Walson's Siding Found Dead By Searchers.

WAS WELL KNOWN.

LINDSAY Ont. July 19. — Special. — The lifeless body of William Hughes a well known farmer who resided at Walson's Siding about five miles from Burnt River, was found last night with a deep gash across the throat. He had been dead for some hours before being found by searchers. Deceased was well to do as well as popular in the district, and no reason can be assigned for the rash deed. He is survived by his wife and one child.

IMPERIAL HOUSE DISCUSSES DEBT

Member Enquires as to Finality of French Settlement.

LONDON, July 19 (Canadian Press).—Franco-British debt accord was taken under consideration in the House of Commons to-day.

The debate was initiated by Captain William Wedgewood Benn, who complained that the Government had taken no steps to put pressure on either France or Italy for scaling down of their foreign tariffs or reduction of armaments.

He asked if the French settlement was really a final one—would it give stability to France and might not the German default clause possibly ultimately vitiate the whole agreement? Edward Hilton Young, supporting the settlement held that, while it might not be brilliant, it was at least prudent.

Replying to a question, Chancellor of Exchequer Churchill said he had made no agreement with the United States that, if the Anglo-French debt settlement was modified because of diminution in French reparation receipts from Germany, a corresponding modification would be made in the Franco-American debt settlement.

TRUCK CRASHES INTO YARD ENGINE

Accident Occurs at George Street Crossing of Canadian National Railways.

What might have been a serious accident occurred just before noon today when a delivery truck from Lakehurst crashed into the Canadian National Railways yard engine at the crossing on George and Romaine streets.

The driver of the truck said that the engine was backing up at the time and was on top of him before he saw it.

The right front fender and wheel were shattered and the supporting frame was badly buckled. The driver escaped without injury.

KING LIKELY TO RUN IN PRINCE ALBERT

Will Be Much Freer For Dominion Campaign Than in York.

OTTAWA, July 19.—It is possible that Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King may attend the Liberal convention in North York, the constituency in which he went down to defeat in the last general election, but it is practically certain that he will not accept the nomination for that riding.

Mr. King has been offered the nomination for Prince Albert, the seat which he held in the late Parliament, and is almost decided, it is understood, to accept. It would mean that he would be much freer for the Dominion campaign than if he contested North York, as the Liberals will carry Prince Albert without the slightest difficulty, and Mr. King need not even enter the constituency if he has not the time to spare.

It is probable that a definite announcement will be made in the course of a few days.

ONTARIO LIBERALS NEW ORGANIZER

Thomas Marshall, Former Liberal Whip, Will Succeed Hon. Duncan Marshall..

TORONTO, July 19.—Hon. Duncan Marshall, Chief Liberal organizer for Ontario, with offices in the Reford Building here has been given other important duties in connection with the coming Dominion election, and, it is understood, will work under Liberal headquarters at Ottawa. The change takes effect immediately, The Globe was informed last night. Hon. Duncan Marshall was former Minister of Agriculture for Alberta, and former Commissioner of Agriculture for the Dominion. He was in charge of the Dominion campaign in the election of last year, and not only directed the organization from the offices here, but also spoke in a number of ridings.

Former Member Succeeds.

Thomas Marshall, former member of the Legislature for Lincoln, and a former Liberal Whip, will be in charge of the offices here during the absence of Hon. Duncan Marshall. His home is at Dunnville, but he is the manager of a wine growers' company, with offices here on King Street West. During the election campaign he has arranged to give part time to his new duties at Liberal headquarters. Mr. Marshall, who is no relation of Hon. Duncan Marshall, is thoroughly well informed on the political situation in Ontario, and is personally acquainted with most of the party leaders in the ridings in this Province. His duties will include the compiling of lists of speakers for the campaign. Already he has been promised active assistance in the campaign.

Scheme of Co-operation.

While local Liberals last night declined to discuss the new work to which Hon. Duncan Marshall has been assigned or the coming of Thomas Marshall to local Liberal headquarters, it is understood that Thomas Marshall will work to bring about a scheme of co-operation between the city and Provincial organizations by which the Toronto campaign will also be directed from the offices in the Reford Building.

THEATRE

AT THE REGENT

"LOVEY MARY" A GENUINE SUCCESS

Bessie Love and Haines Are Captivating in Leading Roles

The kind of a picture you have been waiting for comes to the Regent Theatre today. "Lovey Mary," which was directed by King Baggott, represents another achievement for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, which seems to have acquired the habit of turning out good pictures.

Bessie Love, who seems destined to become one of the greatest whimsical character actresses of the screen, and William Haines, have the leading roles in the film, which was adapted from the story of the same name by Alice Hegan Rice, author of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch."

"Lovey Mary" is a poor litle slavey in an orphanage, affectionate, but with no one to love, when she is suddenly given the care of a baby left at the orphanage.

She learns to love this child, who by the way is played by one of the cleverest children to flash across the screen since Jackie Coogan, and rather than let him go back to his disreputable mother, she kidnaps him from the orphanage and seeks refuge in Mrs. Wiggs' cabbage patch.

Mrs. Wiggs' cabbage patch is essentially the background for a comedy but as the story unfolds there is an undercurrent of genuine pathos too, that gives Bessie Love an extraordinary chance to show that as an emotional acrtress of the screen she is second to none.

Nevertheless, the cabbage patch, its buildings, its inhabitants, its customs, is genuinely funny and the laughs in the picture come fast and hearty.

When the story is all told, the baby belongs to Lovey Mary but the straightening out of the different complications makes an absorbing narrative pictorially.

King Baggot did an excellent piece of directing on this picture and the work of his company was equally praiseworthy. The supporting staff includes Mary Alden, Vivia Ogden, Russell Simpson, Martha Mattox and the baby, Jackie Combs.

"Lovey Mary" is a picture that should not be missed.

ST. PETER'S CATHEDRAL

The parable of the unjust steward was the text from which Bishop O'Brien preached at the morning Masses at St. Peter's Cathedral yesterday.

"It is not even human wisdom to cheat or to steal," said His Lordship, "for sooner or later the culprit will be found out. But the admiration of the employer of this man was aroused by the manner in which the steward contrived to escape some of the consequences of his misdeeds. He acted wisely in his own interests, and the employer, who was doubtless a religious man, drew a parallel between his conduct in worldly ways and the manner in which those who are occupied with thoughts of their eternal salvation should act. To make freinds of mammon of unrighteousness, which was in reality another name for worldly wealth, meant to turn to good account the goods of this world with which a man might be endowed."

"Do we regard our money, the salary we earn and the riches we may contrive to gather, as means of helping on our eternal welfare? What is our disposition toward the poor Let us comply with the will of God in this regard and make for ourselves by means of the worldly gifts with which we are endowed."

CAR OVERTURNS NEAR WELCOME

Broke Off Two Posts and Landed in Deep Ditch.

OCCUPANT HURT.

A sedan car driven by William Hubble of Peterborough crashed through the railing on the Provincial Highway about three miles west of Welcome today, breaking off two posts and a two inch cable and finally landed upside down in a ten-foot ditch.

The driver of the car, it is said, claims that something went wrong with the engine, that it picked up speed and could not be stopped.

In the car at the time of the crash were Clifford Shannon of Peterborough, and Mr. and Mrs. S. Levine with their baby boy, aged three.

The driver of the car escaped unhurt as did Mr. and Mrs. Levine but Mr. Shannon received cuts about the head and arms which necessitated his removal to the Port Hope Hospital.

PARKED HER CAR AND DIED THERE

Peterborough Born Woman Found Sitting Behind Wheel —Dead Two Hours.

CALGARY, July 19.—Sitting in an upright position behind the wheel of her car, Miss Agnes Reid, 11 Mackie Block, was found dead by Constable Henly shortly after 3.30 o'clock on July 8, Dr. T. A. Wright, coroner, announced, following an autopsy, that no inquest would be necessary. She died as a result of a cerebral hemmorhage, Dr. Wright said.

Parked on Seventh avenue, near Fourth street west, Miss Reid left her home early in the evening. When Dr. Wright rushed to the scene, he pronounced life extinct. She had been dead two or three hours when discovered by the police. The auto had been parked somewhat hurriedly, and it is believed that, feeling a stroke coming on, she drew into the side of the road to rest.

As soon as discovered, police failed to secure an answer when calling at her home in the Mackie building. She was found to be the owner of the auto, and the body was identified by A. M. Shaver.

Detectives were working on the case in an effort to find if she had been attacked, but upon confirmation of the coroner's report that she died naturally, practically all suspicions were discarded.

The late Miss Reid came to Calgary seven years ago, and since that time has been conducting a dressmaking establishment. She was about 40 years old, and was well known in the city. Born in Peterborough, Ont., she spent her early days in eastern Canada. Miss Reid had been in poor health for some time, and was troubled with high blood pressure, for which she had been treated by medical men. She has a brother managing a grocery store in Winnipeg.

CHOIR PICNIC HELD.

All Saints' Choir Hold Enjoyable Picnic To Cobourg.

(Contributed).

The choir of All Saints' Church held their annual picnic recently, going by the Cooney & Jopling 'bus line to Cobourg.

Jupiter Pluvius kindly provided rain to lay the dust on the way down, which was appreciated, but when later in the day he again sent a sprinkle to dampen the ardour of the picnickers, it was not at all welcome.

The choir, with their friends, numbering about 50, entered heartily into the various sports, games and races.

The Ladies' Guild of St. Peter's Church provided a splendid meal, which was attacked with even more zest than the sports.

After supper a game of softball was organized between the organ side of the choir and the north side, which resulted in a victory for the north side of 22 to 18. This game discovered some wonderful talent. The Rev. Mr. Paterson, Mr. Chandler and Mr. Roberts all made home runs for the north side, while the stars among their opponents were Messrs. Boddy and Farr, and wee Brian Roberts. In this game, either the men did not appreciate feminine help or the ladies were too backward and modest, but there was only one lady on the team; needless to say, her side won.

American Attitude To War Debts Criticised In London

CONSERVATIVE CONVENTION IS CALLED FOR NEXT WEDNESDAY; RETURNING OFFICER UNCHANGED

E. A. Peck Announces Nomination Meeting—Party Leaders Likely Here.

ON JULY 28.

Liberals Have Not Yet Fixed date—Executive Meeting This Week.

Arrangements are gradually being made in Peterborough for the Federal election which is to be held in September.

The returning officer has been appointed and the Liberal-Conservatives have announced a date for their convention.

The Liberals have not yet settled on a date but it is expected that their convention will be held sometime next week.

As far as can be ascertained there will be a contest in this riding but officials of both parties refused today to express an opinion as to the probable choice of candidates.

E. A. Peck, ex-M.P. for Peterborough West told The Examiner this morning that the Liberal-Conservative convention would be held on Wednesday, July 28, and that Sidney Whatley would be the returning officer for this riding.

The convention will be held in Victoria hall, Mr. Peck said, but he could not name the speakers as they had not been decided on as yet. It is expected, he said, that some of the party leaders will be present for the occasion.

While he would not express an opinion when asked who would be the candidate to represent his party it seems fairly certain that he himself will be the choice.

Mr. Whatley, secretary of the Great War Veteran's Association, who has been appointed returning officer also officiated in this capacity during the last election.

No date has been set as yet for the Liberal convention, the Hon. G. N. Gordon, K.C. told The Examiner. A meeting of the executive is to be held this week and this meeting will probably decide on a date for the convention, he said.

Trade Union Membership Falls To Pre-War Levels

LONDON, July 20 (Canadian Press).—Trade union membership in England for the year ending March 31 has fallen to pre-war level, according to the report of the General Federation of Trade Unions. The most commonly advanced reason for this is the inability through bad trade to pay contributions but the largest loss of membership rose through amalgamation.

The 116 affiliated societies with 735,468 members show a decrease for the year of two societies and 94,848 members. In 1921 the federation had 134 affiliated societies and an aggregate membership of 1,583,058.

UNIONISTS STRIKE FOR HIGHER WAGES

Structural and Iron Workers Ask Increase of 25 Cents Per Hour.

WINNIPEG, Man., July 20 (Canadian Press).—At the close of working hours yesterday fifty or sixty structural and iron workers, members of an international union, automatically went on strike. The men will not return to work to-day. The refusal of the Dominion Bridge Company to negotiate with the international union with regard to an increase in wages, demanded by the men, was given as the cause of the strike. The men had asked an increase of 25 cents an hour over the prevailing rate of 90 cents.

PLENTY OF MONEY DESPITE STRIKES

Good Demand For Canadian Investments in London Says Holt.

MONTREAL, Que., July 20 (Canadian Press). — There is plenty of money in London in spite of the coal strike, and the demand for Canadian investment continues good, said Sir Herbert Holt, Canadian financier, yesterday, discussing the situation in the Old Country. The unpleasantness created by the Grand Trunk debentures affair is being forgotten, he added.

Sir Herbert sees two ways in which Great Britain could improve her position economically. The first, and the most-talked-of was Empire migration, and the second, the protection of British industries.

In the pulp and paper industry in Canada Sir Herbert expressed great confidence and pointed to the fact that the recent Anglo-Canadian offering in London was over-subscribed thirty times as an index of the attitude of the shrewd British investor.

Spectacular Discovery In Lake Winnipeg Area

WINNIPEG, Man., July 20. —(Canadian Press.)—The announcement of a spectacular new mining discovery in the Lake Winnipeg mining area, 450 miles north-east of here, in the vicinity of Oxford Lake to-day, resulted in ten United States' prospectors setting out from Selkirk to inspect the new finds.

The camp was discovered this summer by Burton Sullivan and Nels Nattson, traders and prospectors at the Upper Hayes River reaches. While little has yet been revealed regarding the nature of the find, it is reported to be a very rich "complex ore."

FOUR WOUNDED EIGHT CLUBBED BY 2 OFFICERS

Become Crazed By Liquor Seized in Raids and Run Amuck.

IN THREE HOTELS.

Fellow Officers Forced To Their Comrade in Order To Overpower Him.

MUSKOGEE, Okla., July 20. — (Canadian Press). — Four persons were shot and wounded, two seriously, and eight others seriously clubbed by two Muskogee officers who early to-day became crazed by liquor secured in raids and ran amuck in three hotels.

Officers Paul Davis, deputy sheriff, and V. S. Cormack, city detective, ran about the halls of the hotels, battering down doors and firing at the guests as they lay in bed. When their ammunition became exhausted they beat their victims with clubs and smashed the windows and fixtures.

Responding to a riot call, fellow-officers were forced to shoot Davis several times to overpower him, and he is in a critical condition. Cormack was easily subdued and placed in jail.

VATICAN ROBBED.

Police Believe Theft To Be Work of Employee.

ROME, July 20.—Vatican authorities yesterday reported that 20,000 lire in cash had been stolen from the administrative office of St. Peter's Cathedral. Bags containing several hundred thousand lire were left untouched.

The police authorities believe that the theft was the work of some employee, and are conducting an investigation along that line. St. Peter's was the scene of a robbery of many valuable objects about a year ago.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT NARROWLY AVERTED

Horses Bolted When Rake Was Caught on Wire Gate.

BETHANY, July 20. — Harold Wilson, a young lad working for Alfred Johnston, miraculously escaped serious injury on Friday when a team of horses he was driving on a hay rake became frightened, on the rake catching in the wire gate as he was driving through. The animals ran away dragging the rake over a new mower standing in the field, breaking some parts of the mower, the rake and some harness, and tearing the clothes off young Wilson's back, who was left unharmed but badly frightened.

IS CONTRADICTED

ANDREW W. MELLON

Secretary of U. S. Treasury, whose statements regarding the purposes for which Great Britain borrowed in America were flatly contradicted by Churchill.

Winston Churchill Contradicts Mellon's Statement Regarding British War Expenditure In U.S.

American Secretary of the Treasury Had Said British Borrowing Was Chiefly For Commercial Purposes Rather Than For Purchase of Munitions.

LOANS OF UNITED STATES TO ALLIES SPECIALLY LIMITED TO WAR SUPPLIES

Chancellor of the Exchequer Details Amounts Spent By Great Britain on Foodstuffs and Munitions—Defends Debt Settlements With France and Italy.

LONDON, July 20 (Canadian Press).—The debate in the House of Commons yesterday on the Franco-British debt settlement opened the gates to strong criticism of the attitude of the United States with respect to inter-Allied debts, and to much talk about equality and sacrifice and to strictures upon the United States treatment of debts on solely a commercial basis.

The settlement which Winston Churchill, Chancellor of the Exchequer, made with M. Caillaux, the French Finance Minister, received strong censure especially from Philip Snowden, who declared that Mr. Churchill was a very poor hand at striking a bargain and had to crumple up every time he came into contact with representatives of European debtor countries.

No action was taken by the House on the settlement, but the debate was the most frank treatment this question has had in Parliament. The most important speech was that of Mr. Churchill in winding up the debate, in which he replied to Secretary of Treasury Mallon's latest statements about the debts.

Another striking contribution was a speech by the Right Hon. Edward Hilton Young, one of the leading Liberals, who is now in the Conservative ranks, mentioned as a possible successor to the present Speaker of the House, whose retirement is talked of as not far distant.

Mellon's Statement Examined

Chancellor Churchill, alluding to Secretary Mellon's statement, said he did not desire to indulge in recriminations with the people or newspapers of the United States over the agreements Great Britain has made, but h must refer to Secretary Mellon's words, because it would be a great pity if misunderstandings should arise.

The United States Secretary of the Treasury was reported to have said that Britain borrowed a large proportion of her debt for purely commercial, as distinct from war purposes, to meet commercial obligations maturing in the United States, to furnish India with silver, to buy food, to re-sell to the civilian population in order to maintain exchange. U. S. loans to Britain, according to Secretary Mellon, were not so much to provide war supplies as to furnish sterling for home and foreign needs and to save Britain from borrowing from her own people.

This, declared Mr. Churchill., was a real and complete misapprehension of the facts of the case. So serious was this misapprehension that it made him almost doubt the authenticity of the words, for Mr. Mellon was quoted as using:

What were the facts? the chancellor asked. They were dealing only with the period when the United States entered the war. Great Britain, like all the other Allies, spent vast sums in the United States on food, as well as on shot and shell. But all the loans of the U.S. to the Allies were, by act of Congress, specifically limited to the purpose of prosecuting the war, and the U.S. treasury required and obtained full justification for every cent that was loaned.

Expenditure Under U.S. Supervision

"Every cent," continued the Chancellor, "was spent under the supervision of the U. S. Treasury in what was, according to their view, not ours, the furtherance and prosecution of the war, and every cent was spent in the United States and—between 1917 and the end of the war, that is, during the period of American intervention—over $7,000,000,000 was spent by Great Britain in the United States.

Of that $7,000,000,000 we borrowed $4,000,000,000 and provided in addition $3,000,000,000 from our own independent resources. Out of the $4,000,000,000 we borrowed we spent over $1,500,000,000 on munitions and over $2,500,000,000 on cereals and other essential foodstuffs.

"Thus on those two items alone, munitions and foodstuffs for the armies and population we spent a sum which equals to the whole sum we borrowed from the United States.

Commercial Maturities

"Regarding commercial maturities, Secretary Mellon must either have been misreported or misled. We spent on commercial maturities during the same period only $354,000,000 out of the $7,200,000,000 we borrowed, or rather less than one twentieth of the total dollar expenditure for which we were responsible.

"As for the silver loan for India, that, as everyone knows, was treated quite separately from the war debt, and fully repaid by this country in 1925.

"There has been a great deal of resentment and ill-feeling regarding this debt, and it is very important that this resentment shall not be increased by any misunderstanding of the actual facts of the situation."

Mr. Churchill had strongly opposed the desire of M. Caillaux to have a specific safeguarding clause against the possibility of diminution of the German payments affecting French payments, because the French annuities had been scaled down to £12,500,000 purposely, so that they should rest solely on France's own capacity and not be dependent upon German payments to France.

Pari-passu Principle

The Chancellor contended that the settlement with France maintained the pari-passu principle as compared with the Franco-American settlement, but admitted that so far as Italy was concerned the pari-passu principle was more difficult to explain.

He said that if one believed that for three whole generations these payments would be strictly met and no change sweep across the world, that no alterations in the views of nations would arise in all that lapse of time, then undoubtedly so far as Italy was concerned, the United States government would have done better than England. If, however, one adopted the view that in ten or twenty years there would be a revision of these agreements, then Britain would not have done worse. Of these two views, he was bound to say that the government inclined to the latter.

The Chancellor denied that Great Britain's object in coming to a settlement at this moment was a desperate effort to save the franc or other currency from depreciation. He argued that in all comparisons of these international settlements, everything depended on the view taken of the relations between the debtor and creditor states.

SHORT TENURE IS PROPHESIED FOR HERRIOT'S NEW MINISTRY

Dictator Bars Strikes By Exiling Agitators

ATHENS, July 20 (Associated Press).—General Theodore Pangalos, the Greek dictator, has adopted a drastic way of settling strikes. Instead of attempting to treat with strike leaders and labor agitators, he exiles them to an island in the Aegean Sea. Cut off from all contact with the laboring masses and living a life of isolation and silence, they have ample opportunity to meditate. When the dictator feels they have had sufficient "rest cure" he releases them under pledge not to resume their agitation.

General Pangalos deals in much the same way with troublesome political opponents. When all other measures fail, he banishes them to the Aegean Islands, where the surroundings and scenery are picturesque, but where political parties, newspapers, social life and telegraph communication do not exist.

Experts Believe Crisis Will Arise When Financial Program is Introduced.

SOCIALIST AID

M. Poincare May Again Be Called Upon to Take Office.

PARIS, July 20 (Canadian Press). —M. Herriot announced at seven o'clock last evening that his second Cabinet was practically on its feet, final completing awaiting only replies from two prospective Ministers. The President of the Chamber was able to make this announcement only after various vicissitudes which threatened to bring an end to his endeavors.

The first intention of the Premier-designate to form a national union government representing all parties except the Extremists, was defeated by the decision of the Conservative leaders that M. Herriot was not the man to bring about the union necessary to carry along with it the whole force of the nation for the solution of the financial problem.

His second plan was to enlarge the old coalition of the Left and rely upon a majority made up principally of Socialists and Radicals, but this was compromised by the withdrawal of M. Le Trocquer.

Moderate Member Joins.

M. Herriot finally prevailed upon Maurice Colrat, who was a member of M. Poincare's last Cabinet, and since then a dissident from the National Bloc to represent Moderate opinion in the combination as Minister of the Treasury.

The new Government, in spite of some new blood, resembles so much that of 1924 that it may be said to be quite the same, only grown two years older.

Problems Aggravated.

The problems the Herriot Government has to face are the same as in 1924, though aggravated by age. When Herriot first took power he found the dollar at 15; now he finds it at 46.42 francs. When he confronts the Chamber at the head of a new combination he will have to answer the charge of the Opposition that the decline of the franc in the meantime was due to his programme of two years ago, which shook confidence, and to the opposition of his supporters to every measure proposed by the succeeding Government to solve the financial question.

Short Term Expected.

The life of the new Cabinet is expected to be extremely short. This is the opinion in all political groups, including Herriot's own party, because the Premier will again have to base his policy on the Socialist programme, which the Senate is not likely to accept, and which even in the Chamber will probably have a narrow majority, if any.

The predictions of the experts are that the Government will last until a financial programme is introduced, then will come a new Cabinet crisis, which may be solved only by an appeal to M. Poincare; whose name was mentioned more frequently in yesterday's discussions in the lobbies of the Chamber than that of M. Herriot.

An American has opened a rug factory in Aleppo, Syria, and if the project is successful will establish a chain of them in Syria.

DROWNING UNNOTICED

MONTREAL, Que., July 20.—(Canadian Press.) — Eleven-year old Bernard Ickivin was drowned in the St. Lawrence at Verdun yesterday afternoon. In spite of the fact that there were numerous bathers in the vicinity, the drowning was unnoticed and it was some time before the boy's absence was remarked.

After some considerable dragging of the river, the body was found by Matthew Price, a junior of the Canadian Press, Montreal Bureau.

MOTOR MEN SEEK DRINKING PLACE

Street Railway Union Asks Installation of Fountain on Route.

The Board of Health held its regular monthly meeting this morning, with Chairman W. J. Hancock in the chair. A letter was received from the street railway union, asking that a drinking fountain be installed somewhere at the corner of George and Charlotte streets since at present there is no place where the men can get a drink while on duty. In other cities there are fountains on the street car routes.

Ex-Mayor Turner thought it was a fine suggestion, as a fountain was greatly needed somewhere on that corner for the public convenience.

The Board adopted a resolution endorsing the placing of a fountain here and passing the matter on to the City Council.

The Board recommended to the City Council that land be secured so that a sewer can be built from the eastern part of Cresecent street to Weir street.

The Medical Health Officer made a very favorable report of the milk tests during the month of June as the majority of the milk reached a very high grade. There are five cases of smallpox in the city at present, but it is a very mild form, it was reported.

The Board have been able to keep well within its estimates for the first six months of this year. The cost of the upkeep of the Queen Mary hospital to the end of June has been $3,455.63.

Hydro Engineer Assures Commission That Trouble Will Be Investigated.

At the recent meeting of the Utilities Commission the commissioners instructed the secretary to write R. T. Jeffery in regard to the interruptions in the electric service in this city, and the following reply was received from F. A. Gaby, chief engineer of the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission:

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of July 15, regarding the matter of interruptions to your electric service in Peterborough, and in reply would say that this matter will be carefully investigated and I will write you further in connection therewith at an early date.

I can assure you that the Commission is anxious to give continuous service to all municipalities on the Central Ontario system, and if conditions are such that changes will improve the service, such changes will be made without delay.

Yours very truly,
F. A. GABY,

U. S. TREASURY GIVES FIGURES

Answer By Assistant Secretary To Assertions of Winston Churchill.

MELLON AWAY.

WASHINGTON, July 20. — Canadian Press. — The remarks of Winston Churchill, Chancellor of the British Exchequer, on Secretary Mellon's analysis of England's debt to this country, was countered to-day by the Treasury with figures.

In support of Mr. Mellon's statement that "England borrowed a large proportion of its debt to us for purely commercial as distinguished from war purposes," acting Secretary Winston offered an itemized account of Great Britain's $7,200,000,000 expenditures in this country during the war.

He declared the figures spoke for themselves and in absence of Secretary Mellon, who is en route to Europe for his vacation, he declined to comment on the assertion of Mr. Churchill before the House of Commons yesterday that Mr. Mellon might have been misquoted or misled in his recent discussion of world-war debts.

Mr. Winston took exception, however, to the Chancellor's declaration that England spent about $3,000,000,000 of its "own independent resources" here. In the table of figures he itemized the payment of only $760,000,000 "by cash from Britains' own independent resources."

MINES SUMMARY

COBALT, July 21:—

NIPISSING. — Drifting on the vein at the South Lorrain property is showing excellent results and considerable high-grade is being bagged. This property has proved to be a winner and a mighty valuable asset to Nipissing. We expect that when a lower horizon is reached similar results to those now being obtained by their neighbor, Canadian Lorrain, will be duplicated.

There has been nothing definitely said as yet by officials of the company as to what they intend doing in making changes in their milling practice at Cobalt, but we expect an announcement on this subject before long. Provided required changes are made, it will mean a considerable extension in the life of Nipissing, as they have large tonnage of low-grade ore, sufficient in fact to carry them for several years.

Interesting results are being obtained on Nipissing's Montbray property, where several good surface showings have been uncovered. From present indications it certainly appears that Nipissing have picked up another valuable asset in this property.

Nipissing's work on their Red Lake claims has not shown anything of great importance yet. They are, however, well located and should be of considerable value.

CONIAGAS—This company have two good properties in Quebec. The one in Montbray Township is opening up well. The work to date indicate a big deposit. We understand that diamond drilling in the near future is on the books. Their property in Boischatel, which they have under option, namely, what is known as the Duke—on this property at the present time pits are being sunk on a five foot calcite vein heavily loaded with copper and zinc. We believe that they have there an excellent prospect.

Coniagas Red Lake property has a few men on surface stripping and trenching. Nothing of particular importance has been located as yet but the property has good location and geology. It appears to be a fair prospect.

MINING CORPORATION.—On their Frontier-Crompton property they are at the present time breaking and bagging considerable of the richest ore that we have seen in South Lorrain District. It is turning out to be a splendid property and will mean a great asset to Mining Corporation. On the Cobalt property production is being well maintained, although nothing new of importance has been located recently. The Cryderman property is apparently going to be a real mine as the ore which was cut in the shaft shows splendid value over good width.

LA ROSE.—Nothing particularly new has developed on this Cobalt property. They are occasionally getting a little good ore, mostly on the Violet property. The prospects for the future of the mine will, we believe, have to depend on their properties in Quebec.

VICTORY MINE. — Occasional patches of high-grade ore are being picked up at this property. There has been nothing, however, of great importance developed there to date.

KEELEY.—The recent favorable reports issued by the management have pretty well covered the situation in regard to Keeley. The 16 and 28 veins have opened up splendid ore. This work is in new ground which offers considerable possibilities for the finding of additional veins of importance.

LORRAIN CONSOLIDATED—Have closed down and up to date no financing arrangements have been made to enable them to continue operating. Supplies and equipment which were on hand at the time of the shut-down are being sold to Mining Corporation.

CANADIAN LORRAIN. — The recent report issued by the management has pretty well covered the situation in regard to this property. We do not feel, however, that sufficient stress was laid on the excellent ore being developed. The work on the 150 foot level is rapidly increasing known ore reserves. Very high-grade ore is being located. Work on No. 17 vein, on the 350 foot level, as well as the winze which was sunk, continues to show a good grade of ore, with considerable high-grade. No. 1 vein, on the 150 foot level, has shown good lengths of rich ore.

The mill should be in operation by the end of August as delivery is being made on the equipment at the present time. Canadian Lorrain is a splendid property and is showing up wonderfully well.

Big Turnover In Shares Teck Hughes Advances

TORONTO, July 20. Canadian Press. — Activity and strength over a wide range of stocks featured the trading on the Standard mining exchange to-day, with the volume of transactions the greatest for some time. More than 325,000 shares changed hands. Teck Hughes with an eight cent advance to 3.92 led the way; the turnover in Keora was large, stock closing 4 3-4c higher at 13. Noranda ranged from 5 points down to 5 points up at 17.15 to 17.25. Castle Tretheway advanced 3c to 1.52, and Mining corporation jumped 12c to 3.82. Dome declined 5 points to 10.90 and Gold Hill one to 67.

Timely Rains Bring Relief Wheat Takes Early Drop

CHICAGO, July 20 (Canadian Press).—Rains in the northwest affording relief from drought and heat which have been damaging the spring crop brought about early downward swing of wheat values today. Opening 1-2c to 1 1-4c lower the wheat market soon showed a maximum set back of about 2 1-2c. Corn and oats were relatively firm, corn starting at 3-8c off to 1-2c up and later showing moderate general gains. Provision market sagged.

In addition to the timely rains, helpful to the spring crop, another distinctly bearish factor was operative in the wheat market today. First deliveries of wheat on July contracts here were made.

Market Suffers Reaction Due To Collapse In Franc

NEW YORK, July 20 (Canadian Press).—Stock prices turned weak to-day under heavy selling for both accounts. In the absence of any other adverse news, Wall Street was inclined to attribute re-action to uneasiness developing from further collapse of the French franc to new low level for all time around two cents, but the market previously had paid little attention to the drop in French currency and the banks reported that there has been heavy buying of American securities lately for the French account.

Sudden revival of activity in Anaconda was believed to foreshadow a further stiffening in the non-ferrous metal prices, but American Smelting lost ground.

General Motors was heavily sold and Chrysler also was active on the up side in early trading, but Mack Truck and White were heavy.

Oils developed an acute weakness when large blocks of stock accumulated by traders were thrown overboard. Pan-American B and Atlantic Refining each sold down several points.

Lady Astor "Tells 'Em Off" Says She Is Fully Dressed

EXETER, Eng., July 20. — (United Press). — Lady Astor, picturesque and witty member of the House of Commons, wants it understood that she is no Lady Godiva, striving to startle the Commons into progressive legislation. Addressing the Devon Association of Teachers, Lady Astor said: "Many reactionaries in the Commons are the ones who pretend to know most about learning. There is an elderly gentleman who sits behind me, for example. He moans and groans over every progressive measure that is proposed. As for me, whenever I pass he drops his eyes. I said to another member, 'Tell him to look up, I'm not Lady Godiva, I am fully dressed'."

Canadian Canners Active Teck Hughes Advances

TORONTO, July 20. Canadian Press. — Canadian Canners preferred led in the activity on the Toronto Stock Exchange to-day with Massey Harris common next in line. The former advanced fractionally while the latter was slightly weaker down 1-4 to 63. On the whole the market was quiet and prices ranged but fractionally.

International Nickle was unchanged to a half off at 39 1-2 while Twin City declined 1-4 to 71.

Smelters dropped 1-2 to 219 1-2, while Page Hersey pfd gained 1-2 to 103 1-2. Brazilian was 1-8 higher at 101 1-8; Teck Hughes was up 7c at 3.90. Bank of Commerce closed one point higher at 222 and Imperial 2 3-4 at 204.

BLAZE MENACES PARK.

Worst Blaze of Years Being Battled With By Volunteers.

BANFF, Alta, July 20 (Canadian Press).—Rain has fallen here, at Lake Louise, on the Vermilion summit, at Black's Camp, but not at Wardle Creek, where fire-fighters are battling with the biggest fire in the history of the National Parks.

It was reported from the fire on Monday morning that a mist had come down the valley during the night, but the much-needed rain did not fall.

Breaking away north of the Wardle Creek, the fire swept up the sides of the mountains on Sunday evening and then turned and blazed a path of destruction on the edge of the road.

All day the big Bickle fire pump and two portable pumps poured 400 gallons a minute through many lines of hose. A force of more than 100 men fought the flames with axes, shovels, buckets, geikie sacks and hose lines. Even in this little patch of timber, soaked at the roots and dripping with water, the fire makes progress.

Wardle Creek Bridge resembles a brigade headquarters during a battle. From this vantage point Howard Sibbald, Superintendent of Kootenay Park, and J. M. Wardle, Chief Park's Engineer, who is assisting Mr. Sibbald, direct their forces. Near the bridge the machine-like roar of the pumps makes conversation impossible. Not more than 200 yards away the flames lick up in a great column of flame that stands out against the background of smoke.

KEYNOTE SPEECH BILLED TO-NIGHT

Premier Meighen To Present Platform at Ottawa Convention.

OTTAWA, July 20 (Canadian Press).—Premier Meighen will present his platform to the electors to-night, on the occasion of the Conservative convention in Ottawa. He will address a mass meeting to-night and deliver the keynote speech of his campaign.

Mr. Meighen will announce to-night the date of the election. September 14 is predicted and the likely date. If is not known yet whether or not he is prepared to reveal, also who will join his Cabinet from Quebec Province, in addition to the Quebecers already sworn in. He has intimated that two portfolios have been reserved for additional representation from that province, and many predictions have been made as to who will get them, but nothing definite, even in the form of rumor, has been evolved. It is quite possible that the announcement on this head will be made when Mr. Meighen returns next week from the east. Hon. E. L. Patenaude, the new Minister of Justice, will also speak at to-night's convention.

KING TO START TOUR WESTERN ONTARIO

Expects To Go West Before Entering Quebec and Maritimes.

OTTAWA, July 20 (Canadian Press).—Right Hon. W. L. MacKenzie King will leave the Capital this week-end for a week of campaign meetings in Western Ontario. The actual points at which meetings will be held will probably be announced later in the present week. After several days in Ontario, Mr. King will go west to Manitoba, where a series of meetings is being arranged.

The western tour of the Liberal leader will likely take him through to British Columbia, with meetings in Saskatchewan and Alberta during the middle of August. Mr. King will then probably return east and hold two or three meetings in Quebec before winding up his campaign in the Maritime provinces.

VARIED PROGRAM AT CHAUTAUQUA

Music and Lectures Feature Second Day's Performance —Juniors Entertained.

Yesterday's programme at the Chautauqua tent was varied and interesting, comprising the appearance during after noon and evening of H. Ruthven McDonald and his Highlanders, and a lecture during the afternoon on "The Home Beautiful," given by Edward A. Marshall, nationally known authority on landscape gardening. In the morning, the juniors had their first innings of the week in an entertaining psogramme by Mr. Vernon Grant of cartoons in sand and in chalk.

Mr. McDonald and his assisting singers made up a quartette whose music was very pleasing and was received with enthusiasm during the afternoon, when it supplemented the lecture, and in the evening, when it made up the programme in a grand concert of music and fun, that included several readings by Mr. McDonald, who proved himself an exceptionally fine elocutionist.

In the afternoon, the quartette sang "Uncle Moon," "An Irish Lullaby," "A Home in Ole Virginny," and they gave a travesty on the way in which a modern church anthem is sung that brought them much applause, also a comical bit all about women and their vagaries. Mr. Cannon, the baritone of the quartette, sang in splendid voice, "Mother Machree" and Mr. McDonald gave as a reading "A Soliloquy on an Old Shoe."

The evenings programme, with the four singers appearing for the first sections in full Highland costume, opened with a melange of Scottish airs, followed by a travesty on "Comin' Thru the Rye," "Roamin' Through the Gloamin'" with solo by Mr. McDonald, and the lovely measures of "Lassie o' Mine." "The Kilties' March" and "Annie Laurie," further numbers, were rendered with all the expressive charm, ease in rendition and excellent harmony which characterizes this very fine quartette. "The Sailors' Chorus" was a nautical ending to the first portion of the programme, which was followed by a more modern type of programme, opening with a peppy quartette version of "Yes, Sir, That's My Baby" and other popular airs, and progressing to "A Little Close Harmony" and a comical stunt in "Laugh a Bit." Mr. McDonald then gave a reading "I Forget," in which his characterization of an old man, reminiscing in the twilight, was superb.

Messrs. Cannon and Jones gave a splendd rendition of the popular "Tenor and Baritone" duett, and the quartette sang "The March of the Guards," "De Sandman," and, in costume, gave a whimsical burlesque of the famous quartette number from "Rigoletto." A further reading by Mr. McDonald was the favorite, "That Old Sweetheart of Mine" and a very funny affair, which met with uproarious applause, of Old Man Brown and the Clock. A rendition by the quartette of Kipling's hymn, "Before Action," concluded the musical programme of the evening.

"The Home Beautiful"

Mr. E. A. Marshall's' picture talk on "The Home Beautiful" was interesting, but slightly out of focus of his listeners. He talked in terms of expense, and illustrated his discourse by means of a house which sported a pergola, a tea house, and shrubbery effects where five and ten dollar spruce trees were mere bagatelles in the ensemble effect achieved finally. Furthermore, to one listener, at least, his picture was altogether too crowded, giving an appearance to his completed garden of too much frippery.

Mr. Marshall illustrated admirably the right and wrong method of acquiring a home and beautifying that home later, using Mr. Green and Mr. Wise as examples of contrary endeavors. He recommended as a basis of all gardening efforts the invaluable quality of "plant sense," in deciding just what to use and how to treat it. "You can't raise a canary bird by feeding it beefsteak," he said, with regard to putting plants in the shade that required sun, and vice versa.

In the foreground of a dark-colored house, light-colored shrubbery and bright flowers were essential, and low-hung verandahs required low-growing shrubs, instead of overpowering tall ones.

"The character and culture of a man may be determined by the way he treats his front door yard," said Mr. Marshall, "just as the character and culture of a woman is manifested in the way she keeps house."

"No one knows the real value of a hedge of evergreens placed at the north side of the house," he also asserted, "in the way of keeping down the coal bill and in the shelter afforded stock thereby in the case of a farm home."

Treatment of Soil.

For the respective treatment of alkali and limestone soil, the speaker recommended the use of aluminum sulphate and Epsom salts, and went on to illustrate the common adornment of the average American and Canadian garden in the inclusion in his picture of a line of brightly-colored clothes.

"Never buy the delicate variety of roses first," he said, recommending the purchase of the hardier types of initial endeavors in the rose line, "and never water roses at night. That induces mildew."

Evergreens, whose use was enthusiastically recommended, should be purchased with balls of earth adhering to their roots. Otherwise, in all likelihood, they will be dead, "and you might as well put up a tombstone in your garden."

"The line at the base of the planting and the line at the top should always be a broken line," he said, giving advice as to the following out of certain rules in planting shrubbery, with low shrubs for the verandah, and tall, distinctive ones for the corners and the door posts.

The use of trees was highly beneficial to the health. The carbonic acid gas expelled by the lungs is absorbed by the trees, which in turn give out the oxygen needed by the humans in their vicinity. The Norway maple, the alianthus, and the London plane tree were splendid for city use, asserted the lecturer, who closed with an adjuration to his listeners to first get the vision of their desired homes and then work to a realization of their ideals.

This evening's programme promises to be exceptionally interesting, in a presentation of the well-known stage success, "Applesauce," and to-morrow's programme will include the Herrick Entertainers in a popular entertainment, and "The Inexcusable Lie," a lecture by Private Peat, which is said to be one of the high lights of the Chautauqua programme.

FROM HON. C. N. GORDON.

July 20th, 1926.

The Editor, Peterboro Examiner.

Dear Sir,—In Mr. Peck's letter to The Examiner of yesterday, he does not deny that he voted against the budget. In his first letter to The Examiner, he said emphatically that he did not vote against the budget, which provided for penny postage, income tax reduction and automobile tariff reductions.

I have a telegram in my possession from the private secretary of the clerk of the House of Commons, in answer to my enquiry, stating that Mr. E. A. Peck voted against the budget. I also have the votes and proceedings of the 18th and 19th of May, which shows that Mr. Peck voted against the budget.

Mr. Peck said he did not vote against the legislation dealing with the revenue or taxation matters.

Mr. Peck knows as well as anyone else that when a principle is voted upon in the budget and the Minister of Finance has declared the change in taxation he proposes, and when that has been decided by the House, rarely, if ever, is the legislation carrying into effect the announced intention of the Government voted upon.

However, Mr. Peck said that he did not vote against the budget. He did vote against the budget, and his vote is so recorded, and if he can produce a letter from the clerk of the House of Commons, saying that he did not vote against the budget, which announced penny postage, income tax reduction and automobile tariff reductions, I will pay forthwith to Saint Vincent's Orphanage $100, and to the Children's Aid Society $100.

There is no need of Mr. Peck saying this discussion is at an end. I intend to debate this from the platform throughout the next campaign, because he has voted as I have said, and his denial of it is not true.

Yours truly,
G. N. Gordon.

THE SUBURBAN SALE.

The attention of Examiner readers living outside the city is called to the four days' Suburban Sale arranged by Peterboro merchants, commencing tomorrow.

The stores of Peterboro will endeavour to show during this sale that in the quality of their goods, the wide selection that is offered their customers, the reasonableness of their prices and the courtesy of their service, they can stand comparison with anything anywhere.

In short, they hope to prove to the people of this whole district that it pays to shop in Peterboro, not only during this sale, but generally and always.

Examiner readers should not fail to closely scan the special advertisements.

They will find surprising prices offered in many lines of merchandise, and should have no difficulty in deciding that it will be profitable for them to visit Peterboro during the next four days.

Peterboro is an attractive city that offers much to its visitors, and the people of the district are being given an unusual opportunity to combine business and pleasure by giving this city a call this week, always remembering, of course, that Thursday afternoon is observed as a half holiday here and the stores will not be open on that day.

ORILLIA SHOWS THE WAY.

Orillia has already taken steps to launch a worthwhile celebration of the 60th anniversary of Confederation next year, and a committee has been chosen to work out the details of the demonstration.

The Examiner would not only like to see a similar committee set to work in Peterboro, but would be glad to learn that communities everywhere throughout Canada were being stirred into activity, and that the work of these communities would be linked up by a national committee with a view to having the programme identical in all parts of the Dominion.

We have been altogether too careless in our treatment of Canada's national holiday, and the 60th anniversary affords an opportunity of making up in some measure for the neglect shown towards Dominion Day in the past.

Orillia is showing the way, and it is the duty of all centres to follow the excellent example of the northern town.

Demonstrations that amount to anything cannot be planned in a few weeks, and for that reason the local and national organizations should be established as soon as possible that a plan acceptable to Canadians generally may be worked out and perfected in ample time for communities to be organized.

Canada's celebration of her national birthday next year should be extensive enough and dignified enough to be worthy of the anniversary of the beginning of this great Dominion.

OLD BOYS' REUNIONS.

Whenever an old boys' reunion has been mooted in Peterboro the suggestion has been received with so much throwing of cold water that the initial enthusiasm was quickly and effectually drowned out.

The idea of such a reunion has been condemned by worthy local citizens as out of date, behind the times.

Yet it is singular that only Peterboro apparently is wide-awake enough to detect the fact that an old home week is old fashioned.

Communities all over Ontario have held successful reunions.

Old boys and old girls from all parts of the Continent have been glad to return to their former homes to renew old acquaintances and visit the spots hallowed by memories of childhood days.

Just now, for instance, Brockville is in the midst of a reunion, "one wonderful week," and over 1,000 former residents were back for the first day of the demonstration, with others due to arrive later.

The home-comers will enjoy the visit to the old town, the citizens of Brockville will appreciate the opportunity of welcoming many old friends, and the reunion in short will be a good thing all round.

It is too bad Peterboro has discovered that old home weeks are behind the times.

If we were not so unpleasantly sharp in this respect we might have had "a wonderful week" here.

A CLEAN FIGHT.

Referring to the two candidates who have been nominated in Leeds for the coming election, the Brockville Recorder and Times says that "it may be expected that both will conduct themselves in the manner in which they conducted themselves less than a year ago, and that is, as gentlemen. In this riding, at least, the campaign of 1925 was waged on a high plane and was singularly free from indulgence in personalities and from other practices which are sometimes disagreeable and unhappy accompaniments of a general election. If the campaign about to be undertaken is carried on in the same spirit, all of the electors of the riding, whatever the party to which they incline, will applaud.

"It is possible to be political enemies and yet to preserve personal friendships. It is possible to conduct a campaign without having to resort to practices which may imperil those friendships. And it is also possible to be critical without giving offence. If we know the men whose names will appear upon the ballot-papers which will be marked not so many weeks hence, they will conduct themselves as befits the reputations which they enjoy, the traditions of the parties which they represent and the high office to which they aspire, and they will conclude the campaign as good friends as when they entered it. So, too, unless they wish to appear ridiculous in the sight of all, will those who speak in their behalf or who rally to their support. No general election is so serious an affair or so bitter a contention that it is worth the creation of bad blood. And that, unfortunately, has been the outcome of more than one contest in the history of this Dominion and of this riding."

BETTER PROTECTION.

The Catskill Mountains tragedy in which a summer hotel was totally destroyed by fire with the loss of a dozen lives has revived a demand for safer conditions in such resorts.

A similar fire might occur at any time in one of the many flimsy summer hotels in this country, and when the situation is surveyed it must be admitted that most of our resorts are poorly equipped with safeguards against fire hazards.

Most of them are built of wood and so constructed that a fire would sweep through them in a few minutes, giving the inmates little chance to escape.

One simple precaution that might be taken is to have a watchman on duty during the night in order that speedy warning might be given in the event of an outbreak of fire.

Yet many summer hotels do not even provide themselves or their guests with that measure of protection.

It is the rule, rather the exception, that hotel staffs as well as hotel guests retire for the night, leaving no one awake to give the alarm in the event of a fire. Inspector Stewart, however, has been very insistent that provincial regulations, as to prevention, have been strictly lived up to.

The licensing of summer hotels giving the authorities power to insist upon better protection for their inmates would seem to be justified in view of last week's tragedy, and similar catastrophes both in Canada and the United States.

GROUP GOVERNMENT.

The indications are, it is said, that few third party candidates will be in the field in Ontario for the coming general election. If that is the case throughout the country, it will be appreciated, judging from the criticisms and comments of the past year or more, by the mass of people. The general feeling is distinctly in favor of a straight party fight, and the hope is strong that one or the other side will have a big enough majority to carry on without having to bargain with a few representatives for leave to carry through this or that measure which they have decided is in the public good.

Canadians in general may be all wrong about the group system of government. It may contain all the benefits its advocates claim for it. So far as this Dominion has had experience, it is lacking in everything but opportunity for bargaining for class legislation instead of legislation based upon earnest considerations of the needs of the whole community. True, a strict party government with a fair majority may, and does often enough, pursue a line of action which is not commendable. Generally speaking, however, the people settle the controversies arising therefrom at the next appeal to the polls, and usually settle them as they think right, and not in a blindly partisan spirit. It may mean a longer delay than many of them would wish, but it is none the less a satisfactory method as a general rule.

Back of all the argument and contention is always the fact that in self-governing British countries the people have just the kind of government for which they vote. The voice of the minority can never be silenced in a free country. If it is raised in a worthy cause that cause is bound to get the attention it deserves sooner or later. But a minority group ought not to be the dictator of any country under the British flag.—Brantford Expositor.

OUR PLACE IN THE SUN.

Trade returns and the crop outlook give every reason for gratification. It does not require deep study to show that the trade balance and general prosperity bear an important relation to farm conditions. Bond dealers report decreased borrowing in several directions, and that the West is now sending out more money than it is receiving. That fact is an important reversal of the tide.

It was stated recently that the favorable trade balance for Canada is higher per capita than that of any other country. Our favorable balance, or excess of exports over imports, reached the enormous figure of $401,134,405 in the fiscal year ending March 31 last, which was exceeded in only one previous year, namely, 1918, when it reached $622,637,214. That, however, was during the war boom, and the exports included great quantities of munitions. For five years there has been a steady and rapid increase in the favorable balance, the last year of an excess of imports being 1921. The returns for May of this year showed a considerable reduction in the favorable balance, and it is possible that last year's enormous total may not be maintained. A great quantity of Canada's imports is of raw or semi-manufactured materials for use in our industries, and the business revival may operate to decrease our surplus.

Crops and prices have much to do with the trade situation. In fact, a very few items dominate our entire exports. Last year we sold wheat to the value of $364,201,388, compared with $251,665,844 in 1925, the increase in value being relatively greater than the increase in quantity, owing to higher prices. Our trade in wheat flour is one of the most spectacular in the whole return, shipments being made to no fewer than sixty-two countries to the value of $69,687,598. When the Orient awakens to the value of wheat flour as a food—a condition which apparently is approaching—the market will be further vastly stimulated. At present three-quarters of our exported wheat goes to the United Kingdom.

There is much debate over the export of "raw materials" in wood, but trade reports show that manufactured articles overshadow the unmanufactured. Our export of newsprint last year again revealed a healthy increase, being $102,238,568, while of wood pulp, the intermediate stage, we exported $49,909,870, and of pulpwood, the primary stage, $13,056,057. New mills are being established on this side constantly, thus showing that American manufacturers are accepting the situation that this is the proper place to finish paper. Our water powers, as well as our wood supplies, will settle the fact on an economic basis, regardless of politics.

Several lines of our manufactured goods are establishing a place in the world markets, among them vehicles (principally automobiles) and farm implements. As an example, Canadian automobiles valued at over $1,000 were exported last year to no fewer than fifty-six countries, and our total export of vehicles was $43,180,025, an increase of $5,000,000. Our exports of farm machinery reached $13,628,341, which also was an increase.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier once said that when he came into office the people would know they were prosperous without the aid of Government reports. The evidence of better times is easily found nowadays, but the trade returns make interesting confirmation. —The Globe.

EGG MARKETS

OTTAWA, July 20 (Canadian Press).—An easy feeling continues to prevail on practically all egg markets yesterday.

Toronto—Country shippers report receipts light. They are paying producers, extras 26 to 27, firsts 23 to 24, seconds 20. Toronto dealers are quoting for ungraded eggs, delivered, extras 30 to 31, firsts 25 to 27, seconds 20 to 22. Prices to retailers extras 35 to 36, firsts 31, seconds 27 to 28. Sales are being made in a jobbing way at extras 33 to 34, firsts 29 to 30, seconds 26.

Montreal.—There is an easier feeling on the market. Extras are in fair demand, but other grades are dull. Dealers are paying delivered, for ungraded eggs, extras 31 to 33, firsts 26 to 30, seconds 21 to 25. Prices to retailers extras 38, firsts 30 to 32, seconds 28 to 29. Fresh broilers are wholesaling at 48 to 50, and ducks at 38 to 40.

Winnipeg. — The egg market is steady with receipts showing a decilne and quality poor. Dealers are quoting shippers extras 25, firsts 23, seconds 18, delivered, cases returned. Prices to retailers, extras 35-37, firsts 30 to 32, seconds 26. A car is rolling from Dauphin costing extras 29 1-2, firsts 27 1-4, seconds 23, delivered Winnipeg.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, July 20 (Canadian Press).—The export trade in Canadian grain on the Montreal market yesterday was again dull owing to the fact that English importations did not respond to the higher prices asked.

Owing to the lower premiums prevailing for Canadian Western oats spot prices for car lots were all reduced. However, this did not tend to increase the demand, and business was quiet.

The trade in spring and winter wheat grades of flour was very quiet but prices were well maintained.

The undertone to the market for all lines of millfeed was firm under a moderate enquiry from local buyers.

A strong feeling developed in the market for standard grades of rolled oats and prices were marked up 10 cents per bag.

The demand for eggs was confined to small lots and the volume of business was narrow. Prices were steady. The receipts were 898 cases.

A fair trade was transacted in American No. 1 grade potatoes at $6 per barrel.

The butter market was quiet but steady. The receipts were 1,361 packages.

The cheese trade was without any new feature to note. Western grades sold at 16 3-4 to 17c per pound. The receipts were 8,899 boxes.

The condition of the market for beans was firm on account of the small offerings. Car lots of choice white hand-picked were sold at $2.25 per bushel, and broken lots at $2.35 to $2.45 per bushel.

CHICAGO GRAINS

CHICAGO, July 20 (Canadian Press). — Hot, dry weather forced steep upturns yesterday in the value both of wheat and corn, but heavy profit taking caused the wheat market to react later. A new top price record for the season was touched by December wheat and also by December corn. Wheat closed unsettled 1-4 to 1 3-8 net higher; corn 2 3-8 to 2 7-8 up; oats at 3-8 to 1-2 to 1 5-8 advance, and provisions varying from 2 to 35 cents decline.

Unfavorable crop reports from spring crop territory accompanied the upward swing of the wheat market. With no rain of consequence in the American northwest and with only a few scattered showers in Canada, field advices regarding spring wheat told of additional damage taking place continuously on account of dearth of moisture. For example, a prominent authority telegraphed from Saskatoon, Sask., that for 200 miles back on the way to Regina the prospective yield is well below last year and unless there is good rain within a week the crop will approach disaster on all thin land or poorly farmed fields.

On the other hand, indications that deliveries of wheat on July contracts would begin here to-day tended somewhat to cool the ardor of would-be speculative buyers and to promote selling on the part of holders. Besides, the wheat domestic visible supply total showed an increase of 2,305,000 bushels and yesterday's primary receipts were far in excess of those of a year ago. Enlargement of the amount of wheat on ocean passage was also noted and new business lacked volume.

Word that corn is firing in parts of South Dakota and Nebraska and that drought injury to Iowa corn has also become apparent, was chiefly responsible for the sharp advance of the corn market. The oats market was affected by bad crop reports from the Northwest.

Foreign selling weakened the provision market.

HOW DO YOU SAY IT?

(By C. N. Lurie.)

Common Errors in English and How To Avoid Them.

"CHEAP" AND "LOW PRICED"

Do not use "cheap" when you mean "low priced."

While "cheap" may mean inexpensive or low in price, as when we say, "He wore a cheap suit of clothes," at other times the word "cheap" may mean low priced only as a comparison. For example, a painting by Rembrandt or Murillo may be very cheap at $100,000, but it would hardly do to refer to it as a low-priced picture.

"The dictionaries define the adjective 'cheap' as meaning 'bearing a low price'," says Alfred Ayres, in 'The Verbalist'; "but nowadays good usage makes it mean that a thing may be had, or has been sold, at a bargain. Hence, in order to make sure of being understood, it is better to say 'low priced,' when one means 'low priced,' than to use the word 'cheap.' What is low priced, as everybody knows, is often dear, and what is high priced is often cheap. A diamond necklace might be cheap at ten thousand dollars, and a pinchbeck necklace dear at ten dollars."

DR. FRANK CRANE'S DAILY EDITORIAL.

FORD'S KINGDOM

(By Dr. Frank Crane.)

One of the strangest anomalies of modern times is the realm established by Henry Ford.

Strange to say, we do not find many criticisms of him in the press.

Ordinarily any great accumulation of money would be soundly hated by those who do not have it.

Mr. Ford does not seem to have gone out of his way to palliate the public. He attacked the Jews, he was the target of many bitter arrows shot by the newspapers, and he seems pretty generally to have been deficient in the arts of mollifying public opinion.

But he has always treated labor more than fairly and apparently stands very well among the wage earners.

Yet a recent writer points out that he is worth probably more than a billion. His profits last year were a hundred and fifteen million, which is the earning power of two billions.

There has never been a private fortune like this before in the history of the world.

It is worth more than the wealth of many a nation. Mr. Hinman says that it is worth twice as much as Bolivia or Equador or Latvia. It is worth as much as all Bulgaria, Finland or Uruguay. It is worth as much as Greece or Guatemala, or as much as Haiti and Honduras together. It is worth more than Norway and almost as much as Denmark, coat and hat and boots.

Yet this vast accumulation has grown according to the natural laws of business. It is the product of the enormous manufacture and sale of a necessary commodity. It rests upon the cheap production of automobiles.

Instead of raising money by levying a tax upon thousands of people it provides them with a living wage. It enables them with this wage to build their own schools and improve their own standards of living.

Nobody can say, "I have made Henry Ford rich." He has not begged from bank to bank. He has rather shown his independence of them.

We may not approve of his ideas, but they are his and he is not afraid to utter them.

Altogether the kingdom of Henry Ford is a unique thing in the world's history. It has grown up in the midst of a free country and rests upon a firmer foundation than that of many a state.

Lyrics Of Life

(By Douglas Malloch.)

I'M SORRY FOR US.

I'm sorry for us, and I'll tell you why.
There's always someone trying to buy
The things we have at a cheaper price,
There's always someone giving advice,
Or, if they haven't advice to tell,
There's always someone trying to sell
Us something somehow every day
For always more than we want to pay.

There's always someone talking, too,
About the things that we say and do:
Take John or Mary or Bess or Bill
The way they talk, as neighbor will.
They're always ready to criticize,
Our little failings to advertise—
The way folks tell what they hear and see,
I'm mighty sorry for you and me.

We strive for riches with all our pow'rs,
But there's always someone after ours.
We'd make big money with things we touch
If other folks didn't want so much.
We'd get some place where we're not allowed
If other folks didn't push and crowd.
We have to struggle and fight and fuss—
It's an awful world, and I'm sorry for us.

TALK IT OVER

Not all our relatives approve
The way that we are raising
The children up, and many a move
The neighbors find amazing.
For nothing Father will begin,
Deciding which or whether,
Until we call the children in
And have a talk together.
If Mother wants to decorate,
Or Father sow the clover,
We have a family debate,
And sit and talk it over.

Our house is just a partnership,
A little corporation
We never start upon a trip,
Or think about vacation,
Or buy a little, or a lot,
Or get along without it,
Before we ask the children what
The children think about it.
The children know when Father's poor,
Or family in clover,
Because we're always pretty sure
To sit and talk it over.

The boy is not afraid of Dad,
The girl afraid of Mother
The little problems they have had
Are just like any other.
We've shared a lot of childish tears,
A lot of childish laughter,
But I am looking down the years,
To years that follow after
Some day the girl may want to wed,
The boy become a rover—
Before the final word is said
They'll come and talk it over.

OLD TREASURES AUCTIONED OFF

Sale of Collection in Toronto Draws Large Number of Bidders.

BIDDING SPIRITED.

TORONTO, Ont., July 20 Canadian Press. — The charm of old China rugs and silver has been drawing women to galleries where treasures have been auctioned off. The W. H. Prouse estate collection held some bargains. For instance there was the handsome show-piece, an old English silver resist plate, dating from around 1750. It went for $58. A beautiful old Sheffield tea set service, with urn, and having heavy silver mounts brought $195. A pair of Sheffield three light candelabra bearing the Prince of Wales' crest and one or two pairs used at government house when the Duke and Duchess of York (King George and Queen Mary) were guests there, sold for $45 each. A dignified old solid silver coffee pot, hall marked, went to a $60 bidder. An 18-piece set of Coalport after-dinner coffees in hall-marked silver frames, sold for $43. A Georgian solid silver tankard changed hands at $20. A four piece Wedgewood tea set, and green, with the customary white figures, brought the modest sum of $4.50. Seventeen dollars was the last call for a set of old Davenport copper lustre ware, teapot, and four cups and saucers, while two Davenport copper lustre plates brought $3 each; two old Brittany pewter coffee pots, one dated 1824, and both showing signs of long use, went for $7 each. An early Canadian "lanthorn" brought $8 and a brass sun dial went up to $3.50, while a ship chronometer in mahogany case, from London town, was knocked down at $27. A local doctor became the possessor of a fine Chippendale military bureau, with bookcase, glazed doors, fitted desk and original brass mounts. Spirited bidding brought it up to $200.

Great Britain has a plan to sell to highest bidders the right to insert advertisements on cancellation stamps of letters.

CANADIAN NATIONAL EXHIBITION WILL HAVE INDUSTRIAL DISPLAY FROM BRTISH MANUFACTURERS

Thirty Firms To Be Represented in 1,200 Feet Area.

DECORATIVE PLANS.

Model of Famous Ship of Sir Francis Drake and Portrait of King.

MONTREAL, Que., July 20 (Canadian Press). — Despite the recent British industrial troubles and the present coal strike, this year's exhibition of British industries at the Canadian Exhibition in Toronto, commencing August 28, will be greater than ever. So stated Brian M. Bellasis, of the exhibitions section, Federation of British Industries, who arrived in Montreal yesterday on his way to Toronto.

Thirty-five British manufacturers will be represented, said Mr. Bellasis, the exhibits taking in a gross area of 1,200 feet. This is larger than occupied at any previous Fair. The Federation has had annual exhibits at the Toronto Fair since 1923.

Shipments of the exhibits will be commencing at the end of this month, continuing in August. Many of the firms will have direct representatives at the Exhibition, others being represented by their Canadian agents.

Lion Design.

Mr. Bellasis, who is going ahead to arrange the preliminaries, intends to make the British display the most striking of all. He has brought over the British lion design of Alfred Stevens, which was used for the rails around the British Museum. Some years ago these rails were removed, being converted for use around other public buildings. Reproductions of the lion will surmount the pillars dividing the stairs occupied by the exhibitors.

Another decorative feature will be a model of Drake's ship, the Golden Hinde, in which the great Elizabethean sailor and explorer sailed around the world in the 16th century. This model will be a central feature of the section, typifying the world expansion of British trade.

Still another feature is a life-size portrait of the King, showing His Majesty dressed in khaki. It was painted by special permission during the war by the artist Mordecai.

Mr. Bellasis observed that, for the first time, the New Zealand Government will have an exhibit at the Toronto Fair; also Sierra Leone, a Crown colony on the west coast of Africa.

SAYS THREE MEN PLOTTED DEATH OF REV. NORRIS

Diabolical Conspiracy Alleged By Member of Church and Searchlight Staff.

FORCED TO SHOOT.

Congregation Expresses Faith and Trust in Minister.

FORT WORTH, Texas, July 20.—The first Baptist church is in possession of evidence that there was a "diabolical conspiracy to kill the pastor of the church," declares a brief statement issued by J. J. Nickel, of the Church and Searchlight staff this afternoon.

Dr. J. Frank Norris, the pastor, already had declined to make any statement regarding the existence of a "conspiracy." Dr. Norris shot and killed D. E. Chipps, lumberman, here last Saturday. Dr. Norris, who is the editor of the Searchlight, said he shot in self defence.

"When the proper time comes," the statement concluded, "this evidence will be proven by unimpeachable witnesses."

After giving the statement, Mickle, who described himself as a former United States Secret Service and newspaperman, indicated that there were three principals in the alleged conspiracy.

"They sacrificed the best man of the three," he declared.

"You mean Chipps?" he was asked.

"Yes," said Mickle, and declined to say any more.

Assured by messages of faith from members of his congregation, the Rev Frank Norris—dynamic pastor of the First Baptist Church, who has been termed the "Texas Tornado"—today prepared his own defence against charges of murdering D. E. Chipps, wealthy lumberman, Saturday.

"I shot in self-defence. My life was in jeopardy," Norris said. "It may be that I shall handle my own case, that is in the event it ever reaches the point of trial. So far I have retained no counsel," Norris said.

Pleased, Gratified.

"I am pleased and gratified by the expressions of faith and trust which members of my congregation have extended to me over the week end," Norris said. He pointed to a group of telegrams lying on his desk and referred to the hundreds of people who after the services at which he preached on Sunday gathered about to clasp his hand.

Prominent among the telegrams was one from the First Baptist Church of New York, advising him that the shooting would have no adverse bearing on Norris' scheduled services at that church beginning the first Sunday in August.

Mebers of his congregation which he has built to a regular attendance of 5000—apparently believe him. This was evidenced on Sunday when just a few hours after he had been released on $10,000 bond in connection with Chipps' shooting, he took the pulpit for regular Sunday service. More than 6,000 persons crowded the church.

LITTLE GIRL'S FOOT ALMOST SEVERED

BURNBRAE, July 20.— A very serious accident occurred here on Saturday when the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Neil Third had a foot almost severed by the knives of the mowing machine. The little girl had been picking daisies and was probably unaware of her danger. She was rushed immediately to the hospital and at last reports was progressing as favorably as could be expected.

DARING ROBBERY OF DIAMOND STORE

Bandits Spring Double Surprise on Police—Use New Method.

NEW YORK, July 20 (Canadian Press).—Three bandits armed with revolvers up the jewelery shop of Hyman and Faigin in Maiden Lane yesterday afternoon and escaped with $75,000 worth of diamonds.

The bandits sprang a double surprise on the police by committing a robbery below the police dead line and by using a new method to get "lay." They negotiated with the firm for a week for the purchase of a diamond in order to gain a knowledge of the terrain.

To-day they appeared to close the deal, drew guns on Hyman and Faigin and a customer who was in the shop, tied the trio up, scooped up the loot and departed. Two of the robbers lost themselves in the throngs in the financial district without difficulty, but the third fled the hue and cry of seventy-five policemen and detectives, escaping by walking in at the front door of a big building and out the back door.

CHICAGO, July 20.—Upward of a dozen persons died yesterday from the record-smashing heat wave which overspread the Middle West on Saturday and brought the mercury to new high levels yesterday.

The Middle West and North-West probably will have another hot day to-day, weather bureau officials indicated last night. Some hope for relief was held out with the prediction of possible thunder showers for some of the sweltering States.

Chicago experienced its hottest day of the year when the mercury reached 94 at 4 o'cloc. Six deaths here were attributed to the heat. Two deaths were reported from South Dakota, one at Sioux Falls, where the mercury was at 103, and one at Mitchell, where it was 107. Lisbon, N.D., reported an official reading of 108.

Minnesota reported three heat deaths and one occurred at Alliance, Neb. Points in Nebraska, Missouri, the Dakotas, Minnesota and Illinois all reported yesterday was the hottest of the year, with the mercury hovering about the century mark.

The president, Mrs. Ira Lowes, was in the chair, and conducted the meeting, which opened by singing The Maple Leaf Forever, with Mrs. Shield at the piano, in the absence of the organist, Mrs. Joshua Eggleston.

The minutes of the June meeting were read and on motion were adopted as read. In the items of unfinished business the secretary read the treasurer's report (upon request) which shows a balance of $13.99 on hand after the last payment on the Institute piano, which was purchased only seven months ago. The Institute is to be congratulated upon the success of the undertaking. In the meeting, the president expressed her appreciation of the co-operation and help of the members.

Among the correspondence read by the secretary was a letter from the department, asking the Institute to organize a garment making club, under the supervision of a competent woman, who could devote two Saturdays each month to the girls ranging from 12 to 18, to teach them plain sewing. This was left over to a future date, when arrangements could be made.

Also a letter from the department, asking the Institute to join in the competition of drawing a poster to show all the different activities of its branch during the year, same to exhibited in the Women's Building at the Canadian National Exhibition in September.

The president explained to the members, who had ben looking forward to the monster union picnic of all the branches in the district, to be held by the district, that the picnic was withdrawn owing to such a small attendance of the district officers at a special meeting called to make arrangements for the programme of the picnic. There were only four present.

It was also decided by a majority of votes that the regular meetings to commence at 2.30 instead of 3 o'clock to allow the ladies to get home earlier in the evening owing to the busy season of the year.

Mrs. Rutherford and Mrs. Lowes were responsible for the programme of the meeting; the former being unavoidably absent. Mrs. Lowes introduced an old time spelling match which caused much merriment, choosing Mrs. Thomas Graham and Mrs. Chester Best for captains; Mrs. Graham's side winning.

Miss Juan Shield sang "Jesus Loves Me," which was ably done and appreciated by all. After the roll call a collection was taken and the meeting brought to a close with "God Save the King."

A social half hour was enjoyed while the hostess and the lunch committee, Mrs. James Sisson and Mrs. Chester Best, served a dainty lunch.

MARMORA NEWS

MARMORA, July 20.—Services at Zion and Marmora United Churches were taken on Sunday last by the Rev. F. J. Pethick of Lindsay. Preaching at the latter church in the evening from the text, "My God shall supply all your need," he likened the Christian church to a service station and the soul to an automobile. The church is the service station for needy hearts. Like the cars, human lives need adjustment, repairs and supplies. We do not understand all we should like to about the many parts of a car, and just the same we don't understand the human heart fully. God has inspired men to erect service stations along life's pathways. In our journey from the cradle to the grave "Will the engine of our soul hold out?" becomes the chief question. The church, like the service station, serves four purposes. It gives information regarding the journey ahead. It advises, however, no detours, for on the safe road there are difficulties enough. It serves, too, for repairs. There is much wear of the soul through the friction coming to it in life. The human heart is one of the finest pieces of machinery. It runs so easy and smooth that you can scarce hear its beats. Lots of people ride through life on a flat tire, as it were. Car troubles take a lot of searching out sometimes. We are reminded of the Psalmist saying, "Search me, O God, and know my heart." Service stations serve the further use of being places where a car may be stored. The church is a great place of refuge for the soul. Lastly, the service station is the place for supplies. Through it our every need may be supplied, for before it stands the Cross of Calvary whence the healing streams flow for the needs of all human hearts.

Visitors Haunt Crowe Lake.

Sunday being warm, haunts of Crowe Lake proved alluring to visitors from far and near. Marble Lake pavilion received a fair amount of patronage during the day.

Electric Storm.

The electric storm which passed over this village on Saturday evening extinguished the lights and plunged the Town Hall into darkness while the weekly picture show was in progress.

Lawn Social.

The lawn social under the auspices of Marmora United Church, advertised to be held on the church grounds on Tuesday, July 27, has been postponed till the 29th. Marmora band and a male quartette will furnish instrumental and vocal music and other special features combine to make the event most attractive.

Gums Firmed to Healthy Coral Tint

Accept full 10-day tube of this new way that leading dental authorities urge. Your teeth are not naturally dull . . . simply clouded by a dingy film coat now easily cleared off.

Dental science has discovered that one's teeth seldom are naturally "off color." Hence you can now restore them to dazzling clearness quickly. Can firm tender gums to healthy coral color.

Run your tongue across your teeth. You will feel a slippery sort of film, coating them, that absorbs discolorations from food, smoking, etc. A film ordinary dentifrices won't clear off successfully.

Beneath it are those gleaming teeth you envy. Results are amazing when it's removed. Thus leading dental authorities now widely urge a new-type, film-removing dentifrice called Pepsodent, different from all others.

Put old ways aside. Get Pepsodent at any drug store. Ten-day tube sent free.

The meeting then adjourned.

Sunday School Picnic.

The annual picnic of St. John's Sunday School was held on Thursday last to Sandy Point and was most successful in every particular. The teachers and officers have earned the right to be called optimists by choosing St. Swithin's Day for the outing, but the "rainy saint" did his best and the day was glorious, an ideal summer day in fact. About one hundred attended, including about fifty children. The trip was made by motor, leaving the Sunday School about two o'clock, returning in the evening about eight-thirty after one of the most successful picnics in the history of the parish. A picnic for the afternoon and evening was an inovation and a very successful one. Adults and children spent a happy time.

Softball and swimming provided amusement, and a programme of races was run off, with the following results:

Mr. Stenner's class—1, Wilbert Dever; 2, Stanley Dever; 3, Harding Stuart.

Mr. Cox's class — 1, Lillian Stuart; 2, Constance Stuart; 3, Alice Dench.

Mr. Robertston's class—1, Rollie Kennedy; 2, Thomas Chappell; 3, James Gray.

Miss Hampton's class—1, Olive Edwards; 2, Mae Dever; 3, Lillian Mason.

Miss Ida Webster's class—1, Jack Smith; 2, Darcy Mason; 3, John Brown.

Miss Winnifred Payne's class — Girls—1, Lillian Wannamaker; 2, Alice Chappell; 3, Nellie Stenner. Boys—1, Ralph Mason; 2, Jack Chappell; 3, Allan Mason.

Visitors' race — 1, Jack Strickland; 2, Pollie Strickland; 3, Kenneth Dawson.

There was also a peanut scramble which caused lots of amusement and made for great agility among the children.

The picnic was successful in every particular, perhaps most of all as a parish reunion.

Receive Certificates.

The following Lakefield pupils of the Peterboro Normal School received interim second-class certificates: Herman Branch, Vera J. McIlmoyl, Selina Maud Nixon, Harry Wannamaker and Sadie E. Young. A limited third-class certificate was received by Harry T. Hill.

C. A. Crusaders.

One of the members of the Church Army Crusaders will speak in St. John's Church on Sunday morning next in connection with the "Crusade of Witness" being made in the dioceses of Montreal, Ontario, Toronto and Niagara this summer.

Annual Picnic.

The annual picnic of the Peterboro District Council of the A.Y.P.A. will be held on Thursday next to South Beach.

Gardens Look Well.

In spite of the late spring, gardens are in good condition and vegetables are doing well. The warm rains have promoted rapid growth and the crops will be quite up to normal, if not better.

Complaints from certain localities show that the cut worm has been busy and has made havoc of vegetables, especially cabbage and cauliflower. Complaints have come from individual gardeners and are not confined to one particular section.

Hay has been cut and the crop appears to be very good, much better than was at first anticipated.

Other crops are doing well and there is every prospect of a good harvest.

ANNUAL PICNIC HELD AT WALLACE'S POINT

Sunday School Journeys To Point For Annual Outing.

MILLBROOK, July 20—The Sunday school of St. Thomas' church held its annual picnic at Wallace's Point, on Thursday afternoon, about eighty being in attendance.

Fine weather favored the occasion, and this, with the pleasant social side of the gathering, and the active interest taken in the good sports' programme, made the outing one of the most enjoyable and successful in the history of the school. The rector and his wife, Rev. Canon and Mrs. Allen, and the assistant, Rev. Mr. Purchase, were present and were active in promoting the success of the undertaking, the teachers and officers of the school giving able assistance, Messrs. A. H. Barnes, R. Stone, and A. A. Needler looking after the sports' items.

A softball game between the Scouts and the girls afforded much amusement and interest to the onlookers, the former, after a hard battle, having the luck to win out. Messrs. Barnes and Wilkinson acted as plate and base umpires, respectively. Tht teams lined up:

Girls—E. Russell, p; D. Armstrong, c; D. Fowler, 1b; K. Fowler, 2b; K. Donnelly, ss; E. Fallis, cf; Rev. Mr. Purchase, rf; Joyce Wood, lf; N. Lamb, ss.

The long tea-tables, laid under the trees, offered substantial satisfaction to the appetites, sharpened by healthy exercise, the variety of good things provided disappearing rapidly when the hungry picnickers filled every available place.

Cars and trucks conveyed the young folk to the picnic grounds, the drive being an enjoyable feature of the annual outing.

Tasks

By SHIRLEY RODMAN WILLIAMS

NO MATTER how much easier it may seem many times to do a task oneself, it is only kindness and foresightedness to see that each child has certain responsibilities and executes them every day. Habits of helpfulness and thoughtfulness, like other habits, are formed while young. We all crave considerate, helpful children. Then why deliberately set about to make them selfish by waiting on them and denying them the joy of feeling they're useful? They'll really love you more for training them because they'll appreciate what is done for them. Not to overlook the fact that you'll be less tired and so have more energy to give to their interests.

MOTHER says it isn't good
That anybody ever should
Have nothing any day to do but play.
Everyone should have his task,
So he'd never have to ask
"Is there anything I have to do today?"

Towser has to watch the house,
Kitty Gray must catch her mouse.
Aunt Marcella always bakes the pies and cakes,
Dickie sings in windows sunny.
Father goes to work for money,
Annie washes all the dinner cups and plates.

Seems sometimes I do the most,
Dress myself and watch the toast;
Educate myself by learning things at school,
Run on errands for my mother,
Wheel my chubby baby brother
And feed the goldfish swimming lazy in their pool.

Still it's very nice that way—
Having things to do each day.
If mothers do it all it's hardly right,
Mine has always time for fun,
And when everything is done
She reads my books to me most every night.

ELOQUENT SERMON ST. JOHN'S CHURCH

Rev. John E. Griffith Preaches at the Both Services.

CAMPBELLFORD, July 20.—The pulpit of St. John's United Church was ably occupied by Rev. John E. Griffith, M.A., on Sunday and the congregations greatly enjoyed his sermons at both services.

In the morning, Rev. Mr. Griffith gave a short talk to the children telling why parents use the word "Don't" to them so much and illustrating his talk by the story of a band of Puritans who wandered to the Berkshire Hills. In the valley were snakes and scorpions but on the hill top were the clean living things. One day a little girl wandered to the valley and a serpent was about to spring, when an eagle, which was hovering over her, sprang upon the serpent and carried it away. The teachers and assistants of Sunday school work were compared to the eagle and were the means of teaching and leading the children to do what was right.

His text was taken from 13th chapter of 1st Corinthians: "For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face! now I know in part; but then shall I know even also as I am known." And he gave an excellent discourse on the work of the church and the different classes of people who compose the world and how they have any bearing with the work of Christianity.

In the evening he spoke from the text, "Lord I believe; help thou my unbelief."

The music for the day was special. Miss Emma Meiklejohn sang a solo in the morning and the choir sang several anthems.

CHURCH FESTIVAL.

Presbyterian Church Holds Annual Garden Party on Church Lawn.

MILLBROOK, July 20.—The grounds of Grace Presbyterian church presented an attractive appearance on Thursday evening when the annual strawberry festival, under the auspices of the Women's League, was held.

Flags and streamers were used effectively for decoration purposes. Three long and well-laden tables were laid on the east side where conveniences for serving were available, while benches at intervals on the front lawn invited those who were served at the first tables to enjoy social intercourse during the period of waiting for the formal programme, which was given in the church. An hour or two of a good musical programme furnished entertainment out of doors through the courtesy of Mr. H. R. Armstrong, who had his Orthophonic victrola on hand for this purpose.

The choir of St. Paul's church, Port Hope, provided the entertainment for the evening, a fine programme being rendered. Miss G. Black, the leader and organist presided at the piano, and the pastor of the church, Rev. John Riddle, was chairman. There were no vacant seats when all comers had been accommodated.

After an opening hymn, and invovation, the following selections were given:

Anthem, "Rejoice", by the choir of thirty members.

Duet, "Hark, Hark, My Soul", by Messrs. Doney and Roberts.

Anthem, "Sing Praise to God," by the choir.

Solo, "He Leadeth Me," by Mr. Doney.

Solo, "Morning", by Mrs. Van Alstine; encore, "For You."

Anthem, "O Sing to the Lord with Thanksgiving", by the choir.

Solo, "Sailor's Song" by Mr. Taylor.

Anthem, "Hosanna," by the choir.

Address by Mr. Marks, president of the choir, in response to the thanks of the gathering for the excellent entertainment provided, expressed by Mr. Riddle.

Solo, "Smile", by Mr. Wells; encore, "Kentucky's Way of Saying Good-Morning."

Duet, "Gently Lord, O Gently Lead Us"; encore, "Smile on My Evening Hour."

National Anthem.

Benediction.

Mrs. R. J. McKnight is president of the Women's League, and was active in promoting the success of the evening, a few of those assisting her being: Mrs. J. D. Armstrong, Mrs. W. T. A. Deyell, Mrs. S. E. Eakins, Mrs. C. Thorndyke, Mrs. T. Ingram, Mrs. Belch, Mrs. Harry Ball, Mrs. Milton Fallis, Mrs. Seton, Misses E. Hunter, May Hales, Ethel McKnight, Mina Gibson, Marguerite Russell, Ruth Thorndyke, Vanita Ingram, Florence Larmer, and several others.

The total receipts were over $125. A sale of baking was held at the close, the large number served at the tables not exhausting the generous supply of cakes, pies, etc., donated by the ladies of the congregation.

Mrs. J. H. Paul, 8th Line, Cavan, has her little grand-niece, Ruth Salter, of Toronto, with her for the summer holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Wolfe (nee Jean Thorndyke), of Peterborough, were guests of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. Thorndyke, on Friday.

Mr. F.W. Bowen, M.P., of Orono, was a visitor in town on Friday and attended the garden party held that evening, under the auspices of Grace Presbyterian church.

Miss Alice Armstrong, who was last year a pupil at the Port Hope High school, has been successful in passing her examinations at the Peterborough Normal school, her name appearing with several others from this locality who attended the Normal during the year just closed, and are now ready for the teaching profession.

Miss May Byam is supplying as clerk in the J. McBride store while Mrs. Ivan Gray (nee Theo McBride) is absent on her honeymoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Wellington Pickup and two children, Jack and Ann, are guests of Councillor J. R. and Mrs. Eakins, Mr. Pickup motoring from the city and joining his wife and family who have been here for the past two weeks.

Glover delighted the audience in her full, clear, sweet voice with the following vocal selections, "I Coudn't Could I", "Keep On Hopin'" and "Life's Lullaby." Rev. Mr. Hinton of Hastings was present and spoke a few words. Pastor Paul Charbeneau of Toronto also gave a brief address on his mission work in Toronto. Mr. W. MADOC BANKER IS TRANSFERRED Smoker Held and Presentations Made by Citizens—Regret Departure.

MADOC, July 20.—A smoker was held in the Bank of Commerce rooms recently in honor of C. L. Jewell, who is being transferred to the Lindsay branch. About thirty-five men gathered together for this last social hour with Mr. Jewell, who has made many warm friends since coming to Madoc five years ago, and who will be very much missed.

During the evening, Mr. Jewell was presented with a handsome gold watch engraved on the back "To C. L. Jewell, from the citizens of Madoc, 1926," and also with a solid silver casserole and a half-dozen silver butter spreaders, to be given to Mrs. Jewell. F. Curry, Reeve, acted as chairman, and F. Aylesworth very ably made the presentation, voicing in his own inimitable way the sincere regret of the townspeople generally at losing Mr. Jewell as manager of the Madoc branch. While rejoicing in the promotion the move meant to Mr. Jewel, Mr. Aylesworth said, Madoc people could not help but regret the loss of two such excellent citizens as Mr. and Mrs. Jewell had proved to be. Their relative value to the town had been very great. Mr. Aylesworth spoke of the wonderful opportunities a banker had to accommodate the public and of the splendid way in which the guest of the evening had always fulfilled those opportunities. In concluding a speech full of goodwill, praise and humor, Mr. Aylesworth expressed the wish that the same success would attend Mr. Jewell's successor, Mr. Gillespie, and welcomed him to his new home.

Mr. Jewell, to whom the evening and its purpose were a complete surprise, replied, expressing his keen appreciation of the beautiful gifts bestowed upon Mrs. Jewell and himself, and of the thought which had prompted such gifts. Mr. Jewell spoke of his own regret at leaving Madoc, which he had come to look upon as his home, and the citizens generally to whom he had become much attached. He spoke of the interest his work here had given him, including his enjoyment of the work in connection with the baseball team.

Each of the men present spoke a few words of appreciation to Mr. Jewell, and it was with a distinct feeling of regret that farewells were said.

Mr. Jewell was also presented with a fountain pen by the Public Library Board, of which he has been an invaluable member and secretary for some time past.

An immense bonfire was lighted on the shore, and boats were at hand for those who wished to go out on the water, and cards and music for those who preferred the spacious verandahs. Refreshments were served.

MANY MISHAPS CAUSED BY STORM

Barns Are Destroyed By Lightning—Auto Drivers Meet With Accidents.

BELLEVILLE, July 20.—In an electric ctorm which passed over this section yesterday serious damage was done to property, a number of barns being struck and destroyed and several motor accidents resulting. At White Lake Mrs. William Storing was badly injured, so that for a time doctors despaired of her life, when she was thrown through the windshield of an auto against the corner of the White Lake cheese factory when the car she was in struck the building. Her husband, who was driving, could not tell where he was in the darkness and thought he had come to the turn in the road with the result that on turning he struck the building.

William Mullett of Crookston and his wife and daughters were driving home in the storm, and could not see the road. The driver of a motor car following saw their predicament as they were driving along the grass at the side of the road unaware of their danger, but could not give alarm by sounding the horn for fear of their taking more to the ditch at the side of the road. Mr. Mullett, however, at last saw the car, and the accident of which the other had been afraid occurred as Mr. Mullet turned to the ditch, the car overturning. Mr. and Mrs. Mullet were pinned beneath wreckage of the car, but were victims of shock only, while their daughters had been thrown clear of the car.

In Crookston area the storm was so violent that many took to the cellars for safety.

William Cadman of Foxboro' lost a valuable barn with its contents, as well as a thoroughbred Holstein bull which was worth nearly $2,000, when the barn was struck. The loss is not nearly covered by insurance. J. Whalen's barn at Stoco was destroyed when struck by lightning, and the season's crop of hay lost, while the machinery was nearly all saved.

KILLED ON ROAD.

Hamilton Woman Struck Down By Auto After Alighting From Bus.

HAMILTON, July 20—Just after she alighted from a bus at Proctor's Curve, near Burlington, on the Toronto-Hamilton Highway last night, Mrs. Florence Millward, 54 years of age, who was employed at the home of Irwin Proctor, near by, received fatal injuries when knocked down by an automobile driven by James Smiley, 31 Crooks Street, this city. Mrs. Millward's home was at 49 Barnesdale Avenue North, this city.

Traffic was heavy on the highway, and Mrs. Millward, who was sightless in one eye it is said, was unable to see Mr. Smiley's car approaching. She was crossing the highway to enter Mr. Proctor's home when struck, it is said. Mrs. Millward was removed to the General Hospital, but succumbed to her injuries about an hour after being admitted.

ITALIAN STABBED.

Refuses To Name Assailant To Police—Wants To 'Get' Him.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., July 20.—Cardinal Lanoce, an Italian, 40 years of age, who boards with Toby Sappacosta, at 541 Albert Street West, lies in the General Hospital, with three stab wounds in his left breast, in a more or less serious condition. The man who inflicted the damage in what the police say was a drunken row, on the sidewalk at Albert and Allen streets, is still at large. Lanoce knows who stabbed him and admits to the police that he wants to 'get' him before the police make an arrest. The injured man has a slash across his nose, as well as the injuries in the neighborhood of his heart.

COMBINATION TRIP BY RAIL AND RIVER

Outward Journey by Steamer—Return by C. N. R.

Yesterday a very enjoyable combination trip was made by the steamer Stoney Lake to Lindsay, via the Lift Lock, Trent Canal and the Lakes, the return homeward journey being effected by a special train from Lindsay.

Some two hundred happy folk gathered on the sturdy little screw steamer "Stoney Lake," which left the George street wharf a few minutes after half past seven, arriving at the Lindsay wharf at about 6.15 p.m. Thence the return journey was made by a special train leaving Lindsay at 7.25 p.m., arriving at this city at 8 p.m.

The Weather

The weather was all that could be desired, the heavy thunderstorm of the previous Saturday night having thoroughly purified and cleansed the atmosphere. There was a clear, cloudless sky until within an hour of the termination of the water journey; a pleasant, gentle breeze blew all the way from this city until the mouth of the Scugog river was reached when the sky became slightly clouded.

On the Outward Journey

Leaving here at 7.30 a.m. the boat negotiated the lift and other locks and did the passage to Lakefield in exactly three hours where we met the S. S. Islanda, with which vessel we exchanged the usual maritime salutation; she was proceeding to disembark her passengers at Lakefield wharf, where a train was waiting to bring them into Peterborough.

On the Lakes

Young's Point was reached about 11 and evidently the breeze and fresh air combined had made many of the trippers hungry, for then there seemed to be a big run on dinner baskets. And shortly after the saloon bell was rung to call a contingent of passengers to the dining tables in the saloon.

There was no orchestra on board but several willing and nimble hands were soon busy at the piano, playing dance music which needless to say soon procured a considerable number of dancers. Others played vocal music and various songs were sung. Two young ladies, Miss Timm and Miss Jay, were the principal contributors and the thanks of those on board were tendered to them for their music was infinitely preferable to the jazz music so frequently encountered.

Passing through the double lock at Burleigh we steamed on past Lovesick, Buckhorn, Bobcaygeon, Gannon's Narrows through those pretty lakes with which many of my readers are even more familiar with than I am. Altogether it was a worthwhile trip, and if there were any strangers aboard, they may well have been surprised at the extent and beauty of our Lake district, and a finer day for the inspection could not well have been found.

And then suppers became the order of the day and in due course the mouth of the Scugog river was entered and we proceeded up to Lindsay. There an hour or thereabout was allowed to walk across the town to the Railway station, where the special train was in waiting for its passengers, everyone of whom appeared to have thoroughly enjoyed his or her outing.

The Stoney Lake remains at Lindsay until Wednesday morning. On Tuesday she takes out a picnic party connected with the Queen street United Church, while on Wednesday she returns with a party from Lindsay, who will make the trip here by water, returning to their own home town by rail.

As is always the case, the management, officials and crew of the boat did all in their power to promote the happiness and the comfort of the picnickers.

20-year Corn Removed

Even a corn or callous of twenty years' obstinacy has to yield to Radox Bath Salts. Read what an actual user of Radox has to say from personal experience:—

"Wish herewith to thank you for benefits received from the use of Radox Bath Salts. It has completely removed a callous I have had for the past 20 years after three foot baths. Needless to say, I have recommended it to several of my friends, who I know are using it with beneficial results."

24th Feb., 1925.

What Radox has done for others it can do for you. There is no need to endure the pain of an obstinate corn for even one one day more. Radox ends corns once and for all because when you put your foot into a foot-bath containing a tablesponful of Radox Salts the dead skin (of the corn) combines with the Radox Salts to form a protein salt of the actual corn itself. This protein salt dissolves in water like ordinary salt and so loosens the corn that it may be lifted out bodily, root and all. The Radox Salts do not affect the living skin. It is only the dead skin of the actual corn which is dissolved.

Radox Bath Salts

Your druggist has Radox Bath Salts in stock or can get them for you. Ask for the pink Radox package and refuse any substitute. 60c Half Pound Pink Package

SEPTEMBER 14 PROBABLE DATE

Expected That Premier Will Announce That Date To-night.

CAMPAIGN OPENS.

TORONTO, July 20.—The voters of Canada will go to the polls in the approaching general election on Tuesday, September 14th. Official news of the selection of this date by Premier Meighen for the purpose of the voting reached high Conservative circles here last evening, and came with an authority which left no possible room for doubt as to the accuracy of the report. The formal announcement of the date, it is understood, will be made by Right Hon. Arthur Meighen when he addresses a public meeting to-night in Ottawa and formally opens the Conservative campaign.

Premier Meighen will be preceded by Hon. E. L. Patenaude, Minister of Justice; Senator Gideon Robertson, and the two Ottawa Conservative candidates, who will be selected earlier in the evening.

The Premier is scheduled to sound the keynote of the campaign and outline the issues upon which his Government will appeal to the electors.

The list of returning officers will probably be completed some time before noon to-day. Work on these lists is now well advanced.

To-morrow evening the Premier leaves for the Maritime Provinces, where he will campaign for one week or ten days. It is expected that he will re-enter Ontario about in time to speak at the picnic on August 2 at Island Grove of Colonel T. H. Lennox, K.C., formet member for North York.

MASONS GATHER.

Delegates To Grand Lodge Meet at Fort William.

FORT WILLIAM, July 20.—Over 500 Masons, delegates to Grand Lodge, which opens on Wednesday in the City Hall here, have arrived, and the streets of the Lakehead cities, gay with flags and "welcome" signs, are thronged with visitors. Many delegates are members of committees, which are meeting to-day and to-morrow in the Masonic Temple, Port Arthur. Such committees meeting are Board of General Purposes, Audit and Finance, Grievances and Appeals, Warrants, Benevolence and Credentials.

Even this early the place for next year's convention is being talked of, Guelph and London being the favorites.

The Canadian Pacific Railway Company has placed the steamer Assiniboia at the disposal of the local committee for to-morrow afternoon, for the entertainment of the visitors in a sail around the harbor.

STRUCK ON CROSSING BY PASSENGER TRAIN

Farmer Drives His Waggon On To Crossing and Meets His Death.

KINGSTON, Ont., July 20. — Henry Watts, aged thirty-nine years, a resident of Odessa, met death at noon yesterday when he was struck by the fast passenger train going east at the Ernestown crossing of the Canadian National Railways. Mr. Watts was driving over the crossing in a wagan with a team of horses. Both the horses were killed. It is supposed that he did not hear the train approaching.

The late Mr. Watts is survived by his widow and three children.

VATICAN GARDENERS GO OUT ON STRIKE

First Time in History Vatican Gardeners Lay Down Tools.

ROME, July 20.—The Pope had a strike on his hands yesterday. For the first time in history the gardeners of the Vatican laid down their pruning hooks and spades and struck for higher wages. They said their pay for a nine-hour day, 14 lire, or about a half-dollar, was quite insufficient. They said their strike was but a one-day affair to bring their grievance to the Pope's own ears.

After recovering from the shock of a labor walk-out within the grounds of the apostolic palace, the management agreed to study the question.

As several hundred employees of the Vatican have been complaining of low pay, their demands present a problem which taxes the treasury.

As the Holy See is considered a foreign and sovereign state in its relations to the Italian Government since the loss of the Pope's temporal power, the Vatican servants do not belong to Fascist syndicates; and it is a moot question whether jurists would consider them subject to the Fascist labor laws, including the recent prohibition of strikes.

Il Lavoro, Fascist labor syndicate organ, says that although it cannot approve of the gardeners' disrespect for their superiors, it would seem but just to try to satisfy their demands.

HIGH COST OF POLICE CLUBS

Towel Rollers Were Supplied When Clubs Ran Out During Recent Strike.

LABORITES KICK.

EDINBURGH, July 20.—(Associated Press Cable.)— An item of £800, or nearly $4,000, spent for policemen's clubs during the recent general strike, has aroused the ire of Labor members of the local Town Council. When the available stocks of truncheons were exhausted, towel rollers were bought and doled out to the volunteer officers.

The Laborites declare money was spent like water during the nine-day tie-up, and cite an item of £1,800 for breakfasts, luncheons, cigarettes and liquor. The city authorities replied that the expenses were incurred in connection with an illegal strike, and really should be presented for payment to the Trades Union Congress, who called the strike.

UNCLE WIGGILY

Today's Bedtime Story

By Howard R. Garis

UNCLE WIGGILY'S BLACKBERRIES.

(By Howard R. Garis.)

"Who wants to come with me?" called Uncle Wiggily one day. The kind old rabbit gentleman hopped out of his hollow stump bungalow and stood on the path, a basket dangling from his paws.

"Where are you going?" asked Jingle, who was one of the forty 'leven little bunny children of Uncle Wiggily.

"Are you going after some eggs from Mrs. Cluck Cluck, the hen lady?" asked Jangle.

"I am going to the fields to gather blackberries, so Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy may bake a pie," answered Mr. Longears. "Who wants to go blackberrying?"

"I do!" barked Jackie Bow Wow.

"I do!" chattered Billie Bushytail.

"I do!" mewed Tommie Cat.

"Then come along!" invited Uncle Wiggily, and soon he was leading a jolly procession of animal children across the meadow, through the woods and up hill toward a pasture where grew many blackberry bushes.

"Do you shoot blackberries?" barked Peetie Bow Wow, one of the puppy dog boys.

"Oh, no, of course we don't!" laughed the bunny.

"They lasso the berries, like cowboys lasso cows in the Wild West shows!" crowed Charlie the rooster boy.

Now I've caught you!" the Fox snarled.

"Oh, they do not!" cried Baby Bunty. "You put salt on their tails, the same as you do when you catch birds!"

"Ha! Ha!" laughed Uncle Wiggily. "You are all wrong. We are going to pick blackberries!"

"Well, anyhow, I could shoot them if I had my popgun!" barked Peetie.

"And I could lasso them if I had a piece of our clothesline," crowed Charlie.

"And I could put salt on their tails, if they had tails; but they haven't!" laughed Baby Bunty, and then Uncle Wiggily hopped along with the children until, all of a sudden, Scooter, a little rabbit boy who hadn't lived very long in the country, asked:

"What color are blackberries?"

"Black, of course!" answered Jingle. "Aren't they, Daddycums?"

"Of course!" said Mr. Longears. "And now here we are at the blackberry field, so take your baskets and see who will be the first to get one filled."

So the rabbit gentleman began picking the big, shiny blackberries off the bushes, listening, the while, to the merry shouts and laughter of the boy and girl rabbits, dogs, pussy cats, squirrels and mice.

Pretty soon, all of a sudden, when all was peace and happiness, the Fox thrust his sharp nose out from behind a bush near where Uncle Wiggily stood picking blackberries, and the Fox snarled:

"Now I've caught you!"

"Oh, so you have," sadly answered the rabbit, for the bad chap held him by the paw. The Fox was dragging Mr. Longears away, when all of a sudden, up popped Peetie Bow Wow with his basket filled.

"Oh, Mr. Fox!" barked Peetie, "Take all my nice blackberries, but let Uncle Wiggily go!" and Peetie held out his basket.

"I'll eat your blackberries, but I won't let Uncle Wiggily go!" snarled the Fox, most meanly. He took a greedy pawful of the black things from Peetie's basket and, stuffing them into his mouth, the Fox chewed hard on them. But a moment later he cried:

"Wowchie! Ow! What's this! Oh, all my teeth are broken! Those aren't blackberries, they are black stones!" and letting go of Uncle Wiggily, away ran the Fox as fast as he could run to find a dentist to mend his broken teeth.

"Why, Peetie! These are black stones," said Uncle Wiggily picking up some that the Fox had spilled. "Where did you get them?"

"I picked them up near the brook," barked Peetie. "They were round and black and I thought that's how blackberries grow."

"Ha! Ha!" laughed the bunny uncle. "Blackberries grow on bushes, but it's a good thing you picked stones, instead, for they made the Fox let me alone. Now I'll show you how to get real berries." And he did, and Nurse Jane made a wonderful pie.

So it all happened for the best, you see, and if the rag doll doesn't eat so much sawdust that it runs out of her ears, I'll tell you next about Uncle Wiggily and the raspberries.

DRUG MANIFESTATIONS ON MOUTH TISSUES.

Recently there has appeared in the daily press a striking cartoon, 'The price of coal,' in which was depicted the cost, not in dollars and cents, but in the blood of the entombed miner, and in the tears of his widow and little children. Rather startling when you pause to consider!

So everything is bought with a price even to the common indispensable household match that comes to you at such a trifling cost. What price the match?

Matches were made formerly with white phosphorus and the workmen suffered from dreadful diseases of the bones of the face, through the long continued absorption of the phosphorus. It gained entrance to the tissues through the decayed teeth, followed by symptoms of inflamed gums and loosened teeth, which condition progressed to an extensive necrosis or bone death, which often terminated fatally. Fortunately, this condition is now rarely seen as the law requires protection for workers with phosphorus.

There are yet other forms of chronic drug poisoning, inducing gum manifestations that we may discuss.

Mercury, taken internally as calomel or externally as a salve in too large doses, or where absorbed in the pursuit of certain occupations such as in the manufacture of thermometers, mirrors and scientific instruments, leads to mouth manifestations (where the teeth are present and in poor state of preservation), known as mercurial stomatitis. There is marked pain, soreness of the teeth when brought together, and reddening of the gums, leading on to ulceration, with offensive odor, a copious flow of saliva and varying degrees of fever. Without dental irregularities such as decay and tartar, however, mercurial stomatitis is impossible.

Workers with lead may contract a mouth lesion somewhat similar to mercurial stomatitis. The gum becomes swollen and spongy, and there is found a dark blue line, the so-called 'lead line,' on the margin of the gum tissue, usually on the lower jaw and in the region of the lower incisor. Where no teeth are present, however, the line is not found. Characteristic of advanced cases of lead poisoning is the 'wrist-drop,' the inability to raise the hand from the wrist.

Arsenical poisoning first becomes noticeable in the mouth as a reddening of the gum tissue with bleeding gums. As the condition progresses, death of the soft tissues and of the underlying bone is induced.

Admittedly these lesions are of fairly rare occurence because of the protection afforded workers in these lines; yet there is the constant danger of such where their drugs are not handled with great care. Trifling with drugs of any nature should not be tolerated.

Noteworthy is the fact that in the cases cited, these forms of chronic poisoning are not induced where the teeth and mouth tissues are well-preserved a striking testimony to the value and necessity of a careful mouth toilet.

Jack the Giant Killer was a mighty lucky lad that the wicked old giant did not catch him.

Goliath got what was coming to him by way of a nice little stone which David knew how to deliver with a long-distance punch, and that was that! The giant was slain although David did not go very close to him.

However, when it comes to the story of David and the giant, or any other giant killer, all I want is a chance to tell a little about Wee Davie Shrew the Short-tailed Shrew. Why, this! urry fellow is no b gger than a minute! He is certainly smaller than a field mouse, and is close to the record of being the smallest fur animal, and yet, be it known, he will tackle anything from an elephant to a brother shrew.

The Eskimos would rather meet a polar bear on the ice than meet a little shrew, for they believe he is a regular David for killing giants, and they run for dear life when they find a tiny shrew on their hunting ground.

Davie of the shrew tribe has been seen to brace his feet and go at a wild mouse twice his size. Now, anyone would just naturally expect to see a fight for a few minutes or seconds maybe with the big party the victor, but a short-tailed shrew does not go into a fight against odds with any idea of fighting. Not much! His idea is that of eating, a meal, food, food, food! He wades right into the fight and starts right there and then to eat. And before the other big guy is wise to what sort of a fight he has on with this little David in fur, he finds himself half eaten up. A shrew has to eat so fast and much that he has no time to fight, he just starts to devour his antagonist, and that is all there is to it.

There are many, many kinds of mice, and then there are moles of several kinds, and again we have shrews. We may find a common shrew, or maybe we might run into a short-tailed shrew in the woods or fields. They have long noses, very sharp pointed, and silky fur, and have eyes so small that most folks think them blind. They do not attack men; the Eskimos fear them by superstition. Insects and bugs and worms form most of their food.

SLUMP IN FRANC ALARMS GERMANS

Believed That French Dumping is Rendering Competition Impossible.

FAIL TO PROFIT.

BERLIN, July 20. — (United Press).—The fifteen per cent. slump of the French franc since Saturday has alarmed leaders in German industrial and financial circles.

In many sections it is believed that French dumping is rendering competition impossible, thereby endangering German exports.

The press expresses surprise that the French have failed to profit by Germany's horrible experience with inflation.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.

John M. Weekley, editor of The Ennis Daily News and four associated weeklies, Ennis, Texas, says:

THAT the home business man is entitled to your loyal support in preference to the mail order or foreign concern or door-to-door peddler.

THAT the home merchant helps support your schools, your churches, your institutions of every worthy character; he pays taxes to help provide protection to life and property of yourself and loved ones, whereas the out-of-town concern or peddler draws from your home institutions and gives nothing in return except the goods you buy of him, and for which you may rest assured he has charged you a handsome profit.

THAT if you trade away from home, every other citizen has the same right to do so, and if he did, where would you be, and what would your property be worth?

THAT the home man is the one who extends you credit or other accommodations in time of need or distress, where, as the foreign man insists on the money "on the barrel head." The home man shows an interest in you and yours while you live, and will see that your dependents are properly protected when you are taken away from them. The home man is the one you call upon in times of need, and he is the one who proffers assistance in times of sorrow and distress.

THAT there is every reason why you should cast your lot and your fortunes with your home people. If you would have friends, you must show yourself friendly. If you would have a profitable business, you should help the fellow who makes your success possible. You can't have a good business town if everybody trades away from home.

Isn't it up to you to set the example of home town loyalty?

BERLIN, July 20. Canadian Press. —Customs officials have confiscated 3,000 bottles of wine and other alcoholic beverages in the cellars of the inter-allied military commission.

Protests of the officers in charge that the stock was kept exclusively for soldiers serving on the commission failed to halt the customs officials.

HER OWN WAY
by a Girl of Today

AN EPITAPH.

By this time I realized that I was doing a dishonorable thing, for no matter what anyone else did, I had no right to listen to what Dr. Flint and Mr. Robinson would consider a private conversation.

I went up to the manager's office and was ushered into the room behind it, which belonged personally to Mr. Robinson. Piled up on the desk were the first editions of the afternoon papers. I picked up the one on top and sat down to read. There was nothing on the first page about Miss Cleaver, and only a small story with a one column headline on the second. It read "Girl Commits Suicide." The story gave the mere facts of the tragedy.

Instinctively I thought

"This is the last of her. Here she lies.
The worm at her breast and a clod on her eyes.
Never again to ask for bread,
Never again given a stone instead.
This is the last of her. Here she lies.
The worm at her breast and the clod on her eyes."

Plainly I could read this epitaph of Martha Cleaver between the lines.

I looked up and saw my face in the mirror opposite and shuddered at the awfulness of her story. I realized that, except "by the grace of God," it might have been me.

I saw Martha Cleaver as she was fifteen years before, starting out just as I was today: young, ambitious, wanting to move the world in her own way, blessed with faith in herself.

I saw John Robinson fifteen years younger than he was today, and knew that at that time he could easily have been the ideal of any girl.

He was, of course, very handsome—and perhaps he was in love with her, at least he thought he was, and she was in love with him.

Naturally, he advanced her in the store, or rather he gave her a chance, for which she was made to pay with her soul. And having brains as well as beauty she worked late to make good—not for the money in it, but to make the man understand that she was worthy. She did make good, but she incurred the jealousy of other women who with only one-tenth of her talents thought they could do her work better than she herself was doing it.

Each year the work became harder and harder as more responsibility was put upon her. More and more she had to devote time to her business, less and less she saw of the man she loved.

Tomorrow: Love is a Jealous Fool.

LOVE LETTERS THAT MADE HISTORY
(By Joseph Kaye.)

(By The McClure Syndicate.)

Percy Bysshe Shelley, the poet, was one of the originators of a solution to the domestic triangle that is designed to satisfy all parties. When his wife objected to a new love, he suggested that they all live together in peace and harmony.

Shelley was married to the daughter of an inn-keeper, Harriet Westbrook. Harriet had imagined herself a much misunderstood and persecuted young woman. In addition she saw romance growing on every tree top. When she met the handsome young Shelley, she became infatuated with him and as his parents were wealthy she set herself to capture him. By dint of arduous lovemaking she won him and they eloped to Edinborough and were married.

It did not take long for the infatuation to evaporate and Shelley and Harriet became estranged. Then there came on the scene another romance-eaten young woman craving for sympathy and the poet fell in love with her. This was Mary Wollstoncraft Godwin. The couple ran away to Switzerland and remained there and other parts of Europe for six weeks. When Shelley and Mary Godwin returned, Shelley arrived at his noted decision that he and Harriet and Mary should constitute one pleasant household. But Harriet had been robbed of some of her romance and she left Shelley, and eventually committed suicide.

Shelley was now free to marry Mary but he was not permitted to have charge of his and Harriet's two children. This angered his fatherly feelings but his mode of life could not convince the authorities that he was a proper guardian for children.

The following letter was written by Shelley to Mary after their marriage and at a time when he was hiding from his creditors:

". . . Know, my best Mary, that I feel myself in your absence almost degraded to the level of the vulgar and impure, I feel their vacant, stiff eyeballs fixed upon me until I seem to have been infected with their loathsome meaning—to inhale a sickness that subdues me to languor. Oh! those redeeming eyes of Mary, that they might beam upon me before I sleep! Praise my forbearance, O beloved one, that I do not rashly fly to you and at least secure a moment's bliss. Wherefore should I delay? Do you not long to meet me? All that is exalted and buoyant in my nature urges me towards you, reproaches me with cold delay, laughs at all fear and spurns dreams of prudence. Why am I not with you? Alas, we must not meet!"

Shelley could not come to Mary because, had he come out of his hiding, his creditors would have jailed him.

Shelley's life was cut short at thirty. Always a generous and kindhearted man he was on his way in a yacht while on a visit to Italy, to provide for the comfort of a friend. A squall struck the yacht and Shelley was drowned. His body was cremated—all but his heart, which would not burn.

SOLUTION OF YESTERDAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?
(By Mildred Marshall.)

Facts about your name, its history; its meaning; whence it was derived; its significance; your lucky day, and lucky jewel.

AMY

Amy, signifying beloved, is derived from the Latin amo, to love. There is an adjective amabilis, meaning lovable which gave rise to the feminine proper name Aimable, much used in early times, probably through some complimentary allusion to the quality which is an admirable if sometimes rare feminine possession.

The first Aimable known to history was the Norman heiress of Gloucester who so strongly protested against accepting even a King's son without a name. On English lips, her name became Amabel, which has been handed down practically unchanged in English families. France adopted the name, after placing the stamp of her language upon it, and long honored a Saint Amata or Aimee. She had many namesakes, so there can be little doubt that Norman families are responsible for pretty simple Amy.

England liked the name and adopted that spelling, but France has always clung to Aimee. About the end of the 7th century, the masculine counterpart was given a religious significance by Saint Aime, or Amatus, a hermit of Valais, and later Bishop of Sion, who was persecuted by Merovingian kings.

Amicia was evolved by the English from Aimee and served as an affected form of Amy, just as Edythe and Alys are used by ultra-smart young ladies today for Edith and Alice. The most notable instance of the adoption of Amicia was the daughter of the Earl of Leicester, who brought her country to the fierce old persecutor, Simon de Montfort and left it to the warlike earl who imprisoned Henry III. Her sister carried Amicie into the Flemish family of De Roye where straightway it became Amice.

Amy's lucky gem is the carnelian which gives courage and confidence to its wearer and preserves her from injury or accident. Singers are especially fortunate in possessing a carnelian since it is said to have great potency in promoting strength and clarity of voice. Friday is Amy's lucky day and 6 her mystic number.

The Gipsy Girdle Leads the Summer Caravan of Fashion

CLOTHES may blouse a bit here and billow more than a little there, but the hip in most cases remains slim, close fitting and often well defined. Young girls like the lace-trimmed lingerie touch of the organdy sleeve puff and bosom front with its Byronic collar. The full skirt is straight and the body is simple in construction so that any young girl could put it together who can thread a needle or shift the gears of a sewing-machine. It is very lovely in China-blue taffeta with the bosom and sleeve puffs of a still lighter blue. Checked taffeta is new and the printed radiums and crêpes de Chine are endless in their variety and charm.

HOROSCOPE
"The Stars Incline, but do not Compel"

This is a day of conflicting planetary influences, according toastrology, but benefic aspects dominate.

There is a sign of great promise for the men who guide business and governmental affairs. They are to have new international questions to decide, it is forecast.

Under this sway there will be opportunities for the development of new leaders and many young men will gain recognition.

It is a first rate time for seeking employment or for making effort toward financial betterment. Salaried men and women should benefit.

This should be a fairly lucky rule for making summer trips and hotel proprietors will profit.

Journeys by water are well directed and again astrologers announce that armies of sightseers are to continue to invade Europe.

Foreign politics and foreign economic conditions are to be discussed by editors and speakers more generally than ever before, it is predicted.

Industrial organizations are to develop many political crises among leaders, it is prognosticated, and new directors of policies are to be chosen.

It was predicted that many months ago that violent storms would mark the summer months and these vagaries of weather may be expected to manifest all through the next six weeks.

Mars in the ascendant is held responsible by astrologers for frequent dissensions among public men as well as many domestic difficulties.

Many marriages are to result from the reign of romance which marks this season, but there will be numerous divorces.

Persons whose birthdats it is have the augury of an important year. A removal may bring specially good fortune.

Children born on this day may be subject to many changes in fortune, but they should have the power to win success in unusual avenues of activity.

YOUR JEWEL COLOR FLOWER
By Mildred Marshall

Jet is the talismanic gem for today Worn against the flesh, it protects its wearer from sorrow, unless it is broken or chipped. It should then be thrown away at once, for it loses all its power for good.

Today's natal stone is the pearl Worn against the flesh, it protects its wearer from sorrow and bad luck, and useless worry.

Striped materials are fortunate for wear on this day, especially if green is the predominating color.

WHEN you hear the mellow tone of a Heintzman & Company piano, you perhaps do not stop to consider all that it implies in the way of study and skill—you merely endorse the opinion expressed by great concert artists that it is indeed a perfect instrument.

But there is a story behind that rare quality which distinguishes every instrument of Heintzman & Company make—a story of years of patient endeavor to bring skilled craftsmanship to that point of uniform high endeavor which ensures the same tonal excellence in the piano you purchase as was inherent in the instrument of this same make that De Pachmann used and praised—and in the one that Melba sang to—and the one that Tetrazinni bought for her own personal use.

We are constantly improving the design and always alert to find, if possible, greater beauty in the wood—but the tone of the Heintzman & Company piano cannot be improved upon—for it is perfection itself.

We will gladly mail you illustrated catalogue and price list on request. Pianos are priced from $570 up. Your presens piano accepted in partial payment.

Ninth Inning Rally Decides City Championship

LEAGUE LEADERS DEFEAT DODGERS

Four Hits and Four Runs in First Inning for Reds.

GIANTS BEATEN

NEW YORK, July 20.—(Canadian Press).—The Cincinnati Reds were at home yesterday to the Brooklyn Dodgers, and treated their visitors to a 5-2 defeat. The league leaders garnered enough hits, four, and enough runs, four, in the first.

At Chicago the Giant hurler, Scott, had a tough session and left the mound in the fourth. The Giants retaliated by removing Osborn in the same inning, but though they fought Huntzinger's offerings hard they could not connect until the eighth and lost, 5-9.

The Pittsburgh National Leaguers hit Genewich and Mogridge opportunely yesterday and had small difficulty in registering a 10-4 victory.

Two singles and a sacrifice gave the Phillies a much needed run in the tenth at St. Louis and the Cards succumbed 4-3, after a decent battle.

BERLENBACH GOT $2,493 PER MINUTE

$149,548.85 Represented Former Champion's Guaranteed 37 1-2 Per Cent.

NEW YORK, July 20.—(Canadian Press).—Paul Berlenbach was paid off yesterday at the rate of $2,493 a minute for his hours's work in fighting Jack Delaney at Ebbetts Field last Friday night. Dan Hickey, the former champion's manager, received a certified check for $149,584.85, representing the ex-champion's 37 1-2 per cent, of the net receipts.

Delaney received but $821 a minute for his hour's labor in winning the title. Pete Reilly, Delaney's manager, recived a check for $49,229.69, representing the challenger's 12 1-2 per cent.

BURNS' BRIDGE WINS

North Douro Loses Game in North Peterboro League.

DOURO, July 20.—The fixture in the North Peterboro Softball League was played on the Condon diamond when Noth Doura and Burns' Bridge clashed, the latter winning with a score of 13-7. The line up:

Burns' Bridge—H. Darling, p; F. Wasson, c; F. Fitzgerald, 1b; J. Collins, 2b; J. Foley, 3b; J. Allen, ss; B. Collins, lf; B. Allen, cf; R. Tedford, rf.

North Douro—C. Towns, p; M. Coughin, c; W. Towns, 1b; F. O'Brien, 2b; R. Walsh, 3b; R. Essor, ss; E. Allen, lf; J. Walsh, cf; G. Condon, rf.

Umpires—W. Allen at plate; O. McIlvena on bases.

A mistake of the word latter instead of former gave credit to Warsaw for a game played on July 2 which was won by Burns' Bridge.

The fixture for Tuesday evening, Centre Douro vs Warsaw, was won by default by Warsaw as the Centre Douro team did not appear. Tuesday's game was the last game in the first half. Burns' Bridge is the winner of the first half, their record being: Won 3; Won by default 2, Lost 1. Of the two defaulted games won, in one case the opposing team was late arriving and in another the opposing team refused to play, due to some dissatisfaction over an umpire.

C.G.E. DEFEAT FIREMEN IN NINTH TO WIN SOFTBALL CHAMPIONSHIP

Close Game With C. G. E. Getting Break in the Ninth Innings.

WINS TAYLOR CUP

Many Bad Errors Made at Very Inopportune Times.

With a ninth innings rally, which was the result of three errors, the C. G. E. came from behind, and defeated the Firemen last night at Riverside Park, to win the city softball championship and the Taylor Cup. At the commencement of the ninth the C.G.E. were down one run, the score standing 7 to 6, but McDonough walked. Ranger laid down a nice bunt, the next two men each hit a pop fly, Powell doubled down the trird base line, which Lewis thought was foul, and let go but turned out to be a fair ball; Lewis made a wild throw to the plate, allowing McDonough and Ranger to score. Griffin made first on Weese's error, Powell stealing third, and made home when Chief Gimblett dropped the ball.

In the Firemen's half although they got two hits and three men on no runners were allowed to get farther than first.

J. Jones was the star fielder of the game; he covered a lot of ground, and accepted five chances, some of them being difficult catches. Delahaye for the Firemen, pitched his first game of the season, and after the first innings pitched good ball, and deserved the win if his team mates had just given him the support that he deserved, but the bad errors around first and second base meant runs every time. Powell pitchel good steady ball, walking none and getting one strike out; his first base man and shortstop did not give him the best of support. Neither team was very fast on the bases wth the Firemen having a little best of the argument. Dunkerley in five times to bat got on four of them twice by errors of the first baseman. The Firemen had the best of the argument up until the ninth, except the first, and it was just a little hard luck on their part that they did not win the game.

The post season series will commence right away with a schedule of 12 games to be played between the C.G.E., Firemen, Belmonts and Triple Link; the winners of this series will be entitled to go into the Ontario play-offs.

LEAFS RETURN TWO VICTORIES

Fisher Scores Fourth Consecutive Win Since Coming to Toronto.

INTERNATIONAL

TORONTO, July 20 (Canadian Press).—Toronto gained a game and one half on Baltimore yesterday by winning both ends of the double-header with Newark. Otis Miller started a rally in the ninth inning to win the first game 4 to 3, the deciding run being pushed over with none out. Carol Schmehl's single in the sixth inning sending Walker and Heath home gave the Leafs the second game 3 to 1.

Fisher scored his fourth consecutive win since joining the Leafs when he beat the Bruins in the opening contest, while Victor Sorrell, rookie twirler, starting his first game on the home grounds held the Bruins to two hits in the second contest.

Tillie Walker poled out his twenty-second homer of the season in the first contest. Mickey Heath, Toronto fire baseman, did not have a put-out in the second affair.

Scores:

Toronto .. .. ..012000001—4 11 1
Newark. .. .. ..100200000—3 9 0

Rochester defeated Reading 11 to 5 at Rochester. The home team hit Beard hard.

This event completed yesterday's schedule.

BOWLING TOURNAMENT OPENS TO-MORROW

Greens in Good Shape and Big Entry Expected—Public Invited.

The members of the Tournament committee of the Peterborough Lawn Bowling Club have been busy for some time back getting everything in readiness for the big tournament which opens on their green to-morrow.

A fine programme has been arranged with a well selected list of prizes. The greens have been put in fine condition, new ditches put in and all accommodations are being arranged for to-day.

The public is invited to witness the different contests. Some of the best bowlers in the district will be present.

YANKEES SCORE EIGHT IN FIRST

Win Easily Against St. Louis Browns by Eleven to Two Count.

TABLES TURNED

NEW YORK, July 20.—(Canadian Press). — Eight runs in the first inning were all the Yankees needed to beat the Browns yesterday. They added three runs later on, however, to win easily by a count of 11 to 2, knocking Joe Giard and Dixie Davis out of the box. Ernie Nevers finished the game.

A home run by Paschal figures in the Yankees' first inning assault Urban Shocker pitched the Yankees and the Browns escaped a shutout in the third inning when Durst, a pinch hitter, made a home run with Gorber on base.

After losing two straight to the Red Sox, Chicago turned the tables, defeating Boston on its home grounds yesterday, 5 to 4. Lyons prevented a last inning rally, choking off the Boston threat after two runs had been scored.

At Philadelphia, the Athletics dropped their second straight game to Detroit by a score of 8-3, and lost more ground in the pennant race. Catcher Clyde Manion was forced from the game when a foul tip split his finger in the seventh. He makes the third Detroit catcher on the injured list. Hayworth, a rookie from Toronto, took Manion's place.

Fred Marberry, who has done stellar relief pitching for the Senators for several years, yesterday worked on the home mound in his second game of the season and won 4 to 1, holding Cleveland to three hits. Until a week ago, when the big Texan started the first game and won it, Marberry had entered the box only for relief duty, but the weakened condition of the Senatorial mound staff left Manager Harris to experiment.

LADIES' SOFTBALL GAME TO-MORROW EVENING—6

Team Selected is the Strongest That Has Represented the C.G.E.

Manager Pilling, of the C.G.E. Ladies' Softball Team, says it is about time the local team had taken the visitors into camp. His opinion is that the locals are as strong as their opponents, but on account of having no league in this district they lack the experience gained from hard fought league games, that is only to be obtained in this way. The exhibition games with Toronto teams has been a great help and the local team has improved greatly with each game.

The team will take the field as follows:

C. Taylor, 2nd base; V. Langton, left field; Dot White, third base; D. Mortimer, catcher; E. Greenhalgh, short stop; B. Vincent, pitcher; H. Plunkett, first base; A. Logan, middle; M. Nixon, right field. M. McLaren, F. Greer, M. Mortimer, A. Janeway and G. McCarthy.

The Secord team will be met on the highway by the officers of the C.G.E. club, where they will be escorted to the Y. W. C. A. as the guests of Miss Littlefield and Miss Brownscombe. They will be served with a light lunch of coffee, and sandwiches before the game, and after the game they will be entertained at a banquet given by the C.G.E. Ladies' Softball Club at Hooper's Palm Rooms.

The game starts at six o'clock.

SOFTBALL FAVORED

LAKEFIELD, July 20.—There is a decided preference among local fans for the softball games and a much larger crowd assembles for softball than hard ball. The old team really was dropped because of the utter lack of support it received and the Junior team is not faring much better. Softball seems to be more of a community game and its a poor sport who can't take a hand at it if necessary. It does not lack thrills, as the local fans can testify, and usually the entire audience obligingly assist the umpire.

The first half of Number 2 Group of the North Peterborough Softball League was won by the Lakefield team which is most gratifying to their numerous fans.

The following is the standing of the group.

	Won.	Lost.	Played
Lakefield	4	2	6
Selwyn	3	3	6
Wesley	3	3	6
Buckhorn	2	4	6

Wesley won from Lakefield the first game in the second half on Friday night last.

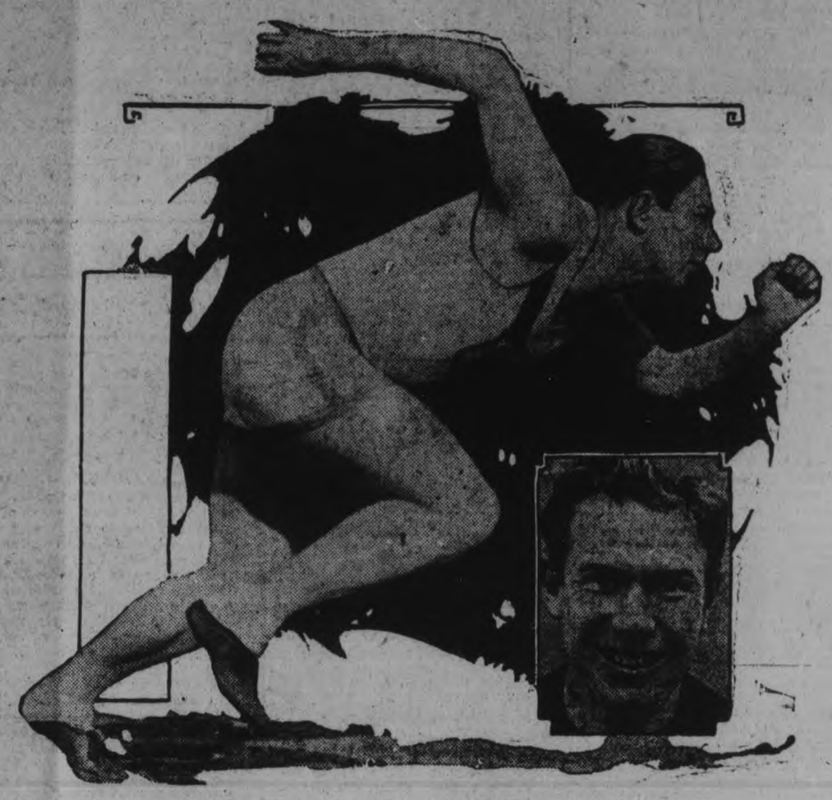
CHARLEY PADDOCK ON SPRINTING: FORM ESSENTIAL AND SPEED A NECESSITY



CHARLEY PADDOCK, IN ACTION, AND CLOSEUP.

By CHARLEY PADDOCK.

What is sprinting anyway?

The annual track season is here again and every place we turn we see scantily clad athletes running up and down track fields, not getting any place it would seem, at first glance, but enjoying themselves immensely.

Some of them of all sizes and descriptions are off to themselves engaged in starting practice and running short distances against each other. A man with a gun in hand is setting them off and apother holding a watch is checking them in and the pastime is called sprinting.

It's the oldest form of running. The Greeks did it and before the Greeks were ever heard of men ran races to prove who was the fastest. And it's a universal means of recreation. Every people in every land and on every island comprehend it and engage in it. Sprinting is one of those few units of common understanding which help to bring together peoples of every race and creed.

Sprinting is a fascinating art. There are a thousand and one lessons to be learned and the novice track man has a harder time to become a specialist on the cinder path than does even the golfer. Form is an essential. Natural speed is a necessity.

There is nothing quite so exciting to my mind than spirited dash. The pistol flashes and the men are flying down the course, shoulder to shoulder. The race is half over before you have drawn a single breath. One man commences to forge ahead of his field. Then the rest close in upon him. Only a second or two still remains. Can those behind him reach the tape ahead? Before you can answer the breathless question the race is over.

The beauty of perfect rhythm is present in a short distance dash. Form predominates. Legs and arms flash together in unbroken timing. Grace is there, and, most of all, fighting spirit. It's a man-to-man conflict. Speed counts, but sometimes will is even more important. Every time the runner, dependent entirely upon form, loses out to the instinctive fighter of the track.

There are three parts to the sprint race: the start, the stride and the finish. But before taking those up, allow me to name the most important of all sprinting essentials—fighting spirit!

HELPFUL HINTS FROM GOLFING STARS

BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH GOLFERS MAGAZINE, CHICAGO.

JIM BARNES—WHEN TO HIT HARD.

The golf stroke nowadays is certainly a good healthy "wallop." But there is this to be remembered. You have to learn to walk before you learn to run. And the player who has not yet gained mastery over the swing must guard against a good many things, one of the most troublesome of which is faulty body action.

One of the commonest faults that the high-handicap players have to contend with is hitting too soon, and by that I mean making too early an effort at what they call putting punch into the stroke.

One or more of several things is likely to happen, such as spending the forces of the blow before the club-head reaches the ball, lurching the body out of position, swinging the hands round ahead of the club-head, and numerous others.

The object to be aimed at is to take the club back smoothly and then start it down steadily, gradually increasing the speed of the club-head until it reaches the maximum just as it comes into contact with the ball.

Once you have acquired the art of doing that, you have learned to walk. You can then go on with the job of gradually putting more force into the stroke.

BILLY EVANS Says

America's Year.

Will Bobby Jones or an, of the other leading amateur golfers of the United States, succeed in winning the British amateur championship soon to be staged?

It is a matter of record that our professional golfers have been far more successful than the amateurs in their quest of foreign golfing honors.

Walter J. Travis is the only American to invade Great Britain and bring back the trophy emblematic of the amateur title.

That was in 1904 at Sandwich, so a matter of 22 years have passed since his success.

Golf experts believe this is an American year.

Try This One.

When "Lefty" Grove pitches for the Athletics this year be prepared for a long afternoon.

Women fans are advised to bring their knitting, while the men folks will be far more comfortable if supplied with a couple of interesting magazines.

Grove, the wild man of last season, has acquired control this year and through a rather queer scheme, so the story goes.

It is like this After Grove receives the ball from the catcher, he is to take his eyes off the batsman and concentrate on the next pitch, meanwhile he counts up to 15 before getting on the rubber.

Sounds a bit absurd, but anyway Grove has control and that is all that interests Connie Mack.

* * *

Fall Topics.

Received a letter the other day asking why many star ball players were so interested in big game hunting.

After receiving the inquiry I asked Walter Johnson, Ty Cobb, Tris Speaker, Eddie Collins, Joe Bush and Wally Schang, all devotees of the big game stuff, why they hied to the northland immediately upon the close of the season.

Not a single one attributed his enthusiasm for hunting to the desire to kill. All insisted the hunting trips were inspired by a hope that such a vacation would benefit them physically. Such an outing is a tonic, real relaxation, after a strenuous season.

However, Johnson, Cobb, Speaker and Collins, all were positive in the belief that roughing it in the open in the quest of game, had done much to keep their legs in shape, the first place the veteran player falters.

* * *

Retort Courteous.

Outfielder Frank Welch one of the Philadelphia Athletics has a keen sense of humor. He is the type of player who keeps a team in good spirits and on many occasions he furnishes laughs for the umpires. Quite some feat, that!

Recently in a game at Philadelphia, players were constantly requesting the umpire to call time because of the high wind that was blowing, which caused the dust to obscure the vision of fielders as well as batters.

"You never saw an umpire call time because the dust was bothering him," remarked the plate umpire in a joking manner, to Welch, who was at bat.

"Of course not," replied Welch, "you guys always have your eyes closed."

* * *

Nine Straight.

Nine straight is the longest winning streak of the present major league season.

The Philadelphia Athletics put over that run of victories after getting away to a bad start.

The Chicago White Sox, with Ted Lyons pitching, finally stopped the Mackmen. It is a rather strange coincidence that last season after the A's had won nine in a row, the White Sox broke the streak. Thurston was the pitcher.

* * *

Tough Race.

Connie Mack looks for the toughest sort of a race in the American League this season. Since his opinion is about the last word in baseball, it is most interesting.

"There isn't a weak team in the league," says Connie. "Boston will make trouble for the best of them and the club is improving every day.

"Washington is a great club and plays smart baseball. New York has so much power at the bat it is a constant menace. Cleveland has shown surprising early season strength. The White Sox play brainy ball and with good pitching will make trouble all the way. Detroit has power and needs but pitching. St. Louis is far too good a club to be at the bottom."

Diamond Disputes Decided

By BILLY EVANS

Explain what is meant by a fielder's choice?

* * *

A fielder's choice is created when the player handling a batted ball decides to try to retire another baserunner instead of the batter.

For instance, with a runner on second the batter hits to the shortstop. A perfect throw to first would have easily retired the batsman. The fielder elects to try for the more difficult play, the retiring of the runner trying to advance to third.

In such a play, the batsman is scored as having reached first base on a fielder's choice. He is charged with a time at bat.

HOW TO SWIM

by Lillian Cannon

SWIMMING POSITION FOR BEGINNER

Now get thoroughly used to the position of swimming. Place the hands on the bottom so that the nose and mouth are clear and kick your legs until the body is clear of the bottom.

Use the scissors kick. With each kick there are three movements.

First, with the legs straight and heels touching, the feet are drawn quickly upward as the knees spread out. Heels touch all the way.

Second, the feet are thrown wide laterally.

Third, the feet are thrown down and in until the first position is resumed. The broad of the foot should oppose the water in the last movement.

To gain perfect co-ordination of muscles, the sole of the right foot should be turned in and down and the instep of the left in and up until the heels meet.

While walking with hands on the bottom and feet kicking, it is an excellent idea to place some bright object on the bottom and look for it each time the head goes under the water.

After a certain degree of proficiency is attained in kicking, it is well to try to kick mechanically without thinking of it.

Looking for the bright object under water will take the attention off kicking and one will find that with a little less concentration the kick will become natural.

It should be remembered that one must learn to swim so that the actual effort of swimming is a natural movement, like walking.

One doesn't think where one's foot is going at each step. Swimming should be just as natural.

Once Upon a Time

A Fighter Did Nothing But Fight

BY TOM SIMS.

Once upon a time, when boys would be boys and girls would be girls, instead of vice versa—prize fights were held.

(You may choose your own spelling for the last word in the preceding paragraph.)

They didn't fight under Queensbury rules, or according to Hoyle. Work's latest book on bridge was unknown in the ring.

Yet, contrary to present-day belief, there were certain regulations. The fighters had a sort of code—unwritten but obeyed.

The gent above with the bulging biceps, hands like hams, wrought-iron chest and boarding house reach, when placed in the ring, wouldn't do the things our fighters do. He was too much of a gentleman for that.

He obeyed the unwritten code of honor, which might be summed up as follows:

1. No stopping in the middle of a round to sign movie contracts.
2. Discussion of stock market must be left outside the ring.
3. No stopping to wave at women admirers, except between rounds.
4. All hotels to be purchased must be bought before or after fight.
5. Opponents must not kiss or discuss home worries in public.
6. Strength must be expended in battle instead of conserved for writing story after battle is over.

In those days the biggest battle was in the ring, instead of about who should be in the ring, or between the fighter and his manager.

MOVIGRAPHS

HOLLYWOOD.—In the swagger habilments and romantic permissions of Farnol's "Amateur Gentleman," which he is now making, Richard Barthelmess has a role cut precisely to his measure, and to his enthusiastic liking.

Outdoor scenes are being filmed on the English patterned estate of Samuel S. Hinds, Pasadena millionaire and amateur actor, whose vast gardens give authentic setting to the Regency period of the play.

Here I watched Barthelmess define an amateur gentleman, under stress of sentimental clash and intrigue, with Dorothy Dunbar, his new leading lady, and other characters who in the novel assist or obstruct the efforts of a pugilist's son from achieving aristocratic station.

"Good Picture."

"Going to be a good picture," offered Barthelmess between shots, mopping his brow, smiling his diffident grin, and being very careful not to bag the knees of his tight breeches.

Even an ambush of shrubs came the thin strains of a sad violin, trying to dissuade Nigel Barrie, now before the camera, from his villainies. And a mocking bird, concerned for her babies, scolded vociferously at Sydney Olcott, director.

The talk pivoted on a bystander's assertion that America was rapidly drifting toward the establishment of aristocratic castes, with feverish social climbing as its symptoms.

Barthelmess said with genuine emphasis that he hadn't noticed any such tendency. Dick is a good democrat who admires the qualities by which the "Amateur Gentleman" is contrasted against the purely nominal attributes of professional "gentlemen" in Farnol's tale.

These "gentlemen" and their ladies lolled or strolled indolently and with an air of vanished yesterdays about the lawn. Dick's gaze persisted in veering to the golden hair and gorgeous period guise of Miss Dunbar. And so did mine, for that matter. Talk was an intrusion upon the spell of a lovely scene. Only the plaintive reminiscent wail of the violin seemed appropriate sound.

Reticent, But Ready.

Barthelmess, always reticent of words and apparently brooding some secret sorrow, was now completely absorbed in his role. A fight, a steeplechase, and other spectacular episodes were still to be made. Quiet contemplation seemed essential to sustain the necessary mood. But one can never be quite sure what the romantic Richard is thinking about.

That his speculations were not entirely engrossed in the Regency period of 1810-20 was revealed by trick and device when he was asked about a swank affair he was to attend that night, together with Ronald Colman and John Gilbert.

"We couldn't quite agree on three girls to escort, so we're going to stag it," said he with his wry grin. And for a moment the sad violin wailed in vain at the "Amateur Gentleman."

THEATRE

AT THE REGENT

HERE'S GOOD ACTING AND GOOD DIRECTION.

A good director and good actors, at their best.

That, in brief, is the verdict on "Lovey Mary," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture directed by King Baggot, which opened at the Regent Theatre last night. Bessie Love, William Haines, Mary Alden and Vivia Ogden have the leading roles and more capable artists would have been difficult to find.

"Lovey Mary" is essentially a comedy, but there is an undercurrent of pathos whose interpretation affords Bessie Love a remarkable opportunity for a convincing display of her exceptional histrionic ability.

The story of "Lovey Mary" has been taken from the book of that name by Alice Hegan Rice, author of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," and the characters and locale are the same in both stories.

It cannot be said that the book has been transferred to the screen with absolute fidelity, but it can be said that the screen version is a tremendous improvement over the book, both in drama and interest.

Bessie Love as an ugly duckling, with pigtails, freckles and shabby clothes, will be a shock to many of her admirers, but her artistic and sincere portrayal of the little orphan slavey who lavishes all her pent-up affection on the baby waif, will more than compensate for her histrionic loss of beauty. To sum it up, "Lovey Mary" is a good picture that is bound to make you laugh a lot, it may make you cry, and you can be certain that it will entertain.

SECRETS OF STARS IN INSIDE BASEBALL

by Billy Evans

BY TY COBB.
World's Greatest Ball Player.

Form plays a definite part in every sport.

Watch closely the great golfers in action and you will note a sameness in their style.

Stance, grip, position of the head and the follow-through of the swing will be almost identical.

Of course there are exceptions to every rule. There are certain stars in the golfing world who do much of their stuff in an unorthodox manner. However, they are greatly in the minority.

It is much the same in baseball. There are certain fixed fundamentals considered best. A majority of the players adhere to them. Yet, I believe there are more exceptions to the set rules in baseball than golf, since the game offers more opportunities for an expression of individuality.

I have previously committed myself on the question of stance. The stance should be comfortable. The weight equally distributed on both feet, which should be about six inches apart.

I have also gone on record as favoring a grip that calls for the hands to be spread a trifle. My reason is that it makes for better control of the bat, tending to cut down the desire to swing wildly.

Now for what I consider the most important feature of all relative to batting. Here it is

As a left-handed batter swings at the ball his left arm should be extended to the limit and perfectly rigid, when the bat comes into contact with the ball.

Just the opposite holds true with the right-hander. The right arm should be stiff at the time of contact.

It is the stiff left or right arm, according to the style of the batsman, that gives power to the drive. I cannot stress this point too strongly.

No batsman can hope for greatness unless he adheres to that thought. Players who seldom get distance or power to their drives and who have a tendency to pop the ball in the air, are batters who fail to stiffen the left or right arm at the time of the bat's contact with the ball.

I have watched this feature of my batting very closely throughout my entire career. In batting practice I invariably glance at my left arm after hitting the ball to note its position.

JONES JAZZES COMMONS AGAIN

LONDON, July 20 (Canadian Press). — Jack Jones, irrepressible Laborite M.P., figured in another scene in the Commons to-day and had to withdraw from the House on the Speaker's orders. During the question period, some members grumbled because the Minister of Mines, Lt.-Col. G. R. Lane-Fox, was not present, and Jones said: "Is not the real reason that the Minister of Mines is incapable of answering questions?" He refused to withdraw the remark, which the Speaker declared most grossly improper, and was ordered out of the House. Two weeks ago Jones caused a stir when he called Lady Astor a liar. Reproved by the chair, he substituted the expression, "terminological inexactitude."

HERRIOT SUCCEEDS IN FORMING CABINET

Cabinet Has One Aim—Defense of Franc Says Premier.

PARIS, July 20 (Canadian Press)—The new ministry of Edouard Herriot, with Anatole De Monzie holding the portfolio of Minister of Finance, has been formed.

M. Herriott worked unceasingly yesterday after President Doumergue the previous day had requested him to endeavor to get together a ministry to take the place of that of Aristide Briand and official announcement was made last night at Elysee Palace that he had been successful.

"My Cabinet has but one aim—the defence of the franc," was the statement made by M. Herriott to President Doumergue when he presented the ministers at the Elysee Palace shortly after midnight.

"Apart from all party spirit," the Premier added, "it promises the country an energetic administration. It requests the nation to preserve that calmness, which to the same extent as a national industry, is one of the indispensable elements toward the recovery of the franc."

M. Herriot informed the President that the policy of his ministry would be elaborated at the meeting on Tuesday and read before Parliament on Thursday.

COUNTRY MUST SAVE ITSELF SAYS NEW FRENCH GOVERNMENT

Reports Contradicted That Herriott will Resign after Reading of Declaration.

COMMUNIST SUPPORT.

Favors Paying Of All Debts And Opposes Inflation Of Currency.

PARIS, July 21 (Canadian Press)—After a cabinet meeting this afternoon, Premier Herriot against announced he would appear before the Chamber of Deputies this evening and would accept an immediate interpellation and discussion of his ministry's financial bill. This is in contradiction to the reports that his government would resign immediately after the reading of the ministerial declaration.

The newly-formed Herriot Government, in its ministerial declaration before the Chamber of Deputies, set itself on record as opposed to inflation of French currency and in favor of payment of all debts.

There will be no foreign loans, the Government asserts; the country must save itself. Foreign currency held abroad by Frenchmen must be returned to France. A special account for that purpose to be opened by the Bank of France.

Strictest economies will be enforced, beginning with State services. No reference is made in the declaration to capital levy, but it mentions "special tax on assets not in service of public credit."

The declaration is very short and concludes with a demand for immediate approval or rejection of the programme.

The Government was assured of support from an unexpected quarter, when Marcel Cachin, leader of the Communist party, promised to vote for Premier Herriot should the government close the Stock Exchange. The Communists' voting strength of 28 may save the Government.

CONVENTION WILL NOMINATE E.A.PECK

Says J. F. Strickland, Secretary of Liberal Conservative Association.

E. A. Peck, ex-M.P., will be the Conservative nominee for this riding, said J. F. Strickland, secretary of the Liberal-Conservative Association, in an interview with The Examiner today.

Mr. Strickland stated that the party followers seemed to be unanimous on this point, so that Mr. Peck's nomination could practically be regarded as certain.

While the speakers for the convention have not been arranged, he said, it is expected that this detail would be completed by tomorrow.

Mission Of New Messiah Is Near Says Theosophist

BRUSSELS, July 20.—(United News.)—Only God knows the exact time when Krishnamurti, the new messiah will begin fulfillment of his mission on this earth, Mrs. Annie Besant, President of the Theosophical Society, advised the United News.

Mrs. Besant denied reports that Krishnamurti would go to Rome and said that he would leave soon for the United States.

"The mission of the new messiah, Krishnamurti is approaching," Mrs. Besant said.

Asked how soon it would begin she replied:

"That is God's secret."

SHEEP WORRIERS BROUGHT TO BOOK

Farmer Discovers Two Dogs Among Flock and Shoots One.

KING'S WHARF, July 21. — On Saturday morning, just at daylight Mr. Joseph Guiry heard his sheep making quite a noise on his ranch, about a mile away. He grabbed his gun, jumped into his car, and accompanied by a neighbor, started for the ranch.

When he arrived there he saw a black dog with one sheep, and a yellow dog after another. He at once fired at the black dog, and after having fired three times he shot him and discovered the identity of the dog. He followed the other dog into the owner's yard, who denied his dog ever worried sheep, but Mr. Guiry wanted to shoot him him there, but the owner would not let him.

Mr. Guiry deserves credit for shooting the dog, and the people are quite indignant about the other dog being still at large, as there are a number of fine herds of sheep in this locality.

CHILD'S RISKY RIDE ON RUNNING BOARD

Father Was Unaware That Tiny Tot Was Clinging To Side of Car.

TORONTO, July 21. — Little Aurleen Cawker, three years old, of 290 Beresford Avenue, had a thrilling ride on Saturday last that almost proved disastrous and had some other motorists passing by not observed her dangerous position she might easily have been killed.

Saturday afternoon, Charles Cawker, father of the little girl, went out to the garage to get his car, intending to motor downtown. When he backed out the drive, however, he did not notice that the little girl had chosen the running board of the car as a good place to sit down for a rest, and as he drove down the street the three-year-old child slung frantically on to the side of the car. The car being a sedan and all the windows closed the father could not hear the little girl's crips and it was not until a passing motorist drew up by his side that he was conscious of her plight.

The frightened father immediately stopped the car and lifted three-year-old Aurleen into the seat.

MANY CHILDREN USE PLAYGROUNDS

Swimming Parades Proving a Popular Feature. Competent Instructors Present.

Over 150 children are making use of the school playgrounds daily J. Abraham, the chief supervisor, told The Examiner this morning.

The softball games are well under way for the championship of the playground's league, spirited contests being recorded between the various teams.

The swimming parades on Tuesdays and Fridays are proving a popular as well as instructive feature. Yesterday 75 children patronized the different beaches. Those unable to swim are taught the rudiments of this useful art by the instructors who are present at every session.

The following is the standing for the playgrounds leagues:

TORONTO, July 21 (Canadian Press).—Stating that his action came as a protest against the land policy of the Commissioners, and was brought about by their decision yesterday to purchase five acres of land from the Canadian National Railway at $30,000 per acre, Mayor Thomas Foster, chairman of the Toronto Harbor Commission, tendered his resignation as a member of that body to the Board of Control this morning. The controllers refused to accept the Mayor's resignation.

OPENS CAMPAIGN.

Hon. Arthur Meighen, who started election campaign in Ottawa last night.

Meighen Rests Case on Customs Scandal And Urges Need For a National Policy That Will Build up Canadian Industry

All Branches of Service where Need Shown Should Be Reformed Says Premier, Declaring There Is No Constitutional Issue In This Election.

REFUSES TO TAKE BLAME FOR WASTING LEGISLATIVE EFFORTS OF PAST SESSION

Definite And Clear Restoration of Principle of Protection In Tariff of Canada Is Demanded. Immigration Policy to Encourage Britishers.

OTTAWA, July 21 (Canadian Press).—In a sweltering heat, and before 4,000 people, Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, Prime Minister of Canada, fired in the Auditorium last night the first gun in the Federal election campaign, which will terminate with polling day on September 14. It was just nine months ago that the Conservative leader concluded his tour of Canada in the last battle of the ballots, and in the same meeting place.

Surrounded by eight of his Cabinet colleagues, and including Hon. E. L. Patenaude, his Minister of Justice, Premier Meighen scored the King Government for its administration of the Department of Customs and Excise, and appealed to the electors of the Dominion with the following promises:

OUTLINE OF POLICY

1. Departmental reform shall not stop at the Customs Department, but shall proceed in all branches of the service wherever it may be found that the blight of degeneration has set in.

2. Definite and clear restoration of the principle of protection in the tariff of Canada, a principle and practice upon which all can reply, upon which industry can depend,, upon which workers can depend, but a principle and practice which none will be permitted to abuse.

3. An immigration policy which will encourage people to come to Canada, and which will seek first to bring out British immigrants, and immigrants from other countries whose manhood and womanhood have already proved suited to our climate.

4. Encouragement of the use of Canadian coal by Canadian consumers, and the employment by Canadian shippers of our own Maritime ports.

5. Support of the movement for the establishment of more efficient and economic marketing of Canadian products, along the lines of farmers' co-operative concerns and the wheat pool.

Mr. Meighen Essays Broad Appeal.

There were no surprises in Premier Meighen's speech, except for his emphasis upon the tariff question, after devoting considerable, if not most, of his speech to the Customs probe and the dissolution question. In his declaration on the tariff is seen an appeal to Ontario and Quebec; in his co-operative marketing proposal an appeal to the Prairie Provinces, along with his immigration plans; and in his promise of encouragement for us by Canadians of Canadian coal, an appeal to the Maritimes and the mining region of Alberta.

Wartime Breach is Healed in Party Ranks, says Leader

The text of Mr. Meighen's speech was as follows:

"It is but a few short months since, on the eve of last year's election, we met in this hall before. It is altogether fitting that in the very meeting place where the last campaign ended the present campaign should begin.

"The exigencies of the late war, the trials and tribulations of those dark and terrible years, brought in their train some degree of misunderstanding, resulting, I am sorry to say, in disunion in the ranks of the Conservative party. From such disunion we have suffered for some years, and even in the late campaign. It is a matter of pride and gratification that we have evidence now that these experiences are passing away, and that the great Conservative party of Macdonald and Cartier is restored to its pristine vigor and enjoys the united counsel of its leaders in every Province.

"The magnificent welcome you have given to the Honorable Mr. Patenaude tonight is witness to the feeling of loyalty, comradeship and confidence which pervades the part from coast to coast. I am proud indeed to have associated with me such a man as Mr. Patenaude, and to share with him the great responsibility of government in this country. I am proud also to have associated with me on this platform so many members of the new Government, and especially to have appear with me as a speaker the Honorable Senator Robertson, a man who, I believe, is more trusted by the ranks of Labor in this Dominion than is any other Canadian.

King Government Record

"At the time of the last October election the Government of the Right Honorable W. L. Mackenzie King had been four years in power. It had enjoyed through those four years a very narrow majority over Progressives and Conservatives together, but it had been accorded the support of the 65 members of the Progressive party an all subjects of policy upon which they and the Government itself had been elected. Even in the enjoyment of such overwhelming support, as against 50 members of the Conservative party, its legislative record had not been impressive. It had trifled with its own pledges and had scoffed at its promises to the people, and had sought to cover its retreat from a definite and distinctive policy, to which in 1919 it had become committeed, under a series of excuses. In every attempt at initiating important legislation it had bungled, and had many tmes been compelled to reverse its proposals and with draw its bills. In fiscal matters it had adopted a course of fitful and irrational tariff tinkering, designed merely to placate its allies. It had disturbed business, frightened capital, contracted employment, dried up, or almost dried up, immigration, and had driven hundreds of thousands of our sons and daughters into a foreign land.

"Tried on its record, the King Government was defeated; in 133 constituencies out of 245 its candidates lost the poll. Nine Ministers of the Crown, including the Prime Minister, were rejected by their constituents, and the Conservative party led at the polls in seven out of the nine Provinces.

Attempt to Cling to Power.

"Mr. King had appealed to the country on the ground that he required a substantial majority over all others, and declared expressly that without this majority he could not undertake to solve the problems of the country. He declared that without such a majority his Administration would be helpless, and could not shoulder the responsibilities of government. After the elections, the narrow majority of the last Parliament was swept away, and Mr. King returned with only 101 seats out of the 245. The Conservative party had by far the largest popular vote, and had 116 members in the House of Commons. Notwithstanding their leader's pre-election profession, the surviving members of Mr. King's government still determined to hold on to power They decided to lay before the remnant of the Progressive party, which now held the balance of power, a series of promises of definite and important legislation upon which the country as a whole had not rendered a verdict. Thus is was sought to purchase a continuance in office and to hold in derision and defiance the verdict of the Canadian people.

"Under these circumstance one session has been passed, and another election is upon us. The Government of Mr. Mackenzie King has been censured in the House of Commons by a decisive majority in which censure the great proportion of its own allies were compelled to join. That Government is no longer in office. The story of its ungraceful and ill-tempered exit I shall refer to later. For the present what I want to ask you is this: Have the revelations of the past session been such as to add to the credit of the Mackenzie King Administrtion — has the story of the six months which ended three weeks ago been such as to generate in the breasts of the people either pride or confidence in the Government which has gone from power?

Revelations of Session.

"Into the revelations of the past session I intend now to inquire. The inquiry will not be inspired by ambition to detect a minor error here or a minor error there. No one with any experience in the great organism of government can fail to be aware that errors of detail are bound to occur, and that from such errors no supervision, however honest or competent, can keep the gigantic system wholly free. In common fairness this fact must at all times be kept in mind. I shall not consider any indictment against an administration worth while unless it goes to the very root of government —unless it shows incompetence, inefficiency or corruption affecting the very vitals of government itself, and menacing in serious degree the public weal.

"What, then is the story of this session? It has been constituted in the main of the work of what is known as the Stevens Committee. This committee was established early in the session on the demand of the Honorable H. H. Stevens, member for Vancouver Centre, after an attack on the administration of an attack on the administration of which in the severity of its terms and the confidence with which it was launched startled the entire Dominion. The committee was composed of four Liberal followers of the Government, four Conservatives and one Progressive. The one Progressive was Mr. Kennedy, who up to the time of the revelations which the committee unearthed had through five years given his allegiance with all but unerring devotion to the Government of Mr. Mackenzie King. The committee, therefore, was certainly not a jury wholly prejudiced against the accused.

Charges Welter of Wickedness.

"Through four months it prosecuted its work. The Customs Department was day by day subjected to scrutiny. All sorts of difficulties were encountered — witnesses escaped; the books of manufacturers disappeared; the authority of the committee itself was flounted; testimony was given which on its face was false. But against all of these difficulties the committee labored on and only ceased its efforts because of the approach of the session's end. The evidence is now in the hands of the people of Canada. It covers only a fraction of the operations of the Customs and Excise Department but within that fraction it has discovered and absolutely established such a profundity of incompetence, inefficiency and neglect, such a mass of malfeasance on the part of officials high and low and of the Minister himself, indeed, such a welter of wickedness as has never been paralleled before in the revelations of any Canadian Parliament.

"My only request of the people of Canada at an hour such as this is: Read the testimony as printed in the committee's reports; read the report, the findings of the committee itself, of its Liberal members and its Progressive member, and then as honest men and women ask yourselves whether the story there revealed would be possible under a Government which was reasonably honest or reasonably competent. The volume of the evidence given is so vast that there is a tendency to reel back in despair before attacking the task. The public mind has had a tendency to become confused by the mere immensity of the evidence adduced.

Very Heart of Business Life

"I ask this audience to be good enough to get first of all a clear comprehension of what this Customs and Excise Department means to Canada. Are you aware that through this department something over two hundred millions of dollars were collected in 1920, of 62 per cent of all the revenue of Canada? Are you aware that although that percentage under the last Government has been seriously reduced, the taxpayers of Canada are still paying to the officials of that department approximately one hundred and fifty million dollars a year; there is the department which has in its custody the great bulk of the taxation taken from the hard earnings of the Canadian people year by year. There is the department, on the honesty of which the people of Canada absolutely must depend, on the honesty of which hangs the livelihood of scores of thousands of our workers; on the honesty of which thousands of business institutions are dependent as to whether they keep alive or go bankrupt. There is the department which is the very heart of the finacial and business life of Canada.

"This country may be ever so rich by nature; our mines may give up their precious treasure; our waters may surrender their wealth of food; our soil may produce its harvests in abundance, but what of all these blessings if there is fraud and incompetence in the very vitals of Government? Then even nature will be defeated. There will be failure instead of success; there will be a dearth of employment instead of a healthy growth; there may be a sale of our assets to foreign lands in abundance, but there will be want and idleness at home. We thought last year that much of the trouble of Canada was due to fickleness and instability of our fiscal policy, and we were right; but we know now that in addition to this there has been as well an utter absence of these elementary essentials of honest fiscal administration, without which even the best of fiscal policies will be in vain.

Friends Profited by Tariff.

"In the Customs Department the Government made itself the ally of fraudulent traders of other countries to enable them to dispose of their wares to the people of Canada Read the story of the army of stolen automobiles and how the friends of Government officials were allowed to profit by this nefarious traffic read the story of how the minister himself winked at the business, and how even those in his own office were permitted to benefit by trafficing in cars which others stolen. Turn to the evidence on subject of prison-made goods; read how great masses of those germ-charged products, emitted from the prisons of the United States have been shipped into Canada in tons, against the law of the land, to the knowledge of the Customs Department and indeed with the connivance of the department. Tons upon tons of this stuff, laden in all probabilty with disease, carrying germs to the merchants' counters and to the people's homes in order that a few violators of the law might make themselves rich.

"You will find the story of the experiences of the American people with the fatal effects of trade in this kind of goods. You will find there how three firms alone brought in 150 tons. You will find there the opinion of highly respected business men that 90 per cent. of the stolen goods of the United States have in these last three or four years found their way into Canada. You will find the declaration of employers of labor that ther are classes of industry in this country which might multiply their employees 100 per cent. if this nefarious traffic were stopped. You will find how in the silk industry alone, illegal importations have run up to between three or four million dollars a year. You will find how enterprise after enterprise has gone back and hundreds of men have been thrown upon the street because, even if these men were to work for nothing they could scarcely compete with the goods smuggled wholesale into Canada You will find the opioion universally expressed that the fault has not been in the law; it has not been in legislation; it has been in the administration of the law by the late Government.

Own Party Skirts Clear

'And right here let me say that the records of that investigation will be searched in vain for evidence which reflects on the Government that went before. You will find in one or two papers careless assertions that the late Government found the Customs Department in a mess. I defy any man to read the evidence and show me anything to substantiate a conclusion of that sort. The evidence shows and I have in my hand tonight extracts in large numbers, that the degeneration of this department commenced with the advent of the King Government, continued throughout the whole administration of Mr. Bureau; continued to the full knowledge of Mr. King, and continued in the fact of repeated protests by large numbers of the population of Canada, and especially by the business people of Canada.

"You will find that these protests fell in vain on the ears of the Prime Minister; that there was no response, and only procrastination and delay; that in spite of these continued protests against the retention of officials known to be dishonest; known to be in alliance with smugglers and crooks, no step whatever was taken to put right the organization of the department, or to dismiss the responsible Minister or the guilty officials.

Action Forced by Stevens

"All that was ever accomplished was the passing of some anti-smuggling legislation in the session of 1925, and those who had sought its passing went one after the other into the witness-box and declared that because of incompetent administra-

HOT WAVE STRIKES EAST FROM WEST

With the Rising in Temperature Number of Prostrations Increase.

NEW YORK, July 21 (Canadian Press) — Easterners mopped their brows and scowled into the west today. For out of the west had rolled summer's greatest heat wave.

But appealing glances of hope were turned to the west too, for relief from humid heat was scheduled to come from the same source.

As the heat mounted prostrations were reported and the list of drownings indirectly attributable to the weather which caused a general rush to the lake and seashore, mounted steadily.

REPORT INCREASE.

Grand Master Addresses Masons at Annual Session Encouraging Reports.

FORT WILLIAM, Ont., July 21 (Canadian Press).—Encouraging increases in membership and scope of activities and deeper interest in the craft, were reported in an address of Grand Master J. A. Rowland, Toronto, before the Masonic Grand Lodge of Ontario, meeting here in the annual session today. The membership in the jurisdiction was 110,000 as compared with 107,000 at May 31, 1925, and prospects were bright for an increase during the current year, he said.

On the state of Masonry in the province, the Grand Master declared: "There is evidence everywhere of a deeper interest in Masonry and a keener desire to understand its meaning, its value and its place in the complexity of modern life. We require from every candidate a declaration that he comes forward from a favorable opinion conceived of the institution and a general desire for knowledge."

NEW MINISTERS EXAMINE SITUATION

Herriot Decides to Bring His Ministry Before Chamber To-Day.

PARIS, July 21 (Canadian Press) —Resolving not to wait until Thursday to learn what is to be the fate of his ministry, Herriot, the new Premier, has decided to bring it before the Chamber of Deputies tonight and have the ministerial declaration read.

The new ministers of the Cabinet, after examining the financial situation last night conferred with President Doumergue and M. Morau, president of the Bank of France, later deciding that no time was to be lost in obtaining authority from parliament to take remedial measures. Herriot's decision to summon both houses of parliament followed.

What remedial measures are to be asked are not exactly known. It appears, however, that the government favors consolidation of floating debts and moratorium to relieve growing pressure upon the treasury. Whatever programme, however, Herriot will make it a question of confidence and ask the chamber to signify whether it supports his way of thinking or not without further delay.

Meantime, there has been no abatement in the demand in business and other circles for the "committee of public safety" with full powers to act to relieve the perilous situation growing out of the fall of the franc. Republican Socialists, formerly staunch supporters of Herriot, are the prime movers for the committee. They declare the situation requires something stronger than the ministry just formed.

CHAUTAUQUA PLAY IS GREAT SUCCESS

Big Crowd in Attendance to Hear Domestic Comedy Applesauce.

There was a crowd of over seven hundred people in attendance at the Chautauqua tent last evening, for one of the most interesting programmes of this year's series. The play "Applesauce," a comedy of American life in three acts, proved to be entertaining from start to finish, and the appreciation of the audience was manifested in the continuous bursts of merriment that greeted the clever dialogue, the excellent acting, and the sustained interest which marked this peppy little play, depicting in three acts the life of an American family of an average type. Mr. Charles Hanna acted as Manager, and Mr. David Pritchard as stage manager.

Briefly the plot of the offering centres about the love story of Hazel Robinson, a part charmingly portrayed by Katherine Rogers, for Bill McAllister, whose happy-go-lucky personality and habit of "soft soaping" everyone with whom he was in conversation, led to a description of him as being full of "applesauce." David Pritchard took the part of Bill in a happy fashion, his humorous philosophy and constant refusal to be down hearted, giving a light touch to every situation in the play, which opens with an evening dialogue between Ma (Carolyn Mackay) and Pa Robinson (Edward Power) who form two of the most amusing characters in the play. Their constant habit of bickering and arguing with each other has been slightly overdrawn by the author, and reaches a very high tension in the third act, but they are exceptionally good, taking the production right from the start into the realm of reality, and keeping it there until the final moment. Honors of the piece also go to the two men who have the disagreeable roles, Matt McAllister, uncle of the cheerful and irresponsible Bill, a part in which Charles Hanna did some very fine acting, his Irish accent adding the complete touch to the delineation of the part of the Irish American ward boss, and Rollo Jenkins, played by Brace Conning in excellent style. Rollo is the rich suitor of the pretty Hazel ,and she became engaged to him in the first act, leaving the happy go lucky Bill to make a successful exit, with his good will speech to both of them as a finish.

The family "jars" which take place between Pa and Ma Robinson centre chiefly about the happiness of their daughter Hazel, who flies to her suitor, Rollo. Bill plays his cards in such fashion as to finally win the girl of his heart, and his "applesauce" style of conversation wins every adversary in turn. The play abounds in those little tense moments when everything appears to be lost for the lovers, but Bill's habit of taking an unusual view of every situation, and Hazel's infatuation for him, save the day, and the play ends happily for everyone concerned, with the exception of Rolly. Even Pa, with a very bad grace, has been induced to embrace Ma, and the finale finds them converted to Bill's viewpoint, that "applesauce," or well-applied friendliness and cheerful words, is good for both receiver and giver. The whole thing has a slight psychological slant. Bill appeals to the good qualities of his friends and hammers at the meanness and miserliness of the upstage Rollo, and turns the trick to his own advantage. He is never at a loss for a cheerful retort and the audience is with him from start to finish. It is a most entertaining comedy, and was greeted last night with marked pleasure by an absorbed audience.

Afternoon Programme

Yesterday's programmes of morning and afternoon were provided by Edward Reno, a gentleman whose demonstration of various tricks of wizardry and magic kept his juvenile audience of the morning and his mixed audience of the afternoon in a constant succession of delighted wonder. His offerings were of the conventional type in most instances, but they were presented in a very original manner, and his manner and conversation with his small assistants kept the watchers giggling in pleased fashion. With the help of Billy and Dorothy, Kathleen, George and Rose, small helpers recruited from the audience, he did a number of amusing stunts. The card trick was the cause of much wonderment to the children, and when the queen of diamonds refused to rise graciously from the pack until Billy politely prefaced his request with "please," they burst into concerted applause. Some mind-reading stunts were also much enjoyed.

George, the second recruit, was made to disgorge silver coins from an astonished nose and equally surprised cuffs, and helped to unload the colored scarfs and the tinware and the skull and the white rabbit from a small derby hat. George was asked if he had any friends in the audience. "Hey, Fat, I'm here," came a response from the rear.

The superintendent, Mr. B. F. Davies, whose brief speeches are usually quite interesting, spoke in terms of much praise last night of the lecturer of this evening, Private Peat, who gives his famous discourse, entitled "The Inexcusable Lie." Mr. Davis went so far as to say that Private Peat was greater than the World Court or the League of Nations, so this evening's audience should be a large one. The Herrick Entertainers give the prologue to the lecture tonight.

Tomorrow, the final day of the Chautauqua series, sees a grand wind-up in programmes given by the famous Solis' Marimba Band, with the entertainer, Jane Goude, in the afternoon.

FROM MR. BURNHAM.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Sir: The Gordon-Peck controversy is no longer a private fight, and anybody is at liberty to get into it. Mr. Peck should not drop it for if he does so without further explanation, Mr. Gordon will make ducks and drakes of the contest in West Peterboro, which will be sacrificed to a side-issue. The facts are these: Mr. Gordon said that Mr. Peck voted against a number of good things, such as penny postage (since adopted by Mr. Meighen), lowering of the income tax, etc. These good things were linked up with tariff matters in the Budget, which compelled Mr. Peck to vote against them, as he could not separate them from the rest of the Budget. Mr. Peck should have acknowledged that and should have said that the other "good" things would not be opposed, but (like penny postage) would be adopted by the Conservatives. Now the various items in the Budget have to be brought in subsequently to the Budget, as separate bills, and since they were passed once, when the Budget was passed, they go through as a matter of course when thus brought down.

Mr. Peck said he did not oppose these separate bills. Nor did he, and nobody else did. They go through as a matter of course. But he opposed them when they were before the House in the Budget. Hence Mr. Gordon is actually right, and Mr. Peck appears to take refuge in a technicality, which may appeal to him as justifiable, but not, perhaps, to others. Therefore, these two gentlemen are shooting past each other, and will never meet. It would be, I suggest, better for Mr. Peck to explain the matter in some such way as I have suggested, otherwise the issue will be his veracity, and the public will endorse Mr. Gordon and charge Mr. Peck with side-stepping, which I am sure he does not wish to do. A pail of water early is worth many barrels later on.

J. H. BURNHAM,

FROM MR. PECK.

The Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Gordon, in his last letter, suggests I have not been sufficiently explicit.

Let me repeat. The changes in postage rates, in income tax, etc., to which he refers, are the result of legislation which passed through the House.

I have given the history of these measures in a previous letter and have explained that no division took place, and it necessarily follows, and is the fact, that I did not vote against any of the said legislation.

Yours sincerely,

E. A. Peck.

The camping season is no longer the pet of a favored few. There was a time when the wild woods was a closed book to most of us, and that was a time for nature fakers and wild, blood chilling yarns about woodland bugaboos. That time has passed.

Nowadays, folks want to know for themselves. They no longer care to listen to fancy and exaggerated stuff. These are the days of autos and movies. We go far and wide, see nature for ourselves, and what we do not see in the woods, we have shown to us in movies in town. Honest nature stuff is what we want: then, when we come face to face with a bear, we offer him allday suckers to keep him busy while we hop it for safety, instead of offering him bullets.

One of the things which you may have a chance to take with your little movie camera (if you are among those who have one of these handy little machines) will be a loon.

Perhaps it would be welcome stuff if we just talk about this interesting creature a little, and then, when we see one up in the lake where we go to camp, we will know and love it.

To the camp novice, the wolf at night is generally too close for comfort. This wicked wolf never shows his sneaking nose around the woods or camp in the day time, not much. He is a savage coward! He is a bugaboo scare-all. He likes to wait until stillness has gathered for the night before he starts his mournful wailing and crying. It comes as an awful terror to the poor saps who think their lives are in danger if they get a mile and a half from the town pump. They go in and shut all the doors and pray for morning.

This lone wolf, this crying, mournful-wailing savage, is a wolf in feathers, that's all, for it is the common loon, grieving that darkness has come upon the face of the waters.

Our common loon is a wonderful diver. They are black and white, having white breasts and checkered backs. They live on very small fish, which they catch under water. A loon can dive and swim better than many fish, exceeding them in speed. If you can get close to one when a young loon is near, the parent will rise up and beat the water in a frantic dance to scare you away. They have a wild, free tremolo hoo call in the daytime, that sounds like a laugh.

NOMINATIONS.

Progressives Want Raney, and Prince Albert Selects Mackenzie King.

ARTHUR, Ont., July 21 — The Progressives of the new Provincial riding of Northeast Wellington met in convention here yesterday in the Town Hall and by unanimous decision tendered the party nomination for the Provincial seat to Hon. W. E. Raney, K.C., leader of the Progressive party in the Ontario House. Hon. Mr. Raney was not present at the meeting, but was represented by Arthur Roebuck, who gave assurance that the present Progressive leader intended to stay in Provincial politics and that press reports suggesting the contrary were quite incorrect.

The convention considered the question of a candidate for the approaching Federal election and decided to leave the matter in the hands of a committee of three, which is to determine whether or not it is wise to assemble another convention to choose a standard bearer. The gathering was the smallest convention which has ever assembled in the history of the Progressive movement in Wellington.

Labor Candidate in London

LONDON, Ont., July 21 — That Labor will have a candidate in London at the coming Federal election was assured today when the officials of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employes announced they would place a man before the convention called for July 28. Other unions may offer candidates for nomination and it is possible that Dr. S. A. Stevenson, ex-M.L.A., may also be proposed. Arthur Mould, president of the local Labor party, announced he would not be a candidate, and it is doubtful if John Colbert, who ran last October, would accept nomination.

In Prince Albert

LORD WILLINGDON HONORED BY KING

New Governor General Is Expected at Rideau Hall in September.

LONDON, July 21 (Canadian Press Cable).—Viscount Willingdon, who is to succeed Baron Byng as Governor-General of Canada, has been appointed by His Majesty a Knight of the Grand Cross of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, The London Gazette announced yesterday.

Viscount and Lady Willingdon were among a distinguished gathering at a luncheon tendered yesterday by the British Indian Union and the Marquis of Reading, former Viceroy of India, took the occasion to toast the man who has been appointed to succeed Lord Byng as Governor-General of Canada. The Marquis said the many high duties Viscount Willingdon would have to perform in Canada would differ in their conditions and constitutional aspects from those he faced while Governor of Madras and Bombay, but he felt sure they would be performed by the Viscount with the same distinction which had marked his every effort in the public service of the British Empire. He said that no one as governor had displayed a more cordial desire to advance India along the road of progress than had Viscount Willingdon.

Responding, Viscount Willingdon expressed gratitude for the encouragement given himself and Lady Willingdon prior to their undertaking of the great responsibilities in the Dominion of Canada.

The luncheon was held under the chairmanship of the Duke of Connaught, who himself has served as Governor-General to Canada.

Viscount Willingdon recently concluded his mission to China as adviser on the disposal of the Boxer indemnities, returned by Britain to the Chinese Government. He had been promoted to the rank of Viscount for the success of his work as Governor of Madras, and earlier, of Bombay. He was already the recipient of the highest decorations in the Indian Empire, the British Empire and the Star of India. He is also a Knght of Grace of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem.

It is expected that Viscount Willingdon will assume his duties at Rideau Hall late in September.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 21, 1926.

THE FIGHT IS ON.

With the official announcement of the date of the Federal election, the calling of a local Conservative convention for the nomination of a candidate, and the probability that a Liberal convention for the same purpose will closely follow, the campaign may be said to be under way.

The early September date selected by Mr. Meighen will be appreciated by business men, who are glad to know that the turmoil will be over before the autumn business opens out, and by urban dwellers generally, but it is not likely to be so popular with the farmers, especially those in Western Canada where harvesting and politics are liable to prove a poor mixture.

Hot August nights, too, provide a poor setting for political meetings, and the party stump-binders will have to be more than equally eloquent if they hope to hold their audience when the mercury is flirting with the 80 degree mark.

The individual who is entrusted with the task of seeing that there is a pitcher of cold water on the table for the use of the perspiring orators, looms up as one of the most important figures in the coming campaign.

LEARN TO SWIM.

An unusual opportunity is being furnished by The Examiner to its readers who have not learned to swim.

The series of articles by Miss Lillian Cannon, famous woman swimmer, who is at present in training for an attempt to swim the English Channel, offers a rare chance to acquire the art.

Miss Cannon's explanations are so lucid and simple and the illustrations make her instructions so easy to understand that no non-swimmer should have any difficulty in acquiring the art.

Those who have not learned to swim are not only without the means of saving themselves in the case of accident but they are missing a lot of fun and wholesome recreation.

There is no finer exercise or none that yields so much entertainment than swimming, and the present opportunity of learning in the right way should not be allowed to drift by.

Miss Cannon's articles started this week in The Examiner, and they will be found full of useful hints not only to non-swimmers but to those who know considerable about the art.

DISCOURAGING TOURISTS.

Some time ago The Examiner called attention to the action of some Rice Lake property owners who apparently believing that the lake was their own private fishery preserve, tried to drive away tourists from in front of their property.

Here is the full story as given in a letter received from the citizens of Akron, Ohio, who figured in the episode.

The names are purposely withheld, but may be given later if there are any further reports of tourists being harassed.

"Details re Mr. ——. He met us on Rice Lake, caught our boat, and asked us to stay off the lake in front of his cottage. Next day Mr. —— (another party) met us and said it looked as if we would even fish off his boathouse and he would see that we were kept off the lake, threatening to employ legal aid. He put two stakes in to keep up out, and the next day he got his motor-boat out and kept going around us trying to catch us. Whether he meant to upset us or not, we do not know. We pulled the stakes out, and he said he was going to Keene to swear out a warrant against us, and we suggested that this might be the place for him to go.

"In all he bothered us for three days.

"Now, if the foregoing is not a satisfactory statement we will go before a notary public and swear to it, and if it is absolutely necessary will come back and face it."

At a time when Chambers of Commerce, Municipal Councils, tourists' associations and the various Governments are exerting every effort to induce visitors to come to Canada, the damaging effect of this scurvy treatment of tourists can be readily realized.

Permanent harm to the reputation of the whole district can be done by such actions, and it is trusted that the publicity given by The Examiner to this affair will have the desired effect in putting an end to tourists being annoyed by people who imagine they have jurisdiction over the waters of Rice Lake.

SAFER DRIVING.

The Roads Department of the Quebec Government is to be congratulated upon the vigorous efforts it is making to bring about safer driving conditions in that Province.

Already several hundred careless drivers have found themselves deprived of the privilege of handling a car, and the result of this drastic treatment is said to be found in a much greater anxiety on the part of motorists to abide by the regulations.

"Did you ever ask yourself why, in spite of ceaseless appeals to prudence, the number of accidents steadily rises instead of falling? Just think a moment, and the reason will appear very simple: A motorist does not realize that much advice applies to him personally and that he himself is threatened with accident. Every motorist fancies he is skilful enough to avoid them. Yet in most cases, it is not novices who are victims of the most serious accidents. And the cause of such accidents is hardly ever mere bad luck, but excessive speed and disregard for the rules of prudence.

"Prudence is always in order. Whatever precautions road organization may take, danger is inseparable from the road. It is impossible to eliminate at once all level crossings, curves and hills. Neither is it possible to suppress road intersections. At such places you never know what to expect. Take no chances: slow down, look, listen, stop if necessary. This is mere prudence. Even the straight road, so inviting for speeders, is not without its dangers. Be on your guard. The slightest false movement when speeding can throw you off the road. Many serious accidents occur on fine, straight roads.

"There is danger for you. Understand that you are liable to be victim of an accident and that you must be on your guard. Keep within the law. Do not consider either the latter or the officers charged to enforce it, a nuisance. The law is your guide and speed officers are your friends. Fines are not an end but a means of insuring security. See that you are not listed among the victims of 1926."

"THE MIND OF TYRANNY."

One of the admitted blunders of the general strike in England was the shutting up of the newspapers. It was an ominous indication of what the Trades Union Congress might do if it gained complete power. People did not fail to point out the strange likeness between the attitude of the Italian Dictator and the English proletariat. But the lesson does not appear to have been learned. At the recent meeting of the National Union of Railwaymen at Weymouth, a resolution was promptly adopted to the effect that "only representatives of trades union papers should be eligible to report the public proceedings of this conference." What was meant, of course, was newspapers having the closed shop. But to the credit of the reporters present, not even those who might have qualified under the terms of the resolution remained in the hall. They all left in a body as a protest against such an interference with the freedom of the press. The Daily Herald itself, the Labor newspaper, was for a time at least left without a representative.

Such an action as this of the Railwaymen's Union has rightly been described as exemplifying "the mind of tyranny." A tyrant, a dictator, cannot bear discussion, and feels that he must control every medium of communicating information to the general public. Uncolored truth he considers inimical to himself. The free reporting and printing of what he says or does or proposes, he cannot tolerate. That trades unions should be ready, on slight occasion, to set up this form of censorship or suppression of the press, does not argue well for the quality of their leadership. Yet Labor censors have long been known in England. When Mr. Hamilton Fyfe was editor of The British Worker, he wrote: "I have four censors sitting at my table—a large one, fortunately—who go through every line of type." This gives an unpleasant hint of what sort of rules for newspapers Labor would lay down if it got into a position to do freely with the English press what Mussolini has done with the Italian. Happily, labor leaders in the United States are too clear-sighted, saying nothing of any question of principle, to commit such a mistake as that which the English trade unionists have repeatedly fallen into of seeking to deprive the public of legitimate information.—New York Times.

THE MIRACLE OF NIGHT.

City people never see much of the moon. The lights of the city are local and they get between the crowds on the streets and the great illuminator of the night.

Those who live in Toronto all the year around, and every year, may almost go through life without ever being aware of the glory of the moon—without knowing of the boon it is to man, and without ever fully sensing the splendor of the heavens when all the stars are ashine in their illimitable numbers, at their infinite distances, forcing, even on the dullest, thoughts of the incomprehensible vastness of the universe and the pettiness of man and all his works.

When darkness is due to fall in the city the lights go on—in a flash a mile of street, the whole length of every street, is alight. The miracle of night is not, therefore, performed for the benefit of city people. It is denied them. An artificial day is cleverly put on, it reaches house high and goes cellar deep, it fills the eye with the promenade, the swirl of traffic, the attractions of decorated windows, and the thoughts of men are not called to the far and unseeable.

It is, perhaps, a handicap to boys raised in the city that see so much close at hand that they get no clue to the general scheme of things. To them electric light is as common-place as sunlight, and no marvel in either—they may have co-existed since the beginning of time. The street cars moving by means of invisible power, motors, the radio, telephone are matters of course to the city boy, and for him it is the invariable habit of water to flow at the turn of a tap. He may accept everything; nothing may startle him into wonder and enquiry.

The country boy begins at the beginning. He sees about him little or nothing except that which is but one stage removed from primitive nature, and he sees it removed that stage by the skill and toil of man. If he wants water to drink he must pump it from its source in the depths of the earth. If he goes anywhere by night he must find his way by the light of the moon and the stars. He knows his footwear for what it is, the hide of an animal. He knows cloth for what it is, and food and shelter. Familiar with vacant and lonesome places he knows even a city for what it is, a prodigious result of the skill and toil of men. He gets an early grounding in the value of money, for, whatever else he may have, he has of that very little. He sees life in these times, the height and width and purport of it, as a city youth is not likely to. He early learns to do without what he can't afford, which too many raised in the cities never do until much older than he—until life has knocked them down and rolled them over a few times.

When night is due to fall in the country nothing within the power of man could by the remotest chance stay it. The day imperceptibly recedes and is gone. Shadows deepen and spread until everything is enveloped in them; the breezes die down; the woods are still as if listening; there is a splash of a fish killing its kind in the lake; mosquitoes born at the break of day come forth on the great business of their existence; the far putter of a motor-boat violates the stillness; the voice of a man is heard somewhere speaking as is the custom of his species of nothing; a nighthawk rips the air with the noise of his swoop; the stars come out one by one as if called in turn according to their importance; the moon peeps up over the rim of the hill, hesitates, and comes on in full regal authority. Evening closes, and it is night. Toronto Star.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, July 21 (Canadian Press).—The demand from foreign buyers for Canadian grain continued quiet yesterday on the Montreal market. The only business of importance reported was the sales of a few loads of No. 2 Northern wheat to exporters at $1.67 per bushel, and No. 3 Northern at $1.62 per bushel, c.i.f. Montreal. The market for car lots was quiet but prices were steady.

Owing to the decline in cash wheat prices at Winnipeg, the tone of the market for spring wheat grades of flour was easier, but prices showed no change. The export and local trade was inactive.

The undertone to the millfeed market was steady with a fair trade passing. The market for standard grades of rolled oats was firm at the recent advance in prices noted, but the volume of business was small.

A moderate amount of business was transacted in eggs, and the tendency was easier. The receipts were 1,448 cases.

The butter market was slightly more active than it has been of late. Sales of No. 1 pasteurized creamery were made at 32 1-4c per pound. The receipts were 278 packages.

The feature of the cheese trade was the demand from United States speculators and considerable business was transacted. The local trade was quiet. The receipts were 18,010 boxes.

The trade in beans was quiet but prices ruled firm. Car lots of choice white hand-picked were quoted at $2.25 per bushel, and smaller quantities at $2.35 to $2.45 per bushel.

The potato trade was without any new feature to note. Prices for American No. 1 grade being quoted at 86 per barrel. The demand was moderate.

EGG MARKETS

OTTAWA, July 21 (Canadian Press).—Egg markets are generally unchanged yesterday, no Western offerings to the east have been reported.

Toronto—Dealers are quoting for ungraded eggs, delivered, extras 30 to 31, firsts 25 to 27, seconds 20 to 22. Prices to retailers, extras 35 to 36, firsts 31, seconds 27 to 28.

Montreal—Dealers are paying delivered, for ungraded eggs, extras 31 to 33, firsts 26 to 30, seconds 21 to 25. Prices to retailers, extras 38, firsts 30 to 32, seconds 28 to 29.

Winnipeg — Dealers are quoting shippers, extras 25, firsts 23, seconds 18, delivered, cases returned. Prices to retailers, extras 35-37, firsts 30 to 32, seconds 26.

Saskatchewan. — Country dealers are selling extras 22, firsts 20, seconds 16. Prices to retailers extras 30, firsts 28, seconds 23.

CHICAGO GRAINS

CHICAGO, July 21 (Canadian Press).—Wheat and corn parted company yesterday, wheat prices going down whereas corn went up. Showers and lower temperatures northwest, helpful to the spring wheat crop, had a decided bearish effect on wheat values. Hot dry weather in the west lifted the corn market. Closing quotations on wheat were unsettled 2c to 4c net lower, with corn at 7-8 to 1 1-2 gain, oats varying from 1-2 decline to 7-8 advance, and provisions 7 to 45 down.

The wheat market appeared overbought and there was no denying that houses recently active as purchasers were among the leading sellers yesterday. Some increase of hedging sales was also an outstanding feature and the July delivery here dropped to a discount as compared with September. In this connection a good deal of notice was taken of the fact that first deliveries this season here on July contracts were made yesterday. The amount thus disposed of was only 10,000 bushels, but talk was current that a heavy movement of new winter wheat from the Central states is beginning and that ready absorption of large arrivals in Chicago may prove difficult.

With cutting of wheat expected to start in South Dakota next week, some doubt was expressed whether under such circumstances any crop improvement would result from rains or cooler temperatures, either in South Dakota or Southern Minnesota. On the other hand export demand was slow, world stocks increased 2,170,000 bushels for the week and domestic arrivals southwest continued liberal with 740 cars at Kansas City alone.

Temperatures of around 100 in the west together with lack of rain gave a notable stimulus to buying of future deliveries of corn, regardless of the action of wheat. Oats, however, sympathized with wheat weakness.

Provisions reflected the course of hog values.

Peterboro-Hastings Conservatives To Hold Convention at Marmora.

(Staff Correspondence).

NORWOOD, July 20.—The Conservative convention in the Peterboro-Hastings riding will be held at Marmora on Wednesday, August 4. It will renominate Dr. Embury, who defeated G. A. Brethen last October. This is at least one certainty, according to prominent Conservatives, who, while hearing rumors of Liberal opposition, predict that the local contest will be a walk-over for the Bancroft doctor. Speakers at the convention will include Hon. J. R. Cooke, W. E. Tummon, J. A. Seysmith. Mr. F. C. Squire is president of the Liberal-Conservative Association.

Several Liberals told The Examiner that a convention was being arranged for, although the date was not definitely fixed, and that a candidate would be placed in the field.

HOW DO YOU SAY IT?

(By C. N. Lurie.)

Common Errors in English and How To Avoid Them.

"PROBLY"

There is in the English language no such word as "probly," although it is frequently heard, especially among the uneducated or illiterate, instead of "probably." Sometimes the word "probably" is even written "probly." The word should be pronounced carefully, with the full value given to each of its three syllables; thus, "prob-ab-ly."

The question is sometimes asked, "Do grammarians set the standards of a language, or do they simply follow and record the changes which the users of a language find it necessary to make, to meet their needs of expression?" The question is answered thus by the New York Times:

"Whether or not the hen came before the egg, there is no longer much doubt that languages came before their grammars, and that the languages have kept ten or twenty years ahead of the grammars, ever since there were grammars."

DR. FRANK CRANE'S DAILY EDITORIAL.

SENTIMENT AND SANITATION.

By Dr. Frank Crane.

A gentleman in California who knew some of the original characters in Helen Hunt Jackson's "Ramona" contributes an interesting twist to one phase of the story.

The part where the Indian, Allessandro, and his bride are ejected from the house where they are living has caused the anger of a host of fiction lovers.

The reason they were put out, says this gentleman, was not because of spite on the part of the landlord, but because the house was kept in such a filthy condition that it was unsanitary and a menace to the community.

Besides showing that there are two sides to every story this illustrates a curious fact in human history: namely, that sentiment and sanitation have been often at odds.

Sentiment clings to the unsanitary as firmly as the sanitary and fiercely opposes any change.

Those who live in slums are the ones who most strenuously object to any alteration for the betterment of health conditions.

When oil lamps, lessening the strain on the eyes and bettering the condition of health, were first introduced into England they were attacked by the literary men of London on the grounds that they took the sentiment out of life. Candles were associated with the romantic past. Oil lamps were a monstrosity of the present.

Ever the past holds the interest of sentiment and new improvements seem to be destroying it.

To the average American, Spain is a land of romance. It is thought of in terms of moonlight, tinkling guitars, playing fountains, "La Paloma," and beautiful black-haired Carmens with red roses in their teeth.

Former Ambassador Alexander P. Moore, who just returned from this land of romance, says the lowliest American laborer lives more luxuriously and possesses greater conveniences than the grandest Spanish grandee.

The mundane considerations of running water, bathtubs, plumbing, and such things, which make life better and more healthful seem out of the realm of sentiment.

But they are part the basis upon which humanity progresses, and where sentiment stands in the way of such progress it has to give way in the end.

Lyrics Of Life

(By Douglas Malloch.)

THINGS TO LAUGH AT.

Life has a lot of things to laugh at,
A lot of things are funny,
And one thing that I always laugh at
Is fighting over money.
I don't deny it comes in handy,
A bank account is fine and dandy,
For money keeps a man in clover—
But none of it's worth fighting over.

There are a lot of things to laugh at,
And one of them is trouble.
I've heard a lot of jokes to laugh at
That bent me nearly double,
But when I do my broadest grinning
Is when I lose, not when I'm winning—
I like to show the other fellow
I may be green, but never yellow.

For life itself's a thing to laugh at,
With work and woe and worry:
We hardly pause for things to laugh at,
And yet what's all the hurry?
The way we work from dawn to seven,
You'd think we were so sure of heaven,
Of all the joys that will be met there,
We simply couldn't wait to get there.

But there's so much in life to laugh at,
I try to look around me,
For I might miss some joy to laugh at,
Some fun I might have found me,
The kiss of children, hand of brothers,
The peace of home, and lots of others—
So Father Time I shake my staff at,
And try to see the things to laugh at!

Tenderfoot Gold Seeking Clerks Paddle Way To Victory Over Indians and Old Woodsmen At Mining Camp Sports

PINE RIDGE, Ont., July 21.—Pine Ridge is starting to assume the aspect of a real mining camp. Twice recently the entire population has turned out for a sports day in which foot races, canoe races and specialty stunts figured prominently and the skill of the Indian and northwoodsman was matched against the skill of the gold-seeking bookkeeper from Toronto, Ottawa or Montreal. And be it said to the credit of the former clerks that they, at least those who have spent the summer here, have advanced to a degree where in northwoods work they yield nothing to either red man or to the old sourdough. Be it canoeing, portageing with a heavy pack or cooking bannocks, they hold their own, which is in stanced that a couple of young Ottawa boys paddled their way to victory over Indians and old woodsmen at the 12th of July sports at Pine Ridge.

There were over 50 competitions of different kinds in the sports which were held on July 1 and July 12. There was a 250-yard dash and 100-yard dash. Prizes consisted of flashlights, lump lines, pipe sets and other useful articles, some of which were donated for the occasion by storekeepers of Pine Ridge and others given by popular subscription. "Gold Rush" Scotty, well-known character of the Red Lake camps, acted as master of ceremonies, not only for the sports, but also for a dance which was given at H. M. Mullen's new hotel.

SHADOW OF DICTATORSHIP LOOMS AHEAD OF HERRIOT'S MINISTRY

Two Hundred and Forty Deputies Sign Demand For Body With Special Powers.

LOBBY TALK.

Government Does Not Enjoy Confidence of Many of the Deputies.

PARIS, July 21 (Canadian Pres).—Premier Herriot's second cabinet is being greeted with a rapidly-spreading cry for "committee of public safety." Two hundred and forty deputies have signed a demand for a species of dictatorship which, though not expressly intended to be modelled on the revolutionary body dominated by Denton and Robespierre, ought, in the opinion of the prime movers, to have sufficient power to act with energy and without parliamentary instruction.

Among the signers are many members of the Radical group presided over by H. Herriot as well as many members of the old coalition of the Left. The Republican Socialists are the moving spirits; heretofore they have been staunch supporters of Herriot, but they declare now that the situation requires something stronger than the ministry just formed.

Manifesto Circulated

Deputy Morinaud, who began the movement, is still circulating the manifesto and obtaining new signatures. So soon as he has a majority of the Chamber, the manifesto will be handed to President Doumergue. There is some question as to the constitutionality of this procedure. The movers of the scheme are not daunted by the constitutional question, however, because of the necessities of the situation.

The manifesto will, it is declared, call upon the president to form a national union cabinet that will cast all party considerations aside.

Those who are supporting the demand point to the fact that M. Herriot's cabinet is already talking of asking parliament for "special liberties" to deal with the financial question, which they regard as only camouflage for the "full powers" which M. Caillaux asked for. They declare that if M. Herriott regarded the Brian-Caillaux ministry unworthy the confidence placed by a grant of full powers, the Herriot ministry offers no better guarantee, and they contend that President Doumergue ought to be given an opportunity to choose a man to form a ministry to which the necessary powers can be given.

First Cabinet Council

The new Herriot ministry held its first cabinet council on Tuesday. The ministerial declaration will be submitted to the Chamber to-day, after which M. Herriot will probably go into details of his future policy.

The lease of life accorded the new government in the lobby talk varied from three days to three months. A good many deputies expect the government to fall immediately after presenting itself in the Chamber; others are inclined to think that a majority of the deputies will allow the government time to bring in its financial measures. There is little confidence anywhere that the Government can last long enough to accomplish anything toward the salvation of the franc.

M. De Monzie, the Finance Minister, will submit the government's financial plan to the Chamber to-day. A statement was issued at the conclusion of the Cabinet meeting last night as follows:

"The Cabinet continued its elaboration of the ministerial declaration which will be read in parliament tomorrow (Wednesday) at 5 o'clock, and of bils which will be immediately introduced. Further meetings will be held at 2 p.m. Wednesday, and at Elysee Palace at 3.30 p.m."

CHURCH DEACON TELLS HIS STORY TO GRAND JURY

Heard Argument Between Norris and Chipps Before Shooting.

MYSTERY MAN.

Entered Pastor's Study But Fled After Lumberman Was Shot.

FORT WORTH, Texas, July 21.—Chipps, the man shot by Rev. Norris, was buried with Masonic rites, services being held at First Presbyterian Church here, with Dr. J. K. Thompson officiating.

The grand ury investigating the slaying last Saturday of D. E. Chipps, by the Rev. Dr. J. Frank Norris, nationally known fundamentalist, adjourned until to-day. Eleven additional witnesses are being summoned.

Miss Jane Hartwell, Norris' secretary, who was in an adjoining room at the moment of the killing, and L. H. Nutt, deacon in the church, and an eye-witness to the shooting, were among the witnesses who appeared before the grand jury yesterday.

A county grand jury yesterday heard the story of the shooting of D. E. Chipps, lumberman, by Dr. J. Frank Norris, pastor of the First Baptist Church.

L. H. Nutt, auditor and deacon in the church, was the first witness. Nutt was sitting in Norris' office in the church study when Chipps entered, and he heard the argument which is said to have preceded the shooting.

He was an eye-witness to the latest episode in the life of Norris—known throughout Texas as the "Texas Cyclone," because of his vigorous battles waged from the church pulpit.

Seven other witnesses will be called before the grand jury to-day.

While the grand jury inquiry was going on police were searching for the "mystery man" who is said to have entered the pastor's study with Chipps, and who stood there while Chipps and the pastor argued. Police said the man fled immediately after the shooting.

Three men who served as honorary pall-bearers at Chipps' funeral Sunday are on the grand jury.

LONDON, July 21. — An energetic and determined drive against the proposed war debt settlements with the United States is being made here. Monday night's plain spoken debate in the House of Commons is only one indication of this feeling. Many newspaper and many leading politicians of all parties believe that the only salvation for France and for European countries generally is an arrangement to cancel all war debts.

Lord Rothermere's Daily Mail is printing daily a list of what it calls "cold facts," illustrating how United States is soaking up the money of Europe.

Monday Rothermere's Evening News printed a cartoon describing United States as "Uncle Shylock," the bitterness of which has aroused a good deal of resentment among English friends of America. Attacks like this are undoubtedly creating a spirit of hostility among the people upon which official England and most thoughtful people are frowning.

Apparently, those who are conducting this campaign have selected this moment not only because of the perturbation aroused by the swiftly falling franc but because of the presence in England of thousands of American tourists and of the preparations now under way for the visit of United States Secretary Mellon.

Whether the campaign will have any financial effect is doubtful but politically it is very harmful to Premier Baldwin, who was responsible for the American debt settlement and also to the maintenance of good relations between Britain and United States.

McCoy's Cod Liver Extract Tablets Fine For Thin Under Developed Kids

Children Love Them Because They Are Sugar Coated and as Easy to Take as Candy.

It's your duty, Mother, to see that the frail, peaked, sickly youngster grows up to be strong in body, keen in mind and robust in health.

Extracted from the livers of the lowly codfish are the health, weight and strength producing vitamines that are found in McCoy's Cod Liver Extract Tablets, which are sold by pharmacists all over North and South America.

Doctors know about them and so does McDermid and Jury and Bond's drug stores, and if your children need building up ask for these tablets to-day if you want to give your loved ones a good appetite and put pounds of good healthy flesh on their bones.

But be sure and get McCoy's.

They are not expensive—60 tablets 60 cents—and if you are not pleased with the improvement after 30 days, your money back.

A very sickly child, age 9, gained 12 pounds in seven months and is strong and healthy.

One skinny woman gained 9 pounds in 24 days.

TWO BEAR CUBS IN AN OHIO ZOO BRING TOURISTS TO HASTINGS

Seventeen in One Party Camping on the Trent River.

BEARS THRIVING.

Hundred Tourists From Medina, O., Already at Hastings This Season.

(Examiner Staff Correspondence).

HASTINGS, July 21. — How two bear cubs have helped propagate in a section of Ohio favorable publicity for Hastings and its summer attractions is emphasized by a party of seventeen tourists from that State who are camping on the Trent River just below the town. Two years ago the bears were caught by the Hastings Hunt Club and brought home as prizes. Then they were forwarded to Rittman, Ohio, for the zoo in that city as gifts of goodwill and remembrance because several of Rittman's citizens had previously established themselves in Hastings as amiable summer visitors.

This week's numerous party report that the cubs have thrived in the Rittman zoo, far from their native Canadian woods, and are developing into lusty bears of circus size and appearance. They have, meanwhile, made Hastings and the Trent district better known in the Rittman area of Ohio, dumb agents of this part of Ontario and its lures and welcome for American tourists.

The party is as follows: Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Mills and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. R. U. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Arley Trent, Mr. and Mrs. Saunders of Rittman; also Mr. and Mrs. Enos Wheeler of Medina, O.; Miss Mildred Normando of Elyria, O., and Mr. and Mrs. Abrams of Wadsworth, O.

Yesterday at sunset the whole party was fishing off the bridge, dock and piers, enoying the never-failing breeze that blows down the Trent. Above the dam the river was as smooth and placid as a pond, reflecting the opalescent sky as the sun declined toward the hill's horizon. The day's papers had carried despatches of torrid heat throughout the northern States, but these tourists were on the river all day fishing and bathing. They have been fully enjoying their outing, the only fly in the ointment of their holiday being the usual ubiquitous, persistent and altogether pestiferous mosquito, the stray intruder which, no doubt, sighted the Rittman camp for a nocturnal raid the very day it was set up. To-day some of the campers are motoring to Peterboro. All of them have been successful fishing, and their fish dinners have been daily features. The table qualities of the Trent pickerel will be remembered long after the Rittman party return home next Sunday.

It is believed here that about one hundred tourists from the Medina section of Ohio have already visited Hastings this summer, and only half of it is gone, apart from the fall months when the fishing is often best.

Toronto Boys' Trip.

Four young men of Toronto who are spending the summer at Bobcaygeon, passed through the locks here last evening with their 32-foot gasoline launch, the "Louise," bound for the Thousand Islands. They were Gordon Holden, Jack Farmery, Bruce Powers and Chas. Parkis. They tied up at Gore's Landing yesterday, and their objective last night was Trent Bridge.

At Brockville Re-union.

Rev. M. L. Hinton and Mrs. Hinton have gone to Brockville for ten days. Their visit coincides with the Brockville Old Boys' Re-union, for which more than 1,000 persons had registered.

Fred Longmuir, who underwent an operation at Campbellford Sunday, is making rapid recovery. He was visited yesterday by Rev. Mr. Jones of Warkworth.

Girl, Dressed As Man, Resorts To Life Of Hobo

KINGSTON, July 21.—Dressed in the garb of a man, and taking her place with real "knights of the road" jumping on freight trains and sleeping out in barns and outhouses along the railway tracks, an eighteen year old girl named Lena Smith, from Montreal was placed under arrest on a charge of vagrancy and remanded a week. She was caught in a hobos' camp near the outer station.

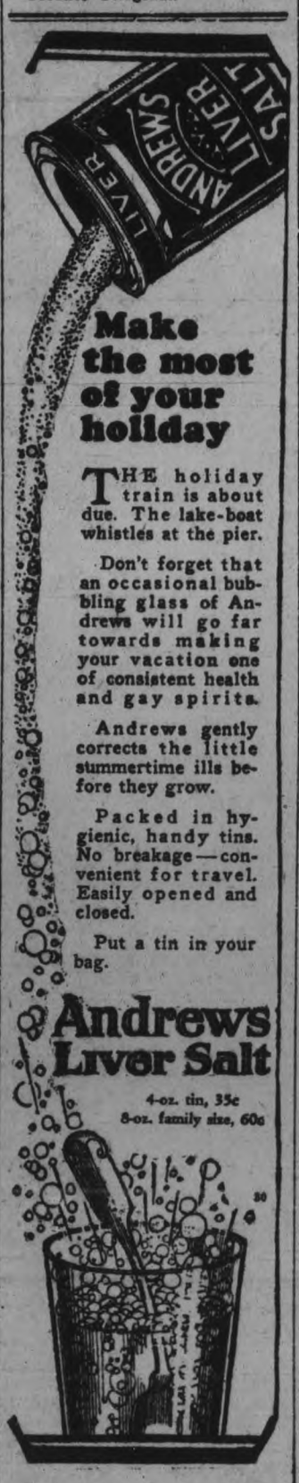
Side Whisker Ringlet Is Latest Fad In London

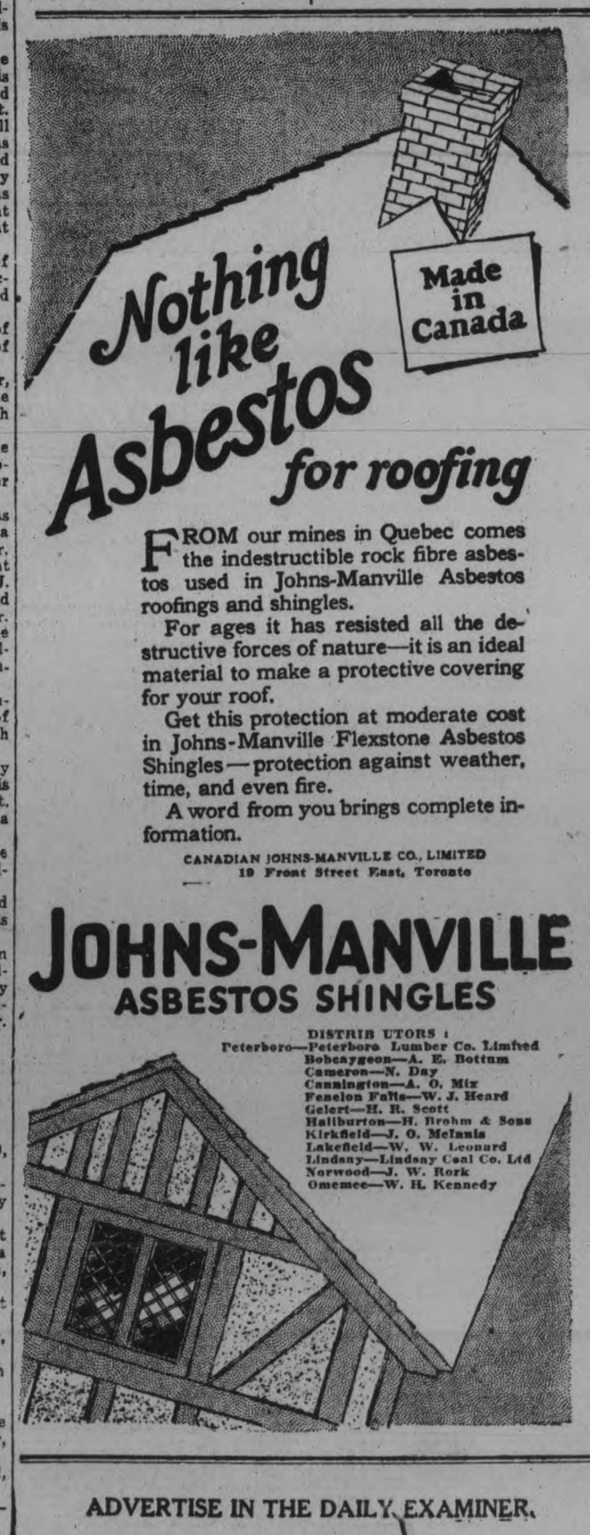
LONDON, July 21.—The side whisker curl is the latest addition to the inventions for bridging over the trying period between the shingle and long hair.

New ideas in this direction are put forth almost daily, and the quaintly bewitching whisker curl is certainly attractive.

The back hair is rolled tightly over or under and pinned on the nape of the neck. Out of each end of the roll curls a longish wisp of hair, which coils its way below the ear across the side of the face.

These whisker curls are not always of the "growing curls" variety, but independent ones that can be pinned on and taken off at will. The curls are really a development of the 18th century ringlet that curled down the shoulders of the beauties of that time from their elaborate powdered coiffures.





Blue-jay will enable you to wear the loveliest, most extreme shoe styles without fear of corns

Leading foot specialist tells dangers of paring corns at home

"Home paring of corns is opening the door to infection," writes Dr. J. S. Ansley, the prominent chiropodist and foot specialist of Cleveland, Ohio. "Corns should be cut only by a chiropodist."

Indeed, see your chiropodist as often as you see your dentist, if you would keep your feet in prime condition.

But between visits, when a corn needs attention, put on a Blue-jay plaster. It is the safe, sure and gentle way of removing corns at home. So recognized by leading authorities for 26 years.

Blue-jay is scientific. There is no guesswork about it. You do not have to guess how little or how much to put on. Each plaster is a standardized treatment—with just the right amount of medication to end the corn. At all drug stores.

NORTHUMBERLAND CONSERVATIVES TO MEET AT WARKWORTH JULY 27TH

M. E. Maybee Regarded as Certain Choice of Convention.

LIBERALS PREPARE.

Farmer's Daughter Injured By Mower—St. Mary's Cemetery Improvements.

(Examiner Correspondence)

CAMPBELLFORD, July 20.—Northumberland Conservatives will choose their Federal candidate at Warkworth on Tuesday, July 27. The convention is generally regarded as a mere formality for the re-indorsation of Milton E. Maybee, the present representative of the riding at Ottawa. His supporters declare their satisfaction with Mr. Maybee and his record in Parliament, and express their confidence in his ability to retain the seat in the Conservative column.

Meanwhile, Liberals assert that with a certain standard-bearer, whom they decline to name, they would have better than a fighting chance. Their problem is to persuade this stalwart of the party to accept the nomination at the convention whose date will be announced shortly. They do not concede that Milton E. Maybee has the constituency all to himself, or that Northumberland is a Conservative stronghold. Their attitude is that with the right man, they can win.

Conservatives are curious about the Liberal nominee, and some of them are so confident of Maybee's election that they expect it to be by acclamation. Liberals, on the other hand, promise a surprise at their convention, providing their plans and persuasiveness prevail.

Injured By Mower.

Eileen Third, eight year old daughter of Neil Third, a farmer living on the fifth Concession of Seymour township, was painfully injured by a mower on Saturday. The machine was being driven by the hired man, and in some way the girl got in the path of its knives. Both her legs were cut severely, the injury to the left leg being the more serious. The extensory cord was cut and also a bone, and in the right leg a bone was badly gouged. Medical aid was obtained from Campbellford, and the girl was removed to Belleville hospital.. The full use of her left leg will be permanently impaired.

Cemetery Improved.

The long grass on neglected parts of St. Mary's cemetery was cut and raked yesterday by a "bee" of forty men, and an encouraging beginning was made toward improvements which will be carried on more effectively in future. Rev. C. J. Phelan, parish priest, was present throughout the day while mower and rakes were strenuously plied. Next year a committee will be appointed to supervise the care of the cemetery. Rev. Father Phelan thanked all the men who helped in the work, especially Protestant friends who gave their time and labor in the heat for the beautification of the Catholic graveyard.

Little damage resulted from Saturday night's electric storm. Several transformers were blown out, and the light bulbs of Mrs. John Roach's home were broken by the electric surge on the wires. A window at her home was also smashed during the storm.

Clean to handle. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and General Stores

Daily Short Story

THE WYCKLIFFE SILENCER.

By MARTHA McCULLOUGH-WILLIAMS.

"Misery! Misery!! Mis-er-ee!! Consolation's on tap! Come get it! Come get it!" Jincy shrilled, twinkling her wickedest at Roland, who sat blushing and twisting in saddle beside the Barton stile. The blush was mainly rooted in anger—he knew how bitterly Missouri hated the way Jincy played with her name. Indeed, he was near to hating Jincy herself, whole and several—she was forever popping in when and where she had no business—three several times she had balked his set and steadfast purpose to propose to her cousin. Missouri wasn't coming—rather he saw her skittering away down the back of the garden. The sight was the last straw. Ruthlessly, but masking his design with a serious pretense, he leaned lower, saying "Miss Jincy—d'you want to make some easy money?"

"Lead me to it—if it is also nice money," Jincy piped gaily. "Just sing out how much!—and how long do I work for it?"

"Fifty dollars—for wearing something nice and clean, that don't weigh an ounce nor won't burn nor scratch—fast color, and smells like garden flowers for—well! maybe a matter of three hours—from eight o'clock till 'leven——"

Three nights later he came to the Barton place close upon eight o'clock, companioned by Bug Wilson, at sight of whom Jincy's heart went pit-a-pat. 'Fetched him to have an outside witness to the contract," Roland explained, as he pulled out a legal-looking document, and thrust it in her hand, adding "Read it! Slow and easy. Always do that before you sign."

Jincy shook her head, pushed the paper away, and said shrilly "Bother! Start the show—if you're going to."

Roland nodded, and read in his best voice the contract witnessing that Jerusha Barton—Jincy winced at the name—covenanted and agreed, in consideration of fifty dollars, gold in hand, to wear without protest or violence an ornament to be provided by Roland Wyckliffe, warranted safe, elegant, decorative and highly convenient. Laughter half drowned his words, but the signing went forward, Jincy writing as boldly as Roland himself, Bug signed chuckling hard, Missouri pale, half frightened. Jincy sat down upon the sofa, shut her eyes, and waited—somehow holding her breath.

What was coming? A bustle maybe—or even a scoop-bonnet—she had seen a huge one cherished by Roland's grandmother. Cat-like Roland came behind her—something silken, scented, was laid over her mouth, its edges pressed down hard upon her face—she knew the feel of surgeon's tape, lengths of which ran to her ears, down under her chin, and diagonally across to her temples.

Jincy wanted wildly to run away. Pride forbade—she had given her word. Beside Roland had said, settling Bug at her elbow, "On guard son! find your fiddle—it's generally parked here—and give us the best you've got while I do some serious talking. Between tunes you can talk for yourself—remember that's in the bargain—and you'll never again have as good a chance."

Bug obeyed, grinning happily. He had music in his soul, in his fingertips, if he didn't know a note. Playing, his eyes said things to the angry girl beside him. Between tunes his lips repeated "I know you love me—you'd say it now—if you could. Aren't you thinkin' 'Yes'—to have it ready when you get your tongue back?"

Jincy listened, her hands clinching hysterically. How she held herself to even half-sane consciousness she never quite understood. She saw Roland and Missouri at the furthest window, she looking into the moonlit world, his eyes devouring her face. A face transfigured now—rose-flushed, all the droop gone from about the lips that had taken on suddenly a wholesome, rich scarlet. Inaction became unbearable — she caught Bug's arm, pointed to the mantel-mirror and made to rise. He led her where she pleased to go—so she saw her torment—a puckered something of scarlet silk, shaped roughly like an exaggerated mouth, which gave her the countenance of a fury or a vampire.

She cried muffledly "Take it—off! Off! It's killing me!" Her words were indistinguishable—but her look translated them. At Bug's terrified cry Roland and Missouri rushed to them. Roland himself loosed the red false mouth, and supported Jincy to the window, saying apologetically "Child, I never dreamed you'd take the joke this way. I'm sorry it upset you—but still not that I did the thing I had to. You see I've had my sayout with Missouri—she's made me so happy, I love all the world—nearly."

"But you still hate me! I know it," Jincy cried vindictively, "else you wouldn't have let Bug——"

"Did he dare say things you didn't want to hear?" from Roland sternly.

"That must have been hard," from Roland contritely—then over his shoulder, "Bug, you scoundrel, come here and listen at what Jincy thinks your impudence deserves!"

Bug came like a very small boy—head drooped, hands before his eyes. Jincy swept them down, saying with a stamp of her foot "I hate you. But I do reckon you had to take your only chance."

JOHN G. MILLS.

The following was taken from the Fairfield News:

John Glover Mills, member of one of Fairfield's well known families died in the Wellesley Hospital, Toronto, Canada, on Monday, after an illness of influenza. He had gone to Canada with Mrs. Mills, formerly Lillian H. Rush of Peterborough, Ont., whom he married in January 1925, intending to spend the summer after wintering in Florida. He stopped at the family homestead in Fairfield on his way north six weeks ago. Mr. Mills was sixty-one years old having died on his birthday. He was born in Fairfield, June 21, 1865.

He was the son of the late Henry Sheaff Mills and Mary Glover Mills. The family spent its summers in Fairfield and winters in New York where John attended the Morris Lyon school.

He was engaged in the tea importing business in New York for a time, and successively many enterprises occupied his time. At one time he was cashier of the Central New England Western railroad, the Poughkeepsie bridge route, and has his offices in New York. Later he was connected with the sales department of the Bridgeport Brass Company where he introduced two innovations that were taken up by bicycle enthusiasts of the day, with remarkable results for the brass company. These were a lamp, invented by a man named Ryan, and a pump, large quantities of the articles being sold.

As a representative of the Remington Typewriter company, he introduced this machine in England and did pioneer work there for the introduction of the typewriter.

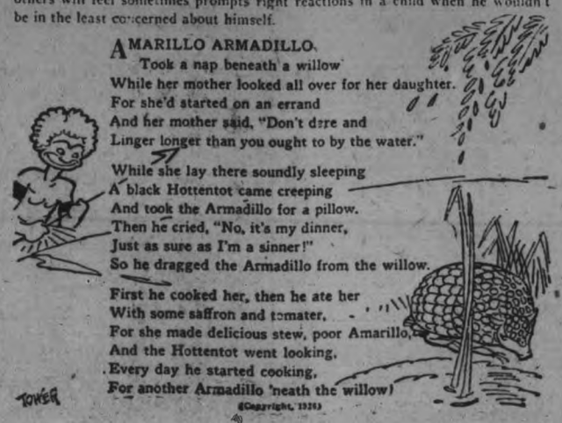
The funeral took place from the family residence The Elms, Post road on Thursday afternoon to Mountain Grove cemetery, Bridgeport, Conn.

Deceased had visited Peterborough on many occasions.

Amarillo Armadillo

By SHIRLEY RODMAN WILLIAMS

IT IS not an infallible rule that disobedience and wrongdoing bring their own punishment, at least not their immediate and evident punishment. I heard a young person wail the other day, "But Mother, it's always the person who doesn't have to be so good who has the best time!" He hasn't yet learned that folks pretty much reap, in happiness or unhappiness, what they sow! Sometimes though, it's other people who take the punishment, and consideration for how others will feel sometimes prompts right reactions in a child when he wouldn't be in the least concerned about himself.



AMARILLO ARMADILLO.
Took a nap beneath a willow
While her mother looked all over for her daughter.
For she'd started on an errand
And her mother said, "Don't dare and Linger longer than you ought to by the water."

While she lay there soundly sleeping
A black Hottentot came creeping
And took the Armadillo for a pillow.
Then he cried, "No, it's my dinner,
Just as sure as I'm a sinner!"
So he dragged the Armadillo from the willow.

First he cooked her, then he ate her
With some saffron and tomater,
For she made delicious stew, poor Amarillo,
And the Hottentot went looking,
Every day he started cooking,
For another Armadillo 'neath the willow!

MEIGH..N RESTS CASE ON CUSTOMS SCANDAL

tion and dishonest officials, neither the new legislation nor the old would produce results. You will find in that evidence not the slightest sign of any appreciation of the enormity of the injury to the people of Canada; not the slightest sign of any sense of duty resulting in administrative action, until the news of the proposed resoluton of Mr. Stevens got out in the fall of 1925. Up to that time it was a matter of delegating following delegation; of letters following letters, most of which received no reply at all; protest following protest; of outrage following outrage; Bisaillon, the arch-swindler still in control, officials in the liquor and smuggling business themselves kept in postions of trust; honest men denied the right of earning a living because they could not compete against smugglers and thieves.

"To say that millions of dollars have been lost to the treasury is a mild recital of the truth; to say that thousands of our workmen have been thrown out of employment is a grossly inadequate statement of the facts; to say that the moral sense of a section of the public service was dulled by those in authority into condonation of wrong—this also is undoubted. All those things wil be borne in upon any intelligent Canadian who reads the evidence of the Customs Committee.

All Legislation in Vain.

"The late Prime Minister pleaded before the House of Commons that he should be given credit for having passed some anti-smuggling legislation in 1925. I strongly supported that legislation. I believe in that legislation still, but the evidence before the Customs Committee showed that such legislation was effection for no more than a month. The utter ineffectiveness and malfeasance of the whole administrative machine had made all legislation vain. The fact is, the Customs Department as an instrument of Government had collapsed. Mr. Boivin is now pleading that he started investigtions before Mr. Stevens gave notice of his resolution. So he did, but only by two or three days, but Mr Boivin had heard of Mr. Steven's resoluition and that is why he started an investigation. Read the evidence of Inspector Duncan and you will find there that Inspector Duncan at the very time he was asked to go down to Montreal and investigate the conduct of Bisaillon, the arch-malefactor of the whole maladorous organization, was told by the Hon. Mr. Boivin about the Stevens resolution. This evidence is uncontradicted and in the fact of it Mr. Boivin cannot now he heard to say that he started an investigation in November, 1925, for any other reason than because he had to. To Harry H. Stevens the people of Canada owe the fact that anything whatever has been accomplished toward disclosing the disreputable plight into which the Department of Customs and Excise had fallen.

Urges Perusal of Evidence.

"It is the duty of ever; one who can to read the evidence taken before that committee. If you cannot read the evidence at least read the verdict. Remember that the verdirt is the verdict of the Liberal memberh of the committee, in which the Progressive members joined. It is the verdict of the friends of the Government, the followers of the Government, members elected to support the Government, the Conservative members as well agreeing with the finding so far as it went, but declared that it was not by any means so strong as the evidence justified. I am going to read you now from the verdict as found by the Liberal and Progressive members of the committee and I ask you to reflect upon what must have been the evidence which would impel members friendly to the Administration to come to these conclusions:

"'Clause 6—The evidence submitted to committee leads to the general conclusion that for a long time the Department of Customs and Excise h bdasolnlywstheca-GoveintRR cise had been slowly degenerating in e ciency and that the process was greatly accelerated in the last few years. Apparently the Hon. Jacques Bureau, then Minister of Customs, failed to appreci.te and properly discharge the responsibilities of his office and as a result there was a lack of efficient, continuous and vigorous control of subordinates by the headquarters staff at Ottawa.'

Claims Facts Manipulated

'In clause 7, the committee found that officials were persuaded by the Minister in charge to add to a statement of the facts in connection with a smuggling charge a recommendation wholly at variance with the facts. These are the words of the report:

"'Although, as a rule, the facts are correctly recited in the summary submitted to the Minister, the opinion is not infrequently at variance with such facts, and the recommendation is so drawn as to elicit a decision to which such facts are repugnant. This discrepancy is accounted for by the fact that the report upon the evidence was in many instances preceded by a conference, and the recommendation was dictated by an intelligent anticipation of the Minister's wishes in the premises.'

"That is to say that a deliberate system was adopted of manipulating facts and recommendations without any regard to the rights of the people or the demands of justice. The committee recommended the prosecution of no less than 25 firms whom the evidence indicated had, through the neglect of the department, or worse, failed to pay immense sums of money owing to the Treasury of Canada. In a word, there are many other findings of a startling character, and the unanimous verdict of the committee was that the department had rapidly degenerated, and was indeed in a state of collapse, and that the people of Canada had to pay the penalty. Remember, again I ask you, that this is the verdict as found by Liberal and Progressive members. In the face of this unanimous finding—for in it all agreed—what c.n be said for the Government of Mr. Mackenzie King?

Business Men's Evidence.

"Permit me now to read a few extracts from the evidence given before the committee by a number of leading business men of Canada. These business men had, under the stress of necessity banded themselves together to see if something could not be done to stop the wholesale smuggling business. Their organization had spent weeks and months getting at the facts and trying to effect a remedy, and when they gave their evidence they knew of their own knowledge what they were talking about.

"Colonel Robert Starke, President of the Montreal Board of Trade, testified as follows: "The conditions referred to have seriously injured legitimate business, and some of our members will appear before this committee to state what they believe has been the effect of the smuggling on their business. The Council believes that the main cause of this smuggling has been gross incompetence and connivance on the part of certain Customs officials. The Council further believes that the prevention of the Chief Inspector from exercising his authority in Montreal has had very serious effects."

"James M. Macdonell, member of the Council of the Montreal Board of Trade, made the following statement referring to the new statute of 1925 of which Mr. Mackenzie King boasts so much:

Legislation did Nothing.

"'Now, as a result of this situation in the House of Commons at the time, certain legislation was passed, and I suppose hopes were held out that it might be effective, but we were grievously disappointed with the results, and so far as one can learn, it has resulted in othing.

"'I believe the legislation is not at fault; it is the Administration. I believe there is force enough, if the matter were righteously done, to enforce that legislation.'

"Mr. C. Lapolley, senior Canadian partner, Mark Fisher, Sons and Co. of Montreal: 'For the past four years the market has been flooded with enormous quantities of goods, notably silks, unmanufactured and manufactured garments, woollens, tailors' trimmings and other goods. The situation created by this is very serious—our country suffers in two ways, in the loss of duty which should have been collected, and again in the loss of the income tax which would have been paid had firms doing an honest business handled the same lincs of goods with a profit .....

"'I should like to see the law so administered that everybody would have an equal chance with his neighbor. It is not so at the present time.'

Hard Hit by Underground Route.

"Mr. Alfred J. Doherty, President of the Doherty Manufacturing Co., Ltd., of Toronto, 'We have in the last four years experienced a state of affairs in the manufacturing of silk garments in Canada that is dwindling down further every year; we cannot compete with the underground method of selling merchandise in Canada.'

"Mr. Herbert T. Piner, Vice-President of J. C. Bourcier, Ltd., Montreal: 'Now, 1924, was the year in which smuggling was at its height, and during the whole year our sales decreased to the extent of 21 per cent, approximately, and we attribute that decrease to the fact that smuggling was carried on on such an elaborate and extensive scale.

"'The Preventative Service apparently was not functioning, at least we could see no evidence of it.'

"Mr. M. Jacobs, of the Union Overall Co., Montreal: 'They (the Rock Island smugglers) are doing a business of a million dollars a year, with nobody to check them up, so they have a pretty free hand. Noing a business of a milli.n dollars a year with nobody to check them up. Nobody could run a business like that.

"'I should judge that about 25 per cent. of the goods sold here in Canada are brought in from that particular point . . .

"'There is no question that the goods are coming in, smuggled in, and they are sold under value and they cover the whole Dominion of Canada. . . .

"'I think we could operate easily if this thing was stopped, and let them come out in the open and fight with the rest of us. I think we could increase our business from 25 to 40 per cent.'

Smugglers Close Mills.

"Mr. A. C. Dawson, Canadian Cottons, Ltd., Montreal: 'I feel certain that were it not for the goods that have been smuggled into Canada during the last three years these five mills would have been running to capacity instead of being compelled to run, during that period, at 71 per cent. of the possible. . . .

"'During the three years referred to there were more than three million dollars lost by our operatives in wages. . . .

"'These smuggling operations have become so extended in recent months that certain manufacturers, not being longer able to stand this unfair competition have been compelled to close their factories, and instead of buying goods made in Canadian mills are buying goods from firms supposed to be smugglers, and goods which are supposed to be prison-made.'

"I ask the workers of Canada, and especially the unemployed of Canada, to remember that the unfortunate condition of many of them is directly due to the maladministration of the laws of this country by the late Government of Canada.

"Mr. Charles K. Purkus, manager of Caulfeild Burns & Gibson, Limited, Toronto: 'As far as dressing gowns and bathrobes are concerned, we have estimated that we are making only 25 per cent. of what we should normally be making, through this condition at Rock Island.'

Whole Trade Menaced

"At a meeting of the Wholesale Dry Goods Association of Canada held at Toronto on April 6, 1926, it was resolved: "That in the opinion of this association the domestic trade of the Dominion is seriously menaced by the wholesale smuggling which is going on; that the revenues of the country are being depleted by the evasion of duty on these smuggled goods to an extent which has necessitated additional taxes now becoming more than burdensome upon all classes of the community.'

"Richard E. Oaks, maker of women's cloaks, suits, anao dresses, Toronto:

"'The consequence is that for the last three or four years the ordinary women's ready-to-wear business, as far as the manufacturers are concerned, has become almost bankrupt. Their capital is being gradually wiped out.

"'It appears to us, and I speak now for the organization, that these evils could be overcome to a very great extent, first, by employing honest officials.

"'We had hoped when the amendments to the Customs Act went through last year that there would be a stop, and I think there was for a time, to excessive smuggling, but we feel today that it is just as bad as ever.

U.S. Stolen Goods Sold in Canada

"Mr. P. R. Watson, Manager of Grout's Limited, St. Catharines, testified, referring to the smuggling of silks:

"'It is our contention that at least 90 per cent. of the goods stolen in the United States comes by the smuggling route.

"'I would say as a conservative estimate of the amount of goods that come into Canada by the smuggled route, or the undervalued route, or the various phases I have tried to mention, totals between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 — a very conservative estimate.

"'We (the silk industry) employ about 2,250 employees, and if we could do away with the smuggling and the other phases of it, I am sure we could increase that by 100 per cent. today. Not only could we do that, but we are willing to do it.'

"John Cowling of Roessel & Company, Montreal:

"'I really and honestly dread to think what would have happened to the silk trade during the years 1922, 1923 and 1924, if our cause had not been championed the way it has been by the Commercial Protective Association.

"'The thing went on in 1923, and grew worse in 1924. I recomemnded to our concern that they get out of business, because we could not make it go—it was impossible to import goods and sell them at a profit.

Jewelers Hard Hit

"J. A. Caron of Caron Bros., jewelry manufacturers, Montreal:

"'The extent to which the business has been affected, naturally, is evry hard to say definitely, but our estimate is that the jewelry business has been affected in the last three or four years to the extent of one-third. We consider that the commercial end of smuggling has increased very greatly in recent years.'

"But now I am going to come to the verdict of the House of Commons. Again I emphasize the fact that the House of Commons was not a prejudiced jury—counting the Conservative members prejudiced if you like. Certainly the Progressive members were not prejudiced against the Government. It is only the truth, which I think all of them would agree to in the way I put it, that their leaning was in favor of the Government. Some of them were indeed about as strong supporters of the Government as any Liberal elected. A series of amendments was proposed. The Government fought desperately to avoid a direct decision; they struggled for days to lure their Progressive friends into blind alleys and to get them to vote for something which would have wiped completely out the Stevens amendment censuring the Government. In all these arts they failed Even men friendly disposed to the Government could not face their constituents if they refused to censure the Administration.

Entire Government Censured

"When all the amendments had been debated and all the arguments had been heard the verdict of the House of Commons, a House of Commons in which Liberals, Progressives and Independents together togeher numbered 12 more than the Conservatives—this House of Commons censured the Administration by a majority of 10. This House of Commons by a majority of 10 declared that the Prime Minister had known of the evils of the Customs Department and that having such knowledge his refusal to remedy the evil was aboslutely incapable of defence. This House of Commons by a majority of 10 censured not onlly the past Minister of Customs but the then Minister of Customs and the entire Government for malfeasance of office.

"I ask you the people of Ottawa, and through you I ask the people of Canada, do you think that a Government with those hundred of pages of evidence staring them in the face do you think a Government buried under the revelations which that evidence contains, do you think a Government censured by a Parliament where the majority were its friends, do you think such a Government shrould be exonerated by the people of Canada? I ask you again: Do you believe a Government responsible for the loss of millions of money of the Canadian people, responsible for frauds unnumbered, responsible for the wrecking of the livelihood of thousands of our workers by the competition of smuggled goods, responsible, in a word, for the utter collapse of a great department of State—do you think such a Government should now get a certificate of character and be declared by the electors of Canada to be the kind of Government the people want?

"Voices come to us from all over this land; voices of men of all parties and all creeds; voices from the clear-thinking minds of the women of our country, declaring that this kind of administration is not fit for the Dominion of Canada. I have in my possession letters from lifelong Liberals, declaring that in the presence of the scandals of the Customs Department, everything in the past pales into insignificance, and that the public life of Canada must be vindicated and the good name of Canada restored.

"Think of the effect throughout this Dominion; think of the effect on the name of Canada throughout the world, if after the revelations of incompetence, dishonesty and official collusion with fraud, the people of our country declare that such a Government is the Government they want. The late Ministers of Mr. Mackenzie King, and Mr. Mackenzie King himself, defeated by the people; defeated by the House of Commons, censured by the representatives of the nation; these men surely have no title to be restored to office now. The verdict of the House of Commons will be the verdict of the nation multiplied in power, and notice will be given that the people of this Dominion expect the trustees of this country to be loyal to their trust. Surely there is no one who wants it to be known to his friends, his family or his children, that he gave a vote in a great crisis of his country to excuse neglect of high duties; to forgive the violation of trust; to condone the most distressing revelations of wrong in the whole history of our nation.

Attempt to Change Issues.

"Everybody knows the people will give no such verdict. No one understands that better than Mr. Mackenzie King himself; that is why he seeks desperately for some other issue to engage the people's minds. It is only natural that he would come to the conclusion that any issue in the world would be better for him than the issue raised by the Customs Committee. Not unnaturally he likes a constitutional issue, and to-day he struggles to convince his Liberal followers that some great constitutional issue has arisen and that the people do not need to think about the Customs scandal any more. The name of His Majesty's representative is dragged into the arena—something never done before in the history of elections in Canada. The conduct of His Majesty's representative was challenged flatly by Mr. Mackenzie King on the floor of Parliament. From this challenge his party now seeks to escape, and from that challenge I think Mr. Mackenzie King himself would now like to escape. Nothing could be worse for Canada than to impeach the conduct of the representative of the throne, and bring the great and revered link of empire into the turmoil of political strife. Nothing could be more indefensible; nothing indeed more censurable than that such a step should be taken in the presence of the admitted truth that the representative of his Majesty acted with scrupulous honesty.

No Constitutional Issue.

"This fact everybody admits. As a matter of truth, there is no constitutional issue. Are there any people in Canada really of opinion that the late Government or any Government at any time was entitled to dissolve a Parliament while a vote of censure was under review? Some one says that advice to dissolve Parliament has not been refused in England by His Majesty the King in the space of one hundred years. What I would like to say is—has any Government in the space of one hundred years in England or in any of the British Dominions ever asked for dissolution of Parliament while a vote of censure was under debate? I give the answer myself. It can be definitely stated that never within a century, never in the history of Parliamentary Government as we have it to-day, has any Prime Minister ever demeaned himself to ever ask for dissolution while a vote of censure on his own Government was under debate.

"In the present case that happened. For some days the motion to adopt the report of the Stevens committee was before the House; an amendment moved by Mr. Stevens was under discussion. The Government sought by supporting a subamendment of one of its friends, to get that sub-amendments adopted and thereby prevent the House from voting on the Stevens amendment of censure. The Government failed in its attempt. Its advice to the House to accept that sub-amendment was rejected by a majority of two; the same night the advice of the same Government was rejected again. A third time its advice was rejected and after those three reverses Ministers clearly saw that when the vote of censure itself would come up the days of the administration would be numbered.

Attempt to Change Jury.

"It then decided to change the jury. It did not like to be defeated; so the Prime Minister said to his Excellency: 'This jury must disappear; this Parliament must be dissolved.' The effect of that advice was simply this: 'If Parliament shows signs of going against me, even if that Parliament was elected on my own appeal, that Parliament must not live.' If such advice must always be accepted, then no Parliament could ever censure a Minister. If such advice must always be accepted then the supremacy of Parliament would be over and the Prime Minister would be supreme himself.

"In the last 100 years in England there have been thirty-four administrations. Of these administrations nineteen resigned, they advising dissolution simply because they could not command a majority in Parliament. Such is the course the late Prime Minister should have taken. During the same period there have taken place twenty-five dissolutions followed by general elections. Of those twenty-five not less than thirteen were granted to Governments which came into office since the previous general elections, just as did the Government of which I have the honor to be the head. Disraeli, in 1869, made it absolutely clear, as have other Prime Ministers many a time, that a Government so coming into office has the right of dissolution. But even a Government coming into office after a general election held under the auspices of another, even such a Government would not have any right of dissolution in the midst of a debate on a vote of censure. To demand such a right is not to plead for responsible government; it is to plead for irresponsible government; to demand such a right is not to uphold our Parliamentary institutions—it is really to stifle those institutions; to demand such a right is not to plead the cause of Parliament; it is in effect to choke and strangle Parliament and prevent Parliament from expressing its will.

UNCLE WIGGILY
Today's Bedtime Story
By Howard R. Garis

UNCLE WIGGILY AND THE RASPBERRIES.

Copyright, 1926, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

(By Howard R. Garis.)

Once upon a time, early in the morning, when the dew was on the grass and the sun was just a-dawning, Uncle Wiggily hopped out of his hollow stump bungalow and sang this song:

"Oh, raspberries red and raspberries black,
Will make a wonderful pie.
So ho for the meadow, and ho for the woods,
As over the fields I fly!"

Well, the bunny rabbit gentleman didn't exactly fly over the fields, not being a bird, but he started to hop very fast, dangling a basket on his paw. Down the lane he skipped, where Mrs. Moo Cow was eating green grass which she turned into white milk, and then, all of a sudden, a voice asked:

"Where are you going?"

"I am going after raspberries. Do you want to come, Mrs. Moo Cow?" inquired Uncle Wiggily.

"I didn't speak," said Mrs. Moo Cow, chewing her cud. "It was this little girl sitting on the stump near me," and she moved aside until Uncle Wiggily saw Nannie Wagtail, the goat child.

"All right, come along," invited the bunny.

"Oh, was that you bleating, Nannie?" the rabbit wanted to know.

"Yes, Uncle Wiggily," replied Nannie. "And I would like to come raspberrying with you."

"Do you know raspberries whe you see them growing on bushes, Nannie, my dear?" asked Mr. Longears.

"Why, yes, of course," bleated the goat girl, looking over her shoulder to make sure the bear wasn't slithering up toward her. Nannie was always nervous about bears.

"All right, come along!" kindly invited the bunny uncle. "But don't pick up black and red berries for raspberries, as Peetie Bow Wow did in mistake for blackberries yesterday."

"Oh, I heard about that!" laughed Nannie, carefully looking under a flat stone to make sure no pinching crab was there. Nannie was very nervous about crabs. "But it was funny how the Fuzzy Fox bit on Peetie's black stones, thinking they were berries, wasn't it, Uncle Wiggily?" inquired Nannie.

"Yes," said Mr. Longears, "it was. But I hope no Fox bothers us today. Now hop along with me."

Soon the two were in the field where grew the red and black berries, for there are two sorts, you know; the red ones being of a very delicate flavor and most delicious, if you ask me. Or even if you don't ask me, for that matter.

Uncle Wiggily was on the far side of the field, filling his basket with raspberries, and Nannie Wagtail was on the other side of the field, behind a bush, filling her basket, the rabbit gentleman hoped, when, all of a sudden he heard Nannie bleat:

"Oh, come and get me! Come an get me!"

"What's the matter? Who has you?" shouted Mr. Longears dropping his basket and spilling his berries as he leaped toward Nannie, whose horns he could just see over the top of the bush.

"Come and get me! Oh! Oh! Come and get me!" bleated the goa t girl.

"But what's the matter? Who has you? I see no one!"said Uucle Wiggily, hopping faster than ever.

"It's a big bear!" sobbed Nannie. "He's got hold of my dress from behind and I can't turn around to give him berries to make him let me go, and I can't pull his whiskers or nothing! Oh! Oh! Oh!"

"Stop screaming! Nothing has hold of you!" laughed Uncle Wiggily, for he was now quite close and could see no bear.

"Somebody has hold of my dress behind! I can feel them pulling it, I tell you!" bleated Nannie.

"Nonsense" shouted Uncle Wiggily—langhing harder than ever. "Your dress is caught on some of the thorns of the raspberry bush; that's all. Wait, I'll loosen it for you," and he did, and there wasn't any bear at all, of course!

"Well, it felt just like a bear's cla ws," said Nannie, a little ashamed of herself. Then she helped Uncle Wiggily pick up his spilled berries and she stayed near him until she had picked her basket full, and Nurse Jane made another wonderful pie.

So this teaches us not to be nervous when we hear a trolley car coming, and if the jitney bus will let the little puppy dog ride around the block for two wags of his tail, I'll tell you next about Uncle Wiggily and the straw berries.

LLOYD GEORGE IN PEACE TALK

Says Two Essentials Ar Arbitration and Disarmament.

ORGANIZE JUSTICE.

LONDON, July 20 (Canadian Press). — The supreme task of the generation now arising is to achieve the substitution of organized violence, said former Premier Lloyd George George in addressing the seventh world convention of Christion Endeavor in the Crystal Palace to-day.

"We old fellows," he said, "were brought up in a world that regarded armaments, with occasional wars, as part of the grim essentials of human civilization. The most horrible, the most devastating and greatest wars still have yet to come, unless youth teras that idea from the heart of civilization."

Lloyd George said similar eradication should take place in industrial life. Strikes and lockouts were all part of the same relic of barbarism. There ought to be, he said, some means of ensuring justice between nations and classes. The two essentials of peace were arbitration on all issues, and disarmament.

YOUR HEALTH

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D.,
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

BAD HEALTH HABITS BRING CONSUMPTION.

It is gratifying to learn that at least one serious disease is on the decline. When I began to teach public health, tuberculosis was the chief cause of death in the United States. It is now exceeded by several ailments.

Figures are always dry things, but they are so important and startling that I want you to look at them a moment.

Last year 177,000 persons died of heart diseases in the United States. Pneumonia of the various types claimed 97,000. Brain, hemorrhages and softening took 92,000 victims. Of cancer and other malignant tumors 91,000 died. All forms of tuberculosis caused 90,000 to die.

The automobile alone killed 25,000 persons last year, and the sum total of all accidental deaths was in excess of the losses from tuberculosis. But, even though the figures show the condition to be less fatal than it was, it must be admitted it continues to be a very serious disease. Ninety thousand deaths per year is a dreadful toll.

The time of life most likely to have the seeds of tuberculosis implanted is early childhood. It is a dreadful calamity to be born into a home where tuberculosis is present. If it is a careless or uncleanly home, infection is almost certain. The baby creeps over a germ-smeared floor and becomes inoculated in consequence. Sudden death from peritonitis or meningitis may be the penalty. The real cause of death, tuberculosis, may not be suspected.

Perhaps the glands of the body become seeded with these dread germs. Then when stress or acute illness comes, the germs may become active and do their deadly work.

Babies and young children must be kept away from infected households. Milk must come from approved sources. No matter what may happen to the parents, it is possible to save the child by taking him away from the contaminated premises. Better still, the infected parent is taken to a place where well-directed treatment will bring about recovery.

You must never neglect the symptoms of disease in a child. If he gets sick, make sure he has a chance for complete recovery. Neglected measles, scarlet fever, whooping cough, influenza, etc., may prepare the way for an infection with tuberculosis. The resistance is lowered and the evil germs have a chance to enter the body.

Overwork and worry, overplay, dissipation—all these prepare the soil for tuberculosis. It is unwise to get into a "run-down" condition. No matter whether it is an adult or a child, there is always a chance that excessive fatigue may lower the resistance and prepare the way for the disease.

Working in dust is bad for the person who is predisposed to tuberculosis. Cleanliness of air, as well as floor and furniture of the work room, cannot be overlooked in your attempt to head off this ailment. This is true at all ages.

If you half try you can be cured of tuberculosis in the early stages. But you must make a business of getting well. You cannot stay up late nights and neglect yourself generally without paying for it. If you will carry out instructions in a few matters, you will be all well in a few months.

One of the mistaken ideas is that a change of climate is essential to recovery. Nothing could be further from the truth. Any climate is a good climate for this disease.

HIS JOB.

VISITOR: Who is the responsible man in this firm?

OFFICE BOY: I don't know, but I'm sure he whop always gets the blame.—Answers.

Blood impurities cause rash, pimples and sallowness. The regular use of ENO brings a clear and healthy skin, because ENO assists nature to expel impurities and poisons. For a good complexion try a dash of ENO each morning in a glass of water.

GOOD NIGHT STORIES

DOTTY MEETS A MERRY PAIR OF FEATHERED FOLK.

"Now I'd just like to know why that bird keeps flying out to that old bridge," Dotty mused. She sat down on the bank of the river and watched the steel-blue bird. "Surely, he isn't a water bird. I'll just bet my hat he,—"

"Wait - a - second, wait - a - second!" laughed a happy voice and a merry little elfin hopped down beside Dotty. "Goodness, you might have lost your new hat if I hadn't been here to stop that wish."

"Oh, Happy Giggles, you dear!" Dotty exclaimed, shaking the little Make - believe elfin's hand. "I'm glad you were in time to save my new hat. Who is that pretty bird? I don't think I've ever seen a bird just like him before. Isn't he pretty?"

"He certainly is," chuckled Happy Giggles and he blew three times on his magic feather.

The bird, that was perched on the top rail of the bridge turned his pretty head and seeing the elfin and his companion, he flew down beside them.

His steel-blue suit and chestnut-brown and buff vest glistened in the sunlight. Near the end of each tail feather he also sported his white spots that looked like great white buttons.

"Well, well, if it isn't Happy Giggles," he chirped merrily extending his claw to the elfin. "And who's your friend?"

"This is Dotty," replied the elfin. "She was just wondering who you are."

"Goodness me," chuckled the bird. "Who Is That Pretty Bird?"

"I thought every one knew a Barn Swallow when they saw one. Why, I've lived in your Daddy's big barn."

"Isn't that fine," said Dotty shaking the extended claw. "I'm glad to hear that. Are you living there now?"

"Not now," replied Mr. Barn Swallow. "The Lady grew tired of that home, so we moved over in the arch of that bridge. Ever seen my lovely mate?"

Dotty shook her head.

"Then come along and see her," and he flew back to the arch of the bridge. Happy Giggles and Dotty close beside him.

There on a bracket-like nest fashioned of clay and straw sat a dear little Lady Bird. She was a wee bit smaller than her mate and a great deal paler in shade of dress, but just as dear and sweet as she could be. She greeted her guests with a merry chirp and moved off her pretty next so they could peek in at her treasures, five little white eggs spotted with brown and lilac.

"Won't be long now until I'll bring them over to see you," she chirped crawling back on the nest and fluffing her feathers over the eggs. "Daddy, did you bring me a bug?"

Daddy Barn Swallow had forgotten, so off he flew through the air, soon returning with a nice, fat bug.

Dotty and Happy Giggles stayed and talked until Dotty's Mama called her into lunch.

TWO MEN BURNED.

Chemicals Ignite. Two Women Meet with Mishap. Pipe Ignites Gas.

TORONTO, July 21. — W. Gardner, 62 Boultbee Avenue, and F. Baggs, 120 Broadview Avenue, both employed at a garage on Duchess Street, were badly burned about the hands, face and body yesterday when some vulcanizing chemicals ignited while they were at work repairing auto tires . Both men were removed to St. Michael's Hospital. Gardner's condition is regarded as the most serious. Damage to the building is estimated at $500, with a loss of $1,000 to the contents. A number of motor cars which were in the structure at the time, were removed without mishap.

Gardner and Baggs do all the repair work for the company. They were at work on several tires when without warning, the chemicals they were using suddenly burst into flames in their faces. They fell back blinded momentarily. The flames ignited the woodwork, and rapidly spread to the motor cars. Employees rushed to the assistance of the injured men, and hurried them to the hospital in a taxicab. Over a hundred cabs were removed from the burning building.

The blaze was soon under control All the damage was confined to the repair room. Repair machinery was damaged and a large amount of rubber was consumed.

Women Burned.

Mrs. Bolger, 60 Humberside Avenue, had her arms and face scorched yesterday when a basin of gasoline which she was using to clean a dress, became ignited from a dropped spark from her father's pipe. He was sitting beside her smoking at the time. Her mother, Mrs. Patrick Foley, was slightly burned about the hands in helping to extinguish the flames. Damage to the extent of $35 was done. Firemen rendered first aid to the two women.

Efforts to unionize automobile salesmen in Mexico have caused sales to drop more than one-half of those of last year.

HER OWN WAY by a Girl of Today

LOVE IS A JEALOUS GOD.

Love, which is a very jealous little god, became cold and deaf to her beckoning. She found that the man who used to talk of love to her now talked only of business.

Awakening from her dream, she saw the whole sordid thing as it really was. Life suddenly became unbearable. She knew that she would never get anything but stone if she asked for bread; and so she took her starved heart out of this world—it mattered not where.

The paper rustled in my hands. I started across the room to lay it upon the top of the pile from which I had picked it up when I saw the account of a shooting affray just outside a notorious gambling house.

Two or three paragraphs were given up to this story, which involved the murder of a policeman, and then at the end, as though it were not of much account, were these lines:

"When the police got into the room and were rounding up the inmates and gambling paraphernalia they came upon the body of a man in an alcove. It was evidently because of this murder that an emergency call had been turned in by someone. There was only one table in this room, and it was evident that the man had been killed in a quarrel over cards some time before. Just why the other had not made their get-away was incomprehensible.

"The dead man was quite handsome and was quickly identified as a young professional dancer who had cut quite a swathe of late at different gambling houses. His name was Barry Cornwall."

My hands that were holding the paper fell at my sides. I felt myself reeling. I caught hold of the desk to steady myself. Again I read the story. Again my heart grew cold and hot as the blood rushed from it to my brain and back again.

Things do happen. The sinner and the righteous one are rewarded according to their desserts.

I said to myself, "However much we work and plan and think that by our own unaided efforts we will carry out that plan, we always come to a place where we know that right does prevail.

There was no use of getting that fifty thousand dollars now.

Barry Cornwall was dead. He had gone before another judge from whose decision there was no further appeal.

My thoughts raced to the two young women, one of them very rich and one of them very poor, who would be vitally interested in this story that probably some reporter had written and forgotten as soon as he had turned it in at the copy desk.

LOVE LETTERS THAT MADE HISTORY

(By Joseph Kaye.)

GENERAL ROBERT E. LEE AND MARY PARK CUSTIS.

Not a love letter is this, in the sense of burning and passionate phrases. But the letter of a man whose heart is filled with love at all times, who needs no sudden emotion to kindle a new spurt of flame for the woman who fills his life, and the home circle she has created for him.

This letter was written by General Lee, commander-in-chief of the Confederate drmies, to his wife, who was Mary Parke Custis, great granddaughter of Martha Washington.

". . . You do not know how much I have missed you and the dear children, my dear Mary. To be alone in a crowd is very solitary. In the woods I feel sympathy for the trees and the birds in whose company I take delight, but experience no pleasures in a strange crowd.

I hope you are well and will continue so, and I must again urge you to be very prudent and careful of those children. If I could only get a squeeze at that little fellow turning up his mouth to 'keese baba!' You must not let him run wild in my absence and you will have to exercise firm authority over all of them. This will not require severity or even strictness, out constant attention and an unwavering course. Mildness and forbearance will strengthen their affection for you, while it will maintain your control over them."

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite Secretary Shawnee Okla. Board of Commerce.

THAT if you want to keep shelf-warmers moving out, advertising is your opportunity.

THAT if you want to keep out mail order competition, advertise!

THAT continuous advertising will make your merchandise stand out in such an attractive manner that it will bring buyers your way.

THAT attractive advertising is the link between you and the public: it is the means of making the necessary class contact.

THAT the amount of business you do is in a great way up to you. Quality, well advertised, means better business.

THAT business concerns should make their fronts attractive as well as the interior.

The big results that come from continuous advertising depend in a great way upon the wording and manner of stating truths as to quality, coupled with pleasing service, well displayed stocks and well lighted stores.

YOUR JEWEL COLOR FLOWER

By Mildred Marshall

Copyright, McClure Syndicate.

Today the Lapis-lazuli is the talismanic gem. As a talisman it is best used as a cure for intermittent fever. According to the great physicians of ancient times malarial patients were made free of the disease by wearing lapis-lazuli on their left arms.

The lapis-lazuli promises happy and care-free lives for those whose birth anniversary this is. It is believed that melancholy or morbid thoughts are driven out by the presence of this stone. Those who wear the gem will never be distressed by groundless worries or vain regrets.

Pink is today's color. For an older woman it is said to bring social triumphs.

The pink rose is today's flower. It should bring the heart's desire to those who wear it.

People of the Philippines are now making alcohol from molasses instead of from nipa and cocoanut sap as before.

A French Frock Keeps Tabs on a Juvenile Style

BUTTERICK 6943

When Paris turns its attention to frocks for the young person who spends her Summer on Normandy beaches or on the sands of the Lido, it produces frocks of beautiful simplicity. Plaits, tabs, neat collars, the Summer sleeve with fulness at the wrist, a belt that starts at the side and runs across the back make a frock that is smart after a very French fashion. Paris uses shantung, light-weight linen in charming colors, light-weight flannel and wool crêpe for its cool Summer and sends the same style to America in cotton prints. The silk-and-cotton broadcloths and ginghams make useful dresses and the rayon alpacas and printed sateens are new.

HOROSCOPE

"The Stars Incline, but do not Compel"

WEDNESDAY JULY 21 1926.

Astrologers interpret the planetary aspects for today as of only moderate importance in their influence on human destiny.

There is read a forecast of unusual danger from fires, which may be extraordinarily numerous and destructive.

Forests should be especially safeguarded this time when great conflagurations are prognosticated.

Under this rule of the stars it is well to be cautious in handling tools, as steel may be peculiarly dangerous.

The Moon today is in a sign making for restlessness and nervous excitement.

There is more need of rest and recreation this summer than is commonly the case, the seers explain, for great events are forming and stupendous world experiences are to be recorded.

This should be a favorable day for orators, writtrs and educators, who should be stimulated to study and to do difficult research work.

Summer sessions at universities are especially well directed by the stars and astrologers prophesy that lectures on world problems are to be of far-reaching benefit.

The death of a famous college head is foretold and he will be succeeded by a very young man.

All the signs continue to foreshadow the domination of the young, who necessarily must direct world affairs in the new era.

Women are to assume a spiritual leadership and to hold before the people noble ideals for which they may be called upon to make real sacrifices.

Saturn today is in a benefic aspect which is promising to all who are interested in tilling the soil. Farmers should benefit.

Persons whose birthdate it is should pass a quiet year in which they should abstain from dissensions of every sort.

Children born on this day should have great courage and initiative.

These subjects of Cancer and Leo, who are on the cusp are likely to have eventful careers.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

(By Mildred Marshall.)

Facts about your name, its history; its meaning; whence it was derived; its significance; your lucky day, and lucky jewel.

EVA.

The "mother of all living" received from Adam a name signifying life. He gave her a name of simple dignity and beauty—Eve. In the original, it sounded like Chevva, as it began with a rough aspirate. It was not copied by any of her daughters for a long time and when the first Alexandrian Jews came upon it in translation, they made it Zoe, meaning life, in order to show the connection of the name with the prophecy, but afterward, in the course of the narrative, they merely called it Heva or Eve, through which we learned to know it as Eve.

The Eva of Ireland and Scotland and the Aveline and Eveline of the Normans were probably only imitations of the old Keltic name Aoiffe. Eve and Eva have been used a great deal in England, many of the old parish registers recording the christening of twins as Adam and Eve. The notion of securing a child's life that has spread the use of Adam among the Teutonic races has had the same effect upon his wife, so that Eva is a common feminine name in Germany. All of Scandanavia has adopted Eva, but Russia calls her Evva or Jevva. France never fancied its simplicity, nor have Italy or Spain given it much attention.

Coral, that most natural of precious stones, is Eva's talismanic gem. It promises her protection from evil and immunity from disease, warning of approaching illness by losing its ruddy color. Thursday is her lucky day and 2 her lucky number.

Milton in "Paradise Lost" pays tribute to the mother of the race through Adam's description of Eve:

"On she came
Led by her heavenly Maker, though unseen,
And guided by His voice; nor uninformed
Of nuptial sanctity, and marriage rites;
Grace was in all her steps, Heaven in her eye,
In every gesture dignity and love."

Brame drove in the Skeeter's only run with a double in the second inning. Smart fielding featured the game.

CINCINNATI REDS EVEN UP SERIES

Donohue's Single and Christensen's Fumble Give Win in Ninth.

GIANTS SMOTHERED.

NEW YORK July 21 (Canadian Press)—A single by Donohue and Jacobson's fumble of Christensen's swat in the ninth inning with two out gave the Cincinnati Reds a 5 to 4 victory over Brooklyn yesterday. The league leaders thus made it an even break with the Brooklyns on the four game series. It was hot at Cincinnati yesterday and Luque who started for Brooklyn had to quit after he had doubled and scored two sacrifices.

At Chicago the New York Giants were snowed under an avalanche of hits from the willows of the Cubs and lost a 16-2 game. Jones pitched steadily for the home team while four Giants struggled unavailingly on the New York mound. Howard Freigau, Cub third baseman, was suspended for three days for a run-in with an umpire.

Pittsburgh hit opportunely in front of its bleachers yesterday and took the final game of the series from Boston 8 to 5. While the Pirates were allowed nine hits by Benton and Wertz, Kremer was nicked for thirteen but his Boston men could not convert.

Eddie Moore, Pirate seond sacker, was turned over to Boston by waiver yesterday.

GAME WAS STOPPED AT THIRD INNING

Thunder Storm Delayed the Start of Program of People's League Social Evening.

PETHERICK'S CORNERS, July 21.—The Zion People's League held a very successful social evening on Mr. David Brunton's lawn Monday evening. A short thunder shower early in the evening delayed proceedings and made the crowd somewhat smaller than was expected. After the rain was over, however, the ice cream and soft drink booth was opened and everybody proceeded to enjoy themselves. A contest for the best looking married lady, single lady, married man, and single man, proved quite popular.

The first game of the softball playoffs ended at the third inning on account of darkness caused by the storm, with the Reds leading the Khaki by 15 runs to 12. The Reds were assisted by the Kerr brothers, having only six men available while the Khaki had only eight. Both sides turned in some good hitting and some very poor fielding. The Khaki had two double plays to their credit. An Ingram to L. Anderson to Barnum combination resulted in a double killing in the first, while in the third Don Watson, Juvenile left-fielded provided the sensation. He made a beautiful running catch of G. Kerr's fly to left to start the inning. The side batted around and with Kerr up again the same fly was reproduced and was again caught after a hard run. Don raced to second, doubling the running to third to end the inning. The teams:

Red.—E. Fairman, c; G. Kerr, p; G. Meiklejohn, 1b; R. McKeown, 2b; A. Watson, 3b; F. Fry, J. Milne and D. Kerr, outfielders.

Umpires.—Thos. Fry and Everett Fairman.

Albert Gifford had the misfortune to sustain a badly sprained ankle while fielding a hit to right field. He is one of the heaviest natural batters in the Khaki line-up, and his loss will be felt very much.

Steel from the United States will be used in the $500,000 five-story Government building at Cali, Colombia.

BROWNS MAKE AN EVEN BREAK

Win Final From Yankees By 7-6 Score at New York.

RUTH'S 28TH HOMER.

NEW YORK, July 21 (Canadian Press)—The St. Louis Browns evened up their four-game series with New York yesterday, winning the final by 7 to 6. The Yankees rallied strongly in the ninth against Ernie Wingard who had relieved Ballou but the Browns' twirler tightened up in time to heck the attack. Babe Ruth hung up his 28th home run of the year in the third inning with the bases empty. Catcher Collins had a freak day with three passes and a sacrifice fly, and no official times at bat.

Morrell had a bad sixth inning at Washington yesterday, allowing Cleveland six hits, inluding two triples, one with the bases filled, and the Indians scored seven runs, defeating Washington 9-2. Uchrinsko, Pennsylvania sand lotter, recently signed by the Nationals, pitched the final three innings without giving up a hit.

The pennant hopes of the Philadelphia Athletics received a hard jolt when the Detroit Tigers took both games of a double header, 5 to 0, and 8 to 3.

Rip Collins was never in trouble in the first game, allowing but 5 hits. Gibson was effective in the second until he had a spell of wildness and was relieved in the sixth. Manush hit a homer in the fourth inning of the second contest.

Chicago romped away with the last game of the series with the Red Sox at Boston yesterday, 16 to 2. Wildness on the part of the four Boston pithers with particularly loose work by Ruffing, Lundgren and Stokes in the early innings, was responsible for Chicago's victory.

YE GOLFERS IN HAWAII KEEP EYES ON LAVA

HILO, Hawaii, July 21.—Volcano ice freaks, such as lava tree moulds, extinct lava fountains, colored sulphur banks, and curious formations compose a series of hazards on a golf course at the boundaries of Hawaii National Park.

The course, which is near the crater of Kilauea volcano, is being improved to meet the demands of an increase in the number of golfing visitors to the park.

When completed, the casual golfer will be able to combine his play with a scenic trip in one of the most interesting parts of Hawaii. Following the ball will lead him through part of the famous koa forest, where wood was obtained by the Hawaiians in days gone by for the manufacture of ukuleles and guitars.

Tree moulds, formed by lava cooling around the trunks of trees ages ago, will guard the approach to the fourth hole, while the second hole will be guarded by a hedge of flowering ohia trees. The sixth hole, sportiest of the course, will be situated on a mound-shaped lava "bubble" hidden in the koa forest.

SHOES TOO COSTLY.

FARGO, N. D., July 21. — A month's wages in Germany couldn't buy him a pair of shoes, so Walter F. Kreiselmaier came to America. He used to manage an 800-acre livestock farm in Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Fred. W. Tanner and three little daughters of Toronto were guests of relatives in the village last week.

Diamond Disputes Decided

By Billy Evans

Batsman drives the ball directly back at the pitcher. It hits the pitching rubber and, without any play being made on it, bounds back over the foul line, between home and first. Is it fair or foul?

* * *

This is a very unusual play, yet I have had it happen twice during my career as a major league umpire, covering a period of 21 years.

If the ball strikes the rubber before a play is in any way made on it or before it comes into contact with the person of a fielder and then bounds over the foul line between home and first it is a FOUL BALL.

The rules state that a ball to be fair must pass first or third inside the bag over it or come into contact with it or finally settle on fair territory between home and first or home and third.

In this play the ball, because of the manner it bounded after striking the rubber, did none of these things, hence must be ruled a foul ball.

SECRETS OF STARS ON INSIDE BASEBALL

as told to Billy Evans

BY TY COBB.

World's Greatest Ball Player.

A study of the opposing pitcher is always beneficial to batting.

Pitchers have their own ideas as to what is the best ball to use against certain batters. If it is a curve, low and inside, you can rest assured a majority of the pitches will be of that nature.

If the pitcher is of the opinion that a change of pace is the best weapon to use against you, it is well to set yourself for that style, particularly if he happens to get you on the defensive.

Against a majority of the pitchers in the American League, I have a pretty good idea of what to expect in the way of curves, speed and a change of pace. That is helpful.

Certain catchers also have a set manner of working with different batters. I know one catcher who invariably goes down the line with me.

If he starts with a fast ball, the next one is certain to be a curve and then a slow one. If the first one is a curve, the second pitch will be a fast one, followed by the slow ball. He always reserves that for last.

Being practically sure of such a style of pitching with said catcher working, I can take a stance that will be of the greatest help to me in combating the pitcher's efforts to fool me.

Another great help to a batter is the making of an effort to hit through vacated territory. This spot should be the greatest open space offered on the infield. It is a test of place hitting.

Thus, with a runner on first base and the guardian of that bag holding him on by playing close to the sack, the biggest open space in the infield is between first and second base. Try to hit through that spot.

When trying to hit to right through the open space made possible by the first baseman holding the runner on, hug the plate as closely as possible. This puts you in a better position.

On the hit and run play the opposition will often tell you by the action of its infield who is going to cover second with a runner on first. That knowledge is very helpful, since it gives you some idea of where to hit through.

When you have valuable pointers relative to the opposition's defense do not fail to profit thereby. In the same manner, when you get the pitcher in the hole, don't let him get out of it if possible.

BOYS' CAMP OUTING.

Troop of Boy Scouts Go On Annual Camp Outing.

MILLBROOK, July 21.— The troop of Boy Scouts left on Saturday for its annual camp outing, Scoutmaster A. H. Barnes, being in charge. Hall's Landing, Rice Lake, is the place chosen this year, Barnard's Landing having been the favorite other seasons. About twenty boys composed the party on Saturday. Assistant Scoutmaster Rev. John Riddle, will be at the camp during the week. The boys are from St. Thomas Anglican, and Grace Presbyterian, churches.

Mr. Alf Brady, of Campbellford, R.O.P. Inspector, made an official visit last Friday to the farm of Mr. W. Fred Fallis, and tested his purebred, accredited herd of Holstein cattle. On the whole results were satisfactory, the list being:

Rauwerd Alice, 3.9; Lulu Alice, 3.4; Alice Rue Vale, 3.3; Alice Rue Rauwerd, 3.3; Alice Vale, 3.1; Alice Lulu Rauwerd, 3.3; Korndyke Merceda Alice, 4.0.

The record of performance test has to do with butter fat content only, and is not connected in any way with the tuberculin test applied when a fully accredited herd is the objective in view.

Some time ago Mr. Fallis' herd passed the three t.b. tests with a clean record, giving him a herd officially pronounced fully accredited.

A very pleasant social time was recently spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wilfrid Elson, Seventh Line, Cavan, when Mrs. Elson was hostess for six of her former classmates who had together taken their course in nursing at the Nichol's Hospital, Peterborough. Since graduation, the duties of their profession have separated the friends far and wide, and the opportunity for a reunion, under such happy auspices, was enjoyed to the full.

Appreciation of Mrs. Elson's hospitality was expressed with genuine feeling when the hour for breaking up the enjoyable gathering arrived.

Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Burnham and daughter Dorothy, were visitors in town on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Dawson were guests of friends in Bailieboro on Sunday.

PETERBORO MAN IS ELECTED DIRECTOR

Jack Patte Is On Directorate of the Canadian Fox Breeders' Association.

Jack Patte of Peterborough was elected to the Board of Directors of the Canadian Silver Fox Breeder's Association at the annual meeting held in Charlottetown recently when members from every part of the Dominion were present.

This association has had an almost phenomenal growth since its inception six years ago. In 1921 its membership totalled 109 while last years' membership was well over 3,1000.

The primary purpose of the association is to improve the breed and to advance the interests of the members and assist them in procuring a market for their products.

The association maintains an inspector whose entire time is given towards improving the standard of the foxes.

Advertising campaigns have been carried on in many European countries, as a result thousands of enquiries have been received asking for particulars about silver fox farming.

This year, it is said, promises to be the biggest year in the history of the association.

SUCCESSFUL PICNIC.

United Church Holds Annual Picnic in Maple Grove.

MOUNT JULIAN July 21.—Eden United Church held their annual picnic in Mr. John Booth's maple grove under a cloudless sky.

The ladies of the church served an excellent dinner and supper to a large crowd. A well filled stand was provided over by Mr. Will Church and Mr. Bruce Reid, who were kept very busy supplying the needs of the merry makers.

Mr. Clink and Mr. John Stewart kindly took charge of the grab-bag, which greatly amused the wee folks.

The bazaar held many pretty and useful articles which were quickly sold, and the committee wish to thank the many friends who so kindly donated.

The sports were in charge of the baseball club, who were ably assisted in the races by some of the visiting friends.

The pastor, Mr. Ogden, worked very faithfully to make the picnic a success, and together with the church friends welcomed the many visitors from Apsley, Burleigh Falls, Peterboro, Lakefield, Young's Point, and the summer campers near Mt. Julian, without whom the picnic would not be complete.

The proceeds for the day amounted to $159, which will be applied to the church funds.

The church is indebted to Mrs Mulligan, Mr. G. K. Fraser, Mrs. J. D. Church, Mrs. J. Blewett, Mrs. Graham and Mrs. McCallum of Burleigh Falls; Mrs Wm. Church of Peterborough; Mr. R. Charlton of Young's Point; Mr. William Thompson and Mr. Janson of Mount Julian; and Mrs. Sam Wilson and Mrs. Wm. McCauley of Haultain, Mrs. Jones of Toronto.

SERVICE HELD.

Forty Hour Services Celebrated in Lakefield Church.

LAKEFIELD, July 21.—The forty hour services were held in St. Paul's church last week. Visiting priests were Rev. J. J. O'Brien of Peterboro, Rev. J. V. MacAuley of Ennismore, Rev. Father Black, Rev. Father Guiry, Rev. P. J. Costello, Rev. Father McCarney, all of Peterboro, who were present at various services and assisted the parish priest, Rev. J. J. Garvey.

Thursday last was St. Swithin's Day and it passed without a drop of rain falling. There is an old legend to the effect that if rains falls on St. Swithin's Day (July 15th) it will rain for forty days. St. Swithin was a Bishop of Winchester, England and is the patron saint of that city.

Weather permitting the Citizen's Band will give an open air concert on the village square on Thursday evening.

The Sunday schools of the two United churches and of the Baptist church will hold their annual union excursion on Friday next to Wallaces Point per Steamer Stoney Lake.

M'COMB FAMILY HOLDS RE-UNION

200 Descendants Gather at Old Homestead To Hold Event.

The descendent of the late David McComb held a reunion on the old homestead, one mile east of Bonarlaw, now occupied by Mr. David McComb, a son, recently. This event will go down in history and will long be remembered by all who were present.

The late David McComb was a native of the county of Armagh, Ireland, and was born in the year 1808. In 1840 he sailed from Belfast for Canada. After residing in Kingston and Keledar for some time, in 1850 he moved to the old homestead where the reunion was held. The object of the celebration was to bring together representatives of the family in honor of the memory of this grand old forefather, who was one of the brave pioneers in this section. The example of Christian courage and steadfastness which his long and useful life taught may be remembered and cherished by the rising generation.

From early morning until noon cars began to assemble from the surrounding country until two hundred descendents from Brockville on the east, to Alberta and California on the west, had gathered. They were met by the genial host, who gave them a warm welcome to his home and the "old home," which was prettily decorated for the occasion. At noon all sat down to a sumptuous repast of salads, cake, sandwiches, ice cream, etc., to which everyone did full justice. The tables, which were set on the beautiful spacious lawn, were prettily decorated with bouquets of roses and wild flowers.

After the dinner, the president called the gathering to order and announced that a program of music, songs and dancing had been prepared.

It was the first reunion of this clan and there were brothers and sisters present who had not seen each other in forty years. Everyone joined in for one grand and glorious time and their anticipations were excelled. Reminiscences were quite the order. Stories were told of younger days and of the boyhood haunts, creating much interest and merriment. Many desired to make the outing an annual event, but as the members of this great family tree reside at such far distant points, it was decided not to hold a reunion next year.

Mrs. J. H. Rowe of 561 Bethune street, Peterboro, is a descendent, who with her husband and family attended the reunion.

ENJOYABLE EVENING SPENT AT COTTAGE

Friends of Bride Present Her With Many Fine Presents.

A shower took place on Wednesday evening, July 14, at the south end of Sandy Lake where Mr. and Mrs. Bert Esson have recently established a home in a pretty little cottage. About fifty friends and neighbors, mostly from School Section No. 8, Harvey, where Mrs. Esson has served efficiently as teacher for the past four years, assembled about dark on Wednesday evening at the cottage armed with presents and eats. A very enjoyable evening was passed as the friends sat around a big bonfire on the lake shore and listened to the old familiar songs on the Victrola. About eleven o'clock every one expressed their enjoyment of life by doing their duty, in no uncertain way, to the delicious things which the Harvey women so well know to prepare.

The evening was concluded by a hearty expression of appreciation of the presence of the bride in the community, and many kind wishes for a happy future. The bride and groom expressed their hospitality and genuine good nature in a very pleasing manner, and ... truly grateful for the sm... of friendship they r...

HELPFUL HINTS by GOLFING STARS

BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH GOLFERS MAGAZINE, CHICAGO

PHIL J. GAUDIN—CLUBS MUST FIT.

Clubs should be fitted to the golf player with as much care as a suit of clothes is fitted by a tailor. An ill-fitting dress suit is no more out of place than an ill-fitting setof clues One might rent the dress suit and consequently be able to return it. An ill-fitting set of clubs is an absolute bar to material improvement in one's game.

The professional or golf supply store should be able to fit the player with the proper clubs. In the beginning—this is important—the prospective player will be properly advised to buy one club at a time, beginning with a mashie, or perhaps a putter. With the mashie as a measuring tape, it is possible to add exactly the right clubs as fast as they are needed.

A difference of a half-inch in length of shaft or a half-ounce in weight is a very important matter in the choice of clubs; equally important with choosing clubs of the right lie to fit the player, or the right whippiness of shaft.

Time-honored procedure is that the first lessons are taken with the driver. Many professionals are breaking away from this idea.

BILLY EVANS Says

Pitching Wisdom.

I doubt if there is a smarter pitcher in the American League than Urban Shocker of the New York Yankees.

Shocker's pitching repertoire includes everything and he mixes the varied assortment up most deftly.

"Pitch to the small end of the bat," is Shocker's favorite bit of advice on how to succeed as a pitcher.

In other words, Shocker simply means pitch inside, make the batter hit the ball on the handle rather than at the end of the bat.

It is practically impossible to get distance to any ball that is pitched inside, to the small end of the bat.

* * *

Wait 'Em Out.

With the slowing down of the baseball, the importance of a good leadoff man becomes all the greater.

In the old days he was a player possessing the uncanny ability to wait out a pitcher, ultimately drawing a base on balls.

Such a player was not necessarily a good hitter, but usually he was fast and also was an adept at the bunting game.

In Max Bishop the Philadelphia Athletics have one of the best lead-off players in the big show.

The other day in a game with St. Louis he came within one ball of equaling the American League record of five bases on balls. I happened to be calling balls and strikes in that game.

After getting four passes he worked the count to three balls and two strikes on his fifth and final appearance at the plate, only to have me decide the pitch a strike.

* * *

Many Upsets.

Never in the history of baseball has the game experienced such upsets as have featured the play this year.

Take the case of the Philadelphia Athletics, generally picked to be a pennant-contender from the spring cry of "Play ball."

The Mackmen lost 10 of the first 14 games played, then started a winning spurt that brought their mark to the .500 point, 12 victories against as many defeats.

In figuring the Athletics a pennant-contender, the pitching ability of Rommel, Gray and Harriss was given much consideration.

Yet in the first 12 victories scored by Mack's team, his trio of star twirlers turned in only two wins.

* * *

Fatal Fault.

A weakness around second base, either upon the part of the player guarding that sack or the shortstop, is a fatal fault to pennant chances.

Every pennant-winning ball club in the history of the game has featured a snappy combination around the keystone sack.

Inexperience in big league ways is a big handicap to players holding down such positions. Both the New York and Detroit clubs of the American League have recruits playing the all-important positions.

No matter how great the ability of the player, one cannot expect him to step into the difficult positions of shortstop or second base and deliver in his first year.

While inexperience may handicap both clubs some this year, they are preparing for the future.

* * *

Hauser's Comeback.

The belief that First Baseman Joe Hauser will be able to play that position all season for the Athletics has done more to revive the spirits of the club after a bad start than any one other thing.

For a time it seemed as if Hauser would be fortunate if able to divide the work at first base with Jim Poole. At first he favored his injured leg but, since the opening of the season, has put it to every test, including the most dangerous form of the hook slide, with no ill effects.

Now that Hauser has recovered confidence in himself, he has started to hit and the club appears to have akene on the same optimistic angle.

The loss of a player, who can hit the ball like Joe Hauser, is a terrific handicap to a ball club with pennant hopes.

MOVIGRAPHS

HOLLYWOOD.—The technical miracle worker of the films, like the prover bial prophet, is not without honor save on his own homestead.

To-wit, Roy Pomeroy, the screen magician, who parted the Red Sea in De Mille's "Ten Commandments," and who refuses to be baffled by any photographic stunt or mechanical problem of the studio.

But Roy proved quite a flat tire when it came to fixing the plumbing—really a very simple job—in his own new home. He got the pipes mixed, so that his lawn was sprinkled with hot water while Roy shaved with cold. He called in an ordinary plumber to untangle the mess.

* * *

Sentiment outweighted cold business on Paramount's "Old Ironsides" location for an hour, with costs clicking along at 35,000 per day, when Director James Cruze delayed exploding a powder-charged ship to rescue a seal which had become a company pet, and which was playfully gyrating so close to the doomed vessel that the explosion might have killed it. This incident will perhaps balance criticisms which have been directed to movie makers for alleged cruelty to animals.

* * *

Eddie Cantor, who is now in our midst to picture "Kid Boots," got the first laugh from Hollywood when, in the presence of a greeting throng at the train station, he solemnly counted off three of his four children, introducing them by name.

Coming to the youngest, he hesitated, seemed bewildered, and said, "What's your name—I never can remember?"

"Natalie," piped up the well-coached baby, equally grave.

"That's right," added Eddie, "—four children and seven pieces of baggage: all right, Mr. Taxi, we're ready for Hollywood."

* * *

Wallace Beery is one of the few big movie boys who is always in the same character on and off the screen. At the moment he is being threatened with corporal punishment by half a dozen of his irate male contempories who are blessed with wives.

Beery saw to it that the wives received postcards, ostensibly intended for their worse halves, bearing the likeness of beautiful bathing girls, with the inscription, "Dear So-and-So, why did you not meet me at the beach, as you promised? I waited for you all day."

* * *

H. B. Warner, in the foremost rank of screen actors, has a peculiar method of not sparing the rod of discipline to spoil his three children for the stage career they have in mind.

Every night the trio improvise a play, for which dad is usually an enthusiastic audience. Recently they tried to dissuade his going out by crying, "But Pop, we can't act without an audience!"

To which Warner retorted, "Your Pop had to—quite often." Many inflated Hollywood egoes might have benefitted by similar training.

* * *

Some of the kidding recently directed at the Prince of Wales for his equestrian debacles is now being diverted to Bebe Daniels, who recently took a serious fall from a runaway horse in New York, and a hard tumble from a bicycle a short time before that.

When she departed from New York for Hollywood, Thomas Meighan jocularly advised her to ride in a lower berth for safety. Bebe says she'd rather be kidded about her falls by her friends than commiserated with.

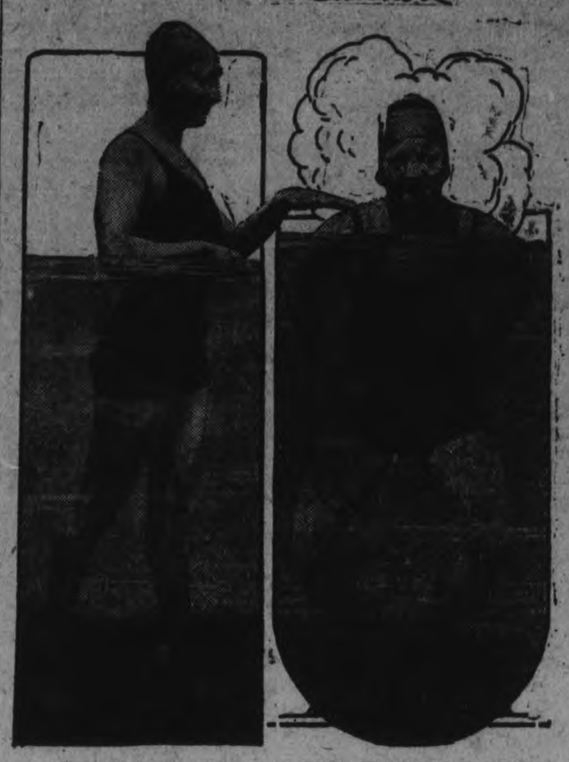
Advice to would-be movie scenarists who look to the comedy field for a foothold, by F. Richard Jones, general director of Hal Roach studios:

"Read and glean the newspapers. Comedies of the future will depend almost entirely upon incidents of everyday life such as nearly every issue of a newspaper reports.

"Actual stories from police court, divorce courts, and other news sources afford suggestive plot material abundantly for the comic vein."

HOW TO SWIM

by William Cameron



ACTION OF THE HANDS AN D FEET, STANDING POSITION.

Before any stroke is learned one should be able to remain afloat upright in the water.

That is where the scissors kick is invaluable and why it is described first.

Ability to remain afloat will give the basis for any stroke that is desired, and remaining afloat is the easiest thing in the world if one knows the scissors kick and doesn't mind the head going under the water.

Stand in water at the same time. This is done by throwing the feet out in the first movement as the body rises and the second and third as the body pauses for an instant and then goes down.

As soon as there is some proficiency in making the scissors kick while standing upright, stretch the arms out from the shoulders with the hands flat in the water just below the surface.

While standing, move the hands back and forth for a distance of about 18 inches, tilting the hand to oppose the water at each movement. The hands should at all times while they are moving present a 30 degree plane from the horizontal.

Take care that the arms are not held too stiffly and that the movement back and forth is easy and natural. A very short practice in this movement should develop almost sufficient lifting power to raise the feet from the ground.

Now begin to swim. Take care not to get into deep water at first. Make sure that you are really swimming before trying any stunts that might endanger life.

A setback at the beginning will do more harm than a month's delay. Stand in water up to the neck and move the hands and arms ad described.

When the upward pull is sure, take a little jump and make the scissors kick. The first time it will not be successful and maybe for 20 times it won't be successful, but the first thing one knows the real swimming has begun.

Swimming, like every other thing one does naturally, comes suddenly, sometimes after one has almost given up hope. Persistence is always rewarded, if the correct methods are followed.

Diamond Disputes Decided

By BILLY EVANS

Has legal distance for the making of a home run been changed?

* *

Yes. The home run of today must be 15 feet longer than in other years.

The old distance for a home run was 235 feet. The rules committee last year lengthened the distance to 250 feet.

If fence or stand is less than legal distance from home plate, all balls batted into or over them shall entitle batsman to two bases only.

For the umpire's guidance, such fences or stands should be plainly marked by a white or black line.

THEATRE AT THE REGENT

7 REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SEE "SEVEN SINNERS"

Marie Prevost is the First Reason, and Others Are All Good

"Seven Sinners," the Warner Bros. Classic of the screen, which opens today at the Regent Theatre for a run of two days, offers seven good reasons for the movie-goer to give it the once over.

The first of these reasons is that Marie Prevost is the star, and Miss Prevost is one of the few stars who are always worth while seeing. She has a role that suits her from the top of her daintily bobbed little head to the top of her daintily shod little feet. As Molly Brian, the roguish little girl crook who invades a country mansion to crack a safe, she is at her charming best.

A Story With Everything

The second reason is the story itself. Written originally for the screen by Lewis Milestone and Darryl Francis Zanuck, it has everything that makes for joyous entertainment. The situation of setting seven crooks to try to cheat each other of loot when all are imprisoned in the same house has excellent comedy possibilities, and the authors have realized every chance for a laugh. Their story is full of mystery, suspense and good hearty laughter.

The third reason is Clive Brook. This clean-cut, good-looking young Englishman is winning his way more and more into popular approval, and, as a suave burglar, afflicted with a conscience, he does a polished bit of work.

A New Director

The fourth reason is the direction given to the picture by Lewis Milestone, the half-author of the piece. Milestone is a newcomer to the ranks of directors, but he wins his spurs with "Seven Sinners," and gallops along at a merry pace.

Three other good reasons are contained in the performances given by Heinie Conklin, John Patrick and Claude Gillingwater as members of the hilarious "seven."

Franc Reacts Favorably In Financial Circles.

PARIS, July 21 (Canadian Press)—The French franc acted favorably today, closing officially at 46.95 to the dollar as against 49.22 yesterday.

The reason given in financial circles is that the bear movement has gone far beyond the point justified by actual circumstances and that the recovery from the violent fluctuations is certain. They assert there is nothing behind the present downward movement but political apprehension supported by speculation. Prospects of a National Union Cabinet to succeed the Herriot ministry at an early date have also had an influence.

MEIGHEN RESTS CASE

Byng Protector of Parliament

"Under representatives of the Crown such as those who have honored this Dominion as Governor-General there need neevr be any fear for responsible government in Canada. The sphere of discretion left to a Governor-General under our Constitution and under our practice, is a limited sphere indeed, but it is a sphere of dignity and great responsibility. Within the ambit of discretion residing still in the Crown of England, and residing in the Governors-General in the Dominions, there is a responsibility as great as falls to any estate of the realm or to any House of Parliament. With all deference and in no spirit of controversy, I say that within the sphere of that discretion the plain duty of the Governor-General is not to weaken responsible government is maintained; that the rights of Parliament—not at all; it is to make sure that responsible government is maintained; that the rights of parliament are respected; that the still higher rights of the people are held sacred. It is his duty to make sure that Parliament is not stifled by Government, but that every Government is held responsible to Parliament and every Parliament held responsible to the people.

"There are some who say that the legislative efforts of the last session have been wasted, that we should not have dissolved so suddenly. My answer is simple and short. First of all, dissolution took place just exactly as it would have taken place had Mr. King's request to the Governor-General been granted. Once the order for dissolution was signed which his Excellency was asked to sign, then there would no longer have been a Parliament. But, in the second place, Mr. King induced a technical majority of one to decide that the Government of which I was the head was not legally constituted. It seemed to me rather curious that a Parliamentary majority composed mostly of Progressives conclusion that its knowledge of law was better than that of the Department of Justice — for they decided to override the opinion of the Department of Justice.

Legislation in Effect

"Nevertheless, the fact that that vote was given, declaring that we were not legally constituted, surely put it out of the power of those who so voted to complain that we did not come back to Parliament and presume to function as a Government in Parliament. It is puerile and nonsensical to vote that a Government is not a Government, and then to complain that that Government does not come back to Parliament to complete legislation. No further answer is necessary. As a matter of fact, however, the legislation which was actually passed by both Houses, and which failed to be signed by the Governor-General, is, in all important features, being put into effect. The Government has power, by statute, to give effect to much of this legislation, and has taken steps to do so, and today all reductions in taxes passed by the House and by the Senate are actually in operation.

"I will tell you now what the present Government considers its duty to the people of Canada. First of all, we feel that we should carry out, so far as we legally can, the will of both Houses of Parliament so far as expressed. As already stated, this is being done. We feel it is our duty to hold the situation and await the verdict of the people, and in the meantime to administer public affairs carefully, economically and honestly, and to prepare to initiate new policies when a few weeks from now the people give us, as they will, a strong and overwhelming mandate to govern Canada.

Eradicate Cancer in Custms.

"Already we have taken steps to eradicate the cancer in the Customs Department. The investigation which necessarily could cover only a fraction of the service, is being continued. A judge has been appointed in the manner decided by Parliament resolution, and I am proud to be able to say that the choice has fallen upon so distinguished a man as Sir Francois Lemineux, Chief Justice of the Province of Quebec. The investigation will go on rigorously and thoroughly and with a view to the purification and bettering of the public service and the restoration of justice to the taxpayers of Canada. The Mounted Police, who were cast aside by the previous Government, have been ordered on duty. Dishonest officials are being removed, and from end to end of Canada, without distinction of Province or of race, the work of reform will be pursued.

"There are thse, including the late Prime Minister himself, who have sought to raise a sectional cry even out of the Customs investigation and who have declared that it was aimed chiefly at the Province of Quebec. This cry is baseless; it is worse than that— it is childish If you will look at the report of the Customs Committee you will find that, of 25 firms whom the committee recommended should be prosecuted, only three of them were concerns headed by French Canadians. Twenty-two of them were controlled by English-speakign people. The committee recommended the retirement or dismissal of nine officials, of whom six were English-speaking. The committee recommended proceedings to collect moneys illegally withheld to the amount of $1,780,000, and of this sum over a million dollars was for offenses committed outside the Province of Quebec, There was nothing in that evidence or in the whole work o fthe committee which was sectional in the least degree, and there will be nothing either sectional or racial in the word of the Judge in the days to come.

Housecleaning Promised.

"We propose when in office, to make it our first charge that every department will be roused to a sense of its stern duty to the Canadian people and its stern responsibility to account for every dollar committed to its charge. We propose that departmental reform shall not stop at the Customs Department, but shall proceed in all branches of the service, wherever it may be found that the blight of degeneration has set in.

"We ask for a mandate from the Canadian people to end the weary years of fickleness and instability in financial and fiscal affairs; to restore definitely and clearly the principle of protection in the tarff of Canada: a principle and practice upon which all can rely, upon which industry can depend, upon which workers can depend, but a principle and practice which none will be permitted to abuse. We propose that stability and tranquility will take the place of disturbance and unrest, and that the great resources of this country will be conserved for the development of our own nation and not of another, and for the multiplication of the people and the retention of our own sons and daughters at home.

Vigorous Immigration.

"We propose to lay the basis of a practical, vigorous and fruitful immigration policy, and that basis shall be, first of all, employment for the people of Canada. On that rock, and on that alone, we will build, for only on the foundation of employment within our own country can the wisest of immigration policies ever succeed. The immigration policy of the late Government has been a persistent failure unredeemed by a single success. It has been a failure for many reasons, but chiefly because there was no confidence in industry at home and insufficient employment for the people within our boundaries. We propose that the Department of Immigration will be a department which will encourage people to come to Canada, and not a department whose chief duty is to keep them out. As work expands in our country we will centre our efforts on securing British immigration, and immigration from those other countries whose manhood and womanhood have already proved suited to our climate andsuited to our institutions. In this way the work of colonization will expand, settlers will readily be found for our lands and variety of employment for the entire mass of a varied and resourceful people. Employment for the children of Canada, employment for the immigrant, expanded markets for the products of our soil—these are the bases upon which the structure of our country will grow.

Aid for East and West.

"We propose to take practical steps along the lines of our resolution of June, 1925, to extend to producers of the Maritime Provinces and the Western Provinces the markets of Central Canada, and especially to extend the use of Canadian coal by Canadian consumers and the employment by Canadian shippers of our own Maritime ports.

"For the past 50 years the attention of our agricultural institutions has largely, if not efficiently, been directed to the problem of 'production'—originating new varieties of grains and improving our breeds of farm products. Very marked progress along all lines of improved production has been made, but I feel sure that the economic results to the farmer would have been much greater had we at the same time built up an economic, efficient, businesslike methods of marketing our farm products.

Help Co-operative Marketing.

"Few agricultural countries of the world have made greater progress in 'production' than Canada, but few have been as tardy as we in recognizing as a great national question the economic marketing of these products. Denmark during the past 50 years has built up a system of production and co-operative marketing which has placed her in the forefront of the agricultural countries of the world. Her farm products today command the highest prices in the great consuming markets. The Governments of South Africa, New Zealand and Australia have recognized the national importance of this question of the orderly marketing of farm products, and by laws and regulations have established commodity co-operative marketing of farm products as a national policy. This system has been adopted with marked success in many branches of agriculture in the United States.

"This system of commodity co-operative marketing is comparatively new in Canada and has been adopted in only a few commodities—the wheat pool of the West is the most outstanding example. In several of the Provinces a beginning has been made in organizing other commodities. As might well be expected, in some cases the results obtained by the producers have been disappointing. These efforts have not been wasted, and out of the experience gained I feel that our farmers will profit and rebuild adhering to tried and proved principles. The chief of these sound principles is that marketing associations should stand on their own feet and be entirely free of Government control. I want to say to the farmers of Canada, after some study of the marketing question, that I believe they are on the right track and that the Conservative party, of which I am leader, stands ready to support, in every legitimate way available to a Government, this very worthy movement of theirs to establish an economic and efficient method of marketing their products.

Marketing Policy.

"If returned to power, the present Goverument will stand ready to put into force such a policy as will enable the farmers of Canada to build up a marketing system which will compare in efficiency with that of any agricultural country in the world.

"I have now to announce the date of the election has been fixed for Sept. 14 next.

"Our appeal now to the people of Canada can be put in a few words, and with these words I close. We ask them to study the policy embodied in the resolution by which the Conservative party stands, moved in the House of Commons on June 2, 1925. We believe the great articles of policy there laid down are sound for this Dominion, and when given effect will make for unity, prosperity and expansion. We lay before them the administrative record of the late Government as revealed by the files of its own committee and from the mouths of its own witnesses, and we ask you to condemn with your votes inefficiency and gross infidelity to public trust. We appeal to our fellow-citizens in every section of this country, of every class and occupation, to rise to the height of true Canadians and think in terms of the whole country, and to call for the sane, consistent application of the only principle of fiscal policy by which this Dominion can live, hold its children, gather its immigrants and grow to a great nation. Finally, we appeal for the union of all workers, employers, farmers—everybody— in sympathetic and practical co-operation to press forward the great movement through which the basic industrialists of our country, the producers from our soil, will at last come into their own."

Hon. E. L. Patenaude.

Hon. E. L. Patenaude, Minister of Justice, speaking in English and French, declared that not very long ago he had stated in effect that he was as free of control of the leader of the Conservative party as he was of that of the leader of the Liberal party. "The then condition—one of some years' standing — was an unfortunate condition," said Mr. Patenaude. "The political party whereof in Dominion affairs the Rt. Hon. Mr. Meighen was the leader, had, to a very large extent, lost control with the Quebec section of the party. The situation, an unfortunate one, as I have said, was ended recently by a rapproachement for which I acknowledge that most of the credit goes to Mr. Meighen."

Mr. Patenaude, continuing, said that under circumstances, "which, in a man of smaller calibre, might have produced a different reaction," Mr. Meighen, following upon the events of last fall, came to the Province of Quebec, "met us, talked to us in our own tongue, and convinced us that there was still to-day room within the Conservative party for the realization of our aspirations as there was in the old days of Cartier and Macdonald." There were now no divisions among Quebec Conservatives.

Stable Government Essential.

"There is no hope for a country that is unable to provide itself with stable government," said Mr. Patenaude. Until recently, governments in Canada had been characterized by stability. "My suggestion is that it is the present business of the people of Canada," he added, "to look about them and to decide, as between the Conservative and Liberal parties, which of the two is more likely to afford stable government in the sense of stability and of tenure." The fate of the country has never been so well safeguarded as when the Conservative party had been charged with the care of it.

"Liberals Discredited."

"Stable government ceased in Canada with the advent of Mr. King to power in 1921," said Mr. Patenaude. "What chance for stability in government is discernible if reliance is placed upon the Liberal party?" he asked. "It is going to the country discredited by the Customs scandal. It has rejected in terms, the economic policy which, by practically common consent, is essential to the prosperity of the country. Its leader has proposed that one of the essential estates of the realm known as the Senate, shall be abolished, or if not abolished, reduced to such a state of impotence that it were better abolished. I know that I speak for the people of my province when I say that in my province the continued existence of an independent Canadian Senate is considered essential to the continued existence of the people of that province in the Canadian Confederation."

No Constitutional Issue.

Mr. Patenaude deprecated the suggestion that there was any constitutional issue. The actions of the Governor-General had been correct. "As between the Liberal and Conservative parties," he concluded. "there need be little doubt in the breasts of Canadians as to which, at this juncture, is the better enabled to give Canadians a stable government."

Senator Gideon Robertson declared that Mr. King throughout the last session had been "wholly and admittedly dependent upon the passing whims of various groups, which held the balance of power and the King Government at its mercy." The end had been "hastened by the proven evidence of misconduct and dishonesty within the administration itself, resulting in the country being robbed of many millions of dollars of legitimate revenue."

Senator Robertson.

Mr. King had made an "attempted flight" from a vote of censure, and His Excellency had declined to consent to the "cowardly departure" by this exit, said Senator Robertson. "We find," he continued, "the then Premier pettishly resigning and proceeding forthwith to raise his voice in protest against the recognized and properly constituted executive authority, which has existed in this Dominion since its birth."

Two issues were before the people. Was our constitution as recognized and operated since Confederation with all the protection and rights which it has guaranteed to the Canadian people to be continued? Or was Canada to adopt what "is obviously the Right Honorable Mr. King's policy, as described in the words of a Communist resolution, adopted at London, Ont., on Good Friday, 1925, 'Resolved, that it is in favor of complete independence for colonial and semi-colonial portions of the British Empire?'" It would appear, he continued, that those taking exception to Canada's present status include in their number all Communist organizations in the country.

William L. Mackenzie's Wish.

Senator Robertson said that almost ninety years ago William Lyon Mackenzie had written a long letter to the people of Upper Canada (now Ontario), after Mackenzie "had fled in disgrace from it, and stated that for more than twenty years his darling wish had been to see the states and provinces on the North American Continent merged into one great union." Mackenzie had further stated, said Senator Robertson, that the time had not yet come, but that the sooner Canada threw off the British yoke the better. "The spirit of the grand sire still lives, and Canada is to-day in jeopardy because of it," declared Senator Robertson.

10,000 FIGHTING FOREST FIRES

North Western Part of United States Shrouded in Smoke.

BLAZE ADVANCES.

MISSOULA, Mont., July 21. — (Canadian Press).—A pall of smoke arising from the embers of forest and brush fires that have eaten their way across half a million acres of land shrouded the north-western part of the United States to-day, while an army of fire-fighters strove desperately to stem the advance of the most disastrous conflagrations that have beset this section of the country in a decade.

Hundreds of widely scattered blazes were being stubbornly resisted by at least 10,000 men, comprising the regular forestry employees, Government troops, and hastily recruited volunteers.

Eight thousand men have been drawn into the battle in California, where 270,000 acres have been burned over. The devastated acreage exceeds thus far by 100,000 acres that destroyed during the disastrous dry season of 1914, official figures show.

North Idaho and Western Montana have suffered heavily. Upwards of 200,000 acres have been gutted in this region. Splendid stands of virgin timber have fallen before the flames in Kaniksu, Pend Oreille, Coeur D'Alene and Blackfeet forests and still other vast tracts are threatened by the spreading blazes.

Italian Press Regards French Situation Collapse of Parliamentary Government

ROME, July 21 (Canadian Press) —The French political and financial situation is regarded by the Italian press as an indication of the collapse of Parliamentary government. There is no suggestion that Fascist methods be adopted there, however, and both the official and press circles refrain from any tendency to exult over the situation.

Durant Stocks Rally On Regular Market.

NEW YORK, July 21 (Canadian Press).—Further irregular development in to-day Stock Market as a result of more extensive readjustment of the speculative accounts, but by early afternoon the speculators for the advance appeared to have regained the control of the price movement. The morning decline was checked by a rally in so-called "Durant stocks," American Safety Razor being bid up over three points to a new 1926 high, while General Motors rallied several points from its low level to within striking distance of a record high established a few days ago.

A sudden up-turn in Republic Steel revived the rumors of early restoration of dividends, but these lacked official confirmation. As the quarterly meeting of the United States Steel Corporation approaches more talk is heard of "melon cutting," but in conservative quarters no action of this kind is expected by before the October meeting. Steel Common is now selling within a few points of its record high.

Lorillard Tobacco was one of the few outstanding weak spots breaking over four points to the new low for the year on rumors of disappointing earnings.

An abrupt halt to the downward plunge of the French franc, which was construed as an indication of the returning confidence abroad, continuation of easy money rates, and optimistic tenor of weekly steel trade reviews, which stressed the fact that July production and demand had not eased off to an extent looked for by the leaders in trade; all helped to create a bullish enthusiasm. Trading, however, was largely of a professional character, with no signs of any substantial increase in public participation.

Lake Shore Gold Advances Kirk Hunton Very Active.

TORONTO, July 21. Canadian Press. — Lake Shore Gold provided the feature in trading on the Standard Mining Exchange to-day with a net advance of 50c per share to 12.10. Upward movements in other issues also predominated the session. Hollinger was unchanged at 19.75, while McIntyre dropped 10c to 25.90. Kirk Hunton was an outstanding stock in activity and strength with gain of 3 1-2c to 17 1-2 while Dome continued weak with 5 cent decline to 10.80. Gold Hill was off 1-2 to 64 1-2 but Night Hawk was up 1-2 to 9. Keora gained 1 to 11 and Tough Oakes 1-2 to 39. Castle Trethewey led Silvers with 2 point gain to 1.55 while Mining corporation was 2c lower at 4.00. Noranda was weak to-day, declining 10c to 16.90.

Fractional Changes Made Smelters Up a Quarter.

TORONTO, July 21. Canadian Press. — Page Hersey issues and Consolidated Smelters led in activity in a moderate session of the Toronto Stock Exchange to-day in which prices ranged but fractionally. Page Hersey common was off 1-4 at 48 while preferred closed at 104 for net gain of 1-2. Smelters was 1-4 higher at 218 1-4. International Nickel was unchanged at 38 1-2 and Imperial Oil advanced 1-8 to 35 5-8. British Columbia Fishing gained 1-4 to 73 1-2. Brazilian was unchanged to 3-8 higher and Massey Harris prfd. was unchanged. Lake Shore mines closed at 12.00 for a net gain of forty cents per share. Steel of Canada registered an advance of 1 3-4 at 104 3-4.

Wheat Market Recovers After Opening Setback

CHICAGO, July 21 (Canadian Press) — Wheat went downward early today but showed surprising power to rally. Bearish effects of rains and cooler temperatures in the north west were largely counterbalanced by reports that much damage to the wheat by head and drought was beyond repair. Starting a half cent to 2 3-8c off, wheat market soon recovered most of the setback. Corn and Oats and provisions were easy, corn opening at 3-4c decline to 1-4c advance and later delining all around.

The fact that wheat prices at times today showed five cents bushel decline from Monday's top quotations had apparently much to do with giving a strong undertone to the market. It was pointed out that a five cent break amounted to about place since issuance of the Canadian Government crop report showing far Government rop report showing far greater reduction of the yield than had been generally looked for.

Crop advices from the spring wheat belt continue mainly pessimistic.

HISTORIC SITES HELD MEETING

OTTAWA, Ont., July 21.—(By Canadian Press).—The annual meeting of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada, an honorary body comprised of recognized historians which acts in an advisory capacity to the Dominion Government in respect to historic sites matters, was held recently in Ottawa when over one hundred and thirty sites previously recommended for commemoration twelve others were selected as being of national importance.

Brigadier-General E. A. Cruickshank presided at the meeting and other members in attendance were Dr. J. C. Webster, representing New Brunswick; Dr. J. H. Coyne, representing Western Canada; J. B. Harkin, Commissioner of Canadian National Parks, representing the Department of the Interior, and Major A. A. Pinard, Secretary.

The recommendations of the Board are carried out by the Canadian National Parks Branch Department of the Interior. On sites where there are no historic remains and where it is desired to commemorate to the historic occurrence which took place there, a shaft in the form of a cobble stone cairn or a large boulder is erected to carry the standard bronze tablet which is of a very artistic nature. The centre panel bears the inscription containing the historic occurrences and around its border the several phases of Canadian history are symbolically represented.

Of the sites selected by the Board at its 1925 session for commemoration, the following are the most important:—Louisbourg, N.S., once proudly called the Dunkirk of America; the Naval Battle of the Shannon and Chesapeake at Halifax; the Yorkshire Settlement, Chignecto; Fort Lennox on Ile-aux-Noix, near St. John, P.Q.; Fort Three Rivers at Three Rivers, P.Q.; Fort Frontenac, Kingston, Ont.; the embarkation point of Brock's troops to capture Detroit in 1812, near Sandwich, Ont.; the western terminus of Sir Alexander Mackenzie's farthest point west, near Balla Colla, B.C., and the old Hudson Bay Company's posts of Forts Augustus and Edmonton near Edmonton, Alta. In addition to the above sites it was also decided that the eminent public service of the following outstanding person ages in Canadian history should be suitably commemorated:—

DENTAL SPECIALTIES.

In primitive days, we may suppose, each man was his own "butcher and baker, and candle-stick maker," and thus was almost wholly independent of his neighbor for the necessities of life.

But, as civilization evolved, and became more complex, it was early obvious that this system of living was wasteful. So, gradually, in the dawn of history, the conception of trades and occupations was introduced.

Thus, down the ages to the present day, when the arts and crafts hae become diversified to a maximum degree, the superlative has been attained with the creation of specialties within a specialty, such as we see on every hand in daily intercourse.

That we have specialties within dentistry, betokens the breadth of field in this branch of the healing art. From a tiny sapling, dentistry has grown to the magnitude of a mighty tree with great spreading branches—each a specialty.

Perhaps the most primitive form of dentistry practised was that of "drawing the teeth," or extraction. To-day, this specialty, known as exodontia, is widely-practised, the specialist being called the exodontist.

A second branch, that of prosthodontia, relates to the restoration of lost dental organs by means of artificial substitutes such as full and partial dentures. This specialty is practised by the prosthodontist.

Of more recent years, the treatment of crooked or malposed teeth, has created a problem calling for an intensive study and great manipulative skill. This branch of 'tooth straightening" is known as orthodontia, whence comes the orthodontist.

Continuing—through the mode of living and from the faulty dietary habits of the present day, we have, among civilized peoples, a disease of the supporting structures of the teeth, known as pyorrhea. The peculiar study and treatment of this lesion has called forth another specialty—that of periodontia—practised by the periodontist.

Then, we find that among the ranks of the dental profession, there are a great many busy practitioners who are reluctant to give the time necessary in the treatment of children, with the result that in many of our larger centres we find such cases being referred to those who, through natural inclination, are more willing to expend the time and patience called for in the handling of these little patients.

Thus, periodontia has come and with it the periodontist.

Yet another specialty, but treating more specifically with diseases and surgery of the mouth tissues, is that of oral surgery—and practised by the oral surgeon.

Noteworthy regarding these specialties, is that through them there has been contributed to the public weal a greater measure of skillful service, not only by those men who, each in his own line, has developed his skill to a superlative degree, but on the part of the general practitioner who has been the recipient and in turn, the apostle of the wider knowledge that the specialist, through a more intensive training and study, has been able to glean.

Nicolas Denys at Bathurst, N.B., Joseph Wallet des Barres at Sydney, N.S., Sir Howard Douglas at Fredericton, N.B., Bishop Alexander Macdonell at St. Raphael, Ont., and Sir Charles Bagot and Lord Sydenham at Kingston.

Approximately twenty sites are marked each year throughout the Dominion on the recommendation of the Board, and an endeavour is made to divide these proportionately among the provinces.

Those commemorated in 1925 are as follows:—Fort Cumberland, near Point de Bute, N.B., Fort Edward, Windsor, N.S.; Fort Meductic, near Woodstock, N.B.; Fort Latour, St. John, N.B.; Battle of the Restigouche, Campbellton, N.B.; Fort Chambly, Chambly Basin, P.Q.; Hochelaga Village of the McGill Campus Grounds, Montreal, P.Q.; Fort Longueuil, Longueuil, P.Q.; Fort Charlesbourg Royal, Cap Rouge, P.Q.; Tadonsac, P.Q.; Battle of Coulse Grou near Rivière des Prairie, P.Q.; Port Arthur, Ont.; Fort Nottawasaga near Stayner, Ont.; Selkirk Settlement, Winnipeg, Man.; Fort Rouge, Gibraltar and Garry Winnipeg, Man.; Fort Kamloops, Kamloops, B.C.; Gonzales Hill, Victoria, B.C.; and the old north west Police post at Calgary, Alta.

Other sites on which to erect memorials are being acquired by the Department of Interior from time to time and it is hoped that eventually every historic site of national importance and interest in the Dominion will be rescued for the country, to be handed down to future generations as tokens of the achievements performed in the moulding of Canada.

LEADER SAYS A PRAYER FOR ALL BOYS AS HE YIELDS HIS PLACE AND DROWNS

Raymond Allan, Chamberla in Street, Leaves Mother To Care For Family, of Whic h He Was Sole Support—Arthur Bacon, Another City Boy at Camp, Safe.

(By Examiner Staff Reporters)

In sight of their camp fire flickering on the shore, and with a prayer said by the leader for all of them, ten young men and the director of St. Andrew's Brotherhood camp drowned in Balsam Lake on Tuesday night and early yesterday morning, when their war canoe upset in a squall. The tragedy became known only yesterday afternoon, when the four survivors of a party of fifteen staggered into camp. It was then seventeen or eighteen hours since their craft upset.

SURVIVORS

Arthur H. Lambden, Galt.
George Waller, Toronto.
William Wigginton, Toronto
Leonard O'Hara, Toronto.

All fifteen were members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, a young men's organization of the Anglican Church. Raymond Allan, the Peterborough victim, was a member of All Saints' Church, and it was through an Anglican clergyman that news was taken to his mother, Mrs. Ellen E. Allan, 519 Chamberlain street.

There has been no darker chapter in the history of the summer resorts of Canada than that which swept with the fateful squall out of a clear sky on Tuesday night, and in the list of tragic deaths there is none more lamentable than that of the Peterborough boy. Known as one of the most promising employees of the Canadian Packing Company, where everyone has a good word to say for him, Raymond Allan was the sole support of his mother and her other two children. His grandfather, William Williams, 525 Chamberlain street, and his uncle, Mr. Brockwell, visited the scene of the tragedy last night in search of some gleam of hope for the boy's return, but none was vouchsafed.

Bravery is written large on the story told by the survivors, bravery of individual boys, supreme courage of the leader who said a prayer for their deliverance before he dropped off to his death, sacrificing himself to the cold waters that the canoe might be lightened and the boys saved.

Mr. Butcher was one of the directors of the Peterborough Rotary Camp at Clear Lake last year, and was a model type of young man. He and three other boys from Toronto passed through Peterborough on Friday last, purchasing supplies for several days' camping. He was the only non-swimmer in the party, suffering from a broken knee-cap which hindered his activities in the water. On Tuesday night he made a sacrifice such as is chronicled in history—he yielded his chance of life to another.

The Tragic Story

It was at 7.30 on Tuesday evening that the party of fifteen boys embarked in the 30-foot war canoe, borrowed from Jack Patte, of the Chemong Fox Farm. The canoe, which is a sister boat to the one now at Rotary-Y.M.C.A. Camp at Clear Lake, contains eight thwarts. It was not "tippy," the boys say, and was easily managed. It has lain at Chemong for five years, Doug. Loomis told The Examiner.

The party intended going to Coboconk camp, five miles away ,for supplies and extra canoes that had been promised the boys. The boys who composed the crew were those who happened to be near by when the decision was made to go to Coboconk, and all were apparently not versed in the handling of the big canoe.

It was about half an hour after the start, when a strong wind came up, bringing with it a wave that capsized the canoe, throwing the boys into the water about three-quarters of a mile from the shore. The shouting of the boys failed to bring help from the shore, which is practically deserted at this point, and the wind carried their cries away from the camp, though they could see light of the camp fires throughout the terrible struggle. Those who remained at the camp kept the fire blazing until 2.30 in the morning, and then decided that their companions had stayed the night at Coboconk Camp.

The boys clung to the sid of the overturned canoe and endeavored to paddle it shorewards with their free hands. A breeze was blowing from the shore, and this drove them back so strongly that they realized that they could not succeed in that manner. Handicapped by the weight of their boots and clothing and with their strength sapped by the cold water, the younger boys quickly tired. A number managed to kick off some clothing, and the less strong climbed up on the craft, including Shea-Butcher, whose weakened knee made it doubly difficult for him to swim. Lambden, the camp adjutant, swam around the canoe, encouraging the boys and urging them to hold on "just a little longer" and helping wherever he could.

"Greater Love Hath No Man."

It was when many of the boys were on the breaking point that Shea-Butcher injected into the tragedy the outstanding example of heroism that will live in the memories of the boys who escaped and in the minds of the parents of the boys who died. Riding in comparative safety on top of the canoe, the director noted that the efforts of the swimmers were getting more and more feeble as the chances of safety became more remote. He said a prayer aloud for all of the boys' safety, and then yielded his place on the canoe to another. "I'm only in the way," he said, "I can't be saved," and deliberately threw himself into the water, sacrificing himself that another might have the place on the canoe bottom.

None of the four survivors can recall the moment when the first boy surrendered himself to the icy waters but they recall with a shudder how, one by one, their companions dropped off as their endurance snapped.

The canoe drifted ashore on Grand Island about 2 o'clock in the morning, with only four boys clinging to it. The remaining eleven of the light-hearted crew that started out a few hours before had perished. The survivors were: Lambden, who is spoken of with reverence by the other three survivors because of his inspiring bravery; George Waller, Leonard O'Hara and William Wigginton. Wigginton had seen his brother drown in the half darkness many hours before.

Lay Exhausted.

The four lay on the shore until daybreak, semi-conscious and wholly exhausted. About six o'clock, it is told by the survivors, one recovered sufficiently to look for aid. He procured food at the home of a farmer named Booth, and hurried back toward his companions. The effort was too much for him, and he collapsed for a second time. It was not until about 8 o'clock that the boys gained sufficient strength to attempt getting away from the island. They baled the water out of the canoe, and, using a plank to supplement the one paddle that remained, started out for the Long Point shore, three-quarters of a mile away. Reaching there, they commenced the two-mile struggle through the dense bush to their own camp, scratched and torn by thorns and brambles. More than half-naked, they reached there at 2 o'clock in the afternoon — eighteen and a half hours after leaving it so happily.

Lambden is in serious condition, The Examiner was informed at the camp last night. He lay in a stupor all day after being put to bed in a tent immediately on his arrival at the camp and was unable to give any connected narrative of the tragedy. He is now in Lindsay Hospital. The remaining three survivors were rushed to the train and thence to their homes.

Launch Passed In Night Not Hearing Boys' Cries

TORONTO, July 22 (Canadian Press).—According to William Wigginton, Toronto, one of the survivors of the Balsam Lake drowning tragedy, in which eleven young men were drowned early yesterday morning, a launch passed close to the war canoe to which the boys were clinging after it had capsized and thrown them into the water. Although the boys cried out for help, young Wigginton said, the occupants of the launch did not hear them and passed on. Had the persons in the launch responded to the boys' cries for help, some at least of the 11 drowned might have been saved.

NO ACCIDENTS AT CLEAR LAKE

Peterborough Upset Last Night By Rumors of Drowning at Rotary Camp.

MANY INQUIRIES.

Consternation was spread in Peterborough last night by rumors that the tragic accident at Balsam Lake took place at the Y.M.C.A. Rotary camp at Clear Lake. Husdreds of telephone calls from anxious relatives and friends were answered by The Examiner, though only meagre news of the actual tragedy was available until the return of The Examiner staff reporters at midnight.

Rev. J. D. Paterson, of whose congregation Raymond Allan was a member, to-day took Mrs. Allan to Balsam Lake to be near the spot where her son was lost. Raymond was a valued worker in All Saints' Church, being a teacher in the Sunday school, a sidesman in the Church, and a member of the executive of the Boys' Club. It is said that he purposed entering the ministry of his Church.

The Examiner is assured to-day that there has been no accident of any kind at the Y.M.C.A.-Rotary camp, and that the boys are being well cared for.

Memorial To Heroes Of Balsam Lake Tragedy Proposed By Mayor Foster Of Toronto To-day

TORONTO, July 22 (Canadian Press) — Mayor Thomas Foster will propose to the Toronto Board of Control that a fitting civic memorial be erected to A. R. Shea-Butcher and Oliver Mardell, both of Toronto, who sacrificed their lives in the drowning tragedy at Balsam Lake so that others might be saved The mayor made this announcement this afternoon after he had expressed the city's sympathy to the relatives of the nine Toronto boys who were drowned when their war canoe capsized.

Civic Organizations to Help

TORONTO, July 22 (Canadian Press)—The heroism of A. R. Shea-Butcher and Oliver Mardell, of Toronto, in sacrificing their lives to save those of their companions in the Balsam Lake tragedy, will likely be given public recognition but representatives of civic organizations interviewed today could not say what form this would take. It was stated that not much could be done until the bodies had been recovered.

Shea-Butcher, who left the canoe to lighten the burden on it, was seriously wounded in the great war where he served as batman to Sir Arthur Currie.

PRESIDENT CALLS ON POINCARE WHEN HERRIOT'S CABINET FALLS

Radical Ministry Remained Only Two Days in Office.

MONZIE SHOCKED.

Denies That He Said Bank of France Would Suspend Payment.

PARIS, July 22 (Canadian Press). — Edouard Herriot's Cabinet fell last evening by an adverse vote of the Chamber of Deputies, 290 to 237. It was formed only three days ago to succeed the tenth Ministry of Aristide Briand, and to rehabilitate the financial position of France.

The Herriot Ministry lasted just a few hours longer than the Francois-Marsail Ministry, which in 1924 was formed to present the case of the President of the Republic, Alexandre Millerande to Parliament, after M. Herriot had refused to receive a mission to form a Cabinet at his hands.

Significent references to the historic event of M. Millerand's departure from Elysee Palace, where he was succeeded by M. Doumergue, were made yesterday, when the man who played an aggressive part in this event fell with a disastrous crash from the pedestal to which the elections of 1924 lifted him.

The reverse the Radical leader met with yesterday was all the more serious since it followed so quickly upon the assault he made with success on the Briand Cabinet last week, and because it may mean the return of M. Millerand to power with a National-Union Cabinet, comprising all the former premiers and presided over by M. Poincare.

Text of Statement.

The text of the Ministerial declaration of the Herriot Cabinet read yesterday in the Chamber of Deputies was as follows:

"The Government constituted on Tuesday has concentrated its efforts upon the financial problem. Never has a situation been so clear and a decision so urgent. Immense difficulties are facing us, some of them requiring immediate solution, difficulties of which you must be informed so that you may take decision without delay.

"We deem that these difficulties, even the most pressing, must be met with agreement of Parliament. We will not read a decree recessing Parliament. Our programme is founded upon the conviction that this country must save itself.

"France intends to pay her debts, contracted in defence of liberty, within measure and under a form where she may be certain of being capable to keep the undertakings subscribed. We must insist, however, upon absolute independence of France's action in all domains. At all events, we refuse to increase the limit of the circulation of notes. Our aim is to stabilize the currency, but we insist that such effort must not be accomplished only with foreign credits.

"Foreign currency held outside of France by Frenchmen must be repatriated. For that purpose we will open an account in foreign currency in the Bank of France, preparing at last to return to a regime of the liberty of capital by a new offer of amnesty, refusal of which will be followed by such severe penalties that no one may afford to ridicule it.

Crowds Gather.

While the Premier was pleading his case before the Chamber, crowds gathered in front of the Palais Bourbon. They grew to serious proportions, and before the vote was announced at least 5,000 persons had masssed in front of the Chamber, along the Quai D'Orsay, in the Rue Bourgogne and the Boulevard Saint Germain. They hooted Herriot and there was an occasional cry of "On to Elysee!"

It was a well-dressed orderly crowd, which obeyed the police, but its presence caused considerable anxiety inside the Chamber building. It began to disperse when news came that the Government had been overthrown, but many re-

BOYS' STORIES.

Pent-up Feelings Released By Sight of Home and Friends.

TORONTO, July 22. — Boys bronzed with outdoor life and glowing with health, but with spirits weighted under an almost unbearable load of tragedy, swung from the Lindsay train as it pulled into Toronto at 10 o'clock last night, and rushed to the arms of parents who had been waiting anxiously, prayerfully, since news of the drowning at the camp of St. Andrew's had filtered into the city earlier in the evening.

Although they had borne with silent fortitude the sudden sweep of Fate's scythe that had cut off without warning their chums of yesterday, the sight of the people, the sight of home, released their pent up feelings. Tears welled into the eyes of the boys. Some would force a smile of greeting—and then their frames would be shaken with uncontrollable sobs.

They were the lads of St. Andrew's Brotherhood Camp, which broke up after the appalling tragedy of Balsam Lake had cast its pall over their vacation.

Long before the train arrived little knots of anxious relatives were waiting on the platform. So meagre was the news of the tragedy up to the time of the train's arrival that some did not know whether or not one of their family would be on the train or among that tragic band of boys lost in the waters of Balsam Lake.

There was no demonstration on the arrival of the train. A moment of silent scrutiny of the youngsters who swung down from steps. Then a cry, a rush forward, an embrace.

Automobiles were waiting for most of the boys to hurry them home.

Survivors Reach Home.

Three survivors of the tragedy arrived at the Union Station from Lindsay last night, dressed still in their camp clothing and suffering still from the effects of their experience. In answer to numberless

Raymond Allan Left Refuge To Seek Help For Comrades Says Survivor of Tragedy

"I'll Try To Get Help," He Told Companions Who Were Clinging To Swamped Canoe—Struck Off Toward Shore and Disappeared in Darkness.

SURVIVORS TELL TERRIBLE STORY OF HOW BOYS DROPPED ONE BY ONE

"We Did Not Talk Much," Says Fifteen Year Old Survivor in Telling of Night of Horror—"None of Them Yelled....They Just Let Go and Sank."

(By Examiner Staff Reporter)

BALSAM LAKE, July 22—"I'll try to get help." These, according to one of the survivors, were the last words spoken by Raymond Allan, the Peterborough boy who was drowned in the terrible tragedy of Balsam Lake on Tuesday night. Then he slipped from the canoe and swam out into the darkness.

When William Williams, his grandfather, arrived at the camp last night the search parties had just returned from scouring the banks of the lake in search of possible survivors. They were unable to hold out any hope of the safety of Ray Allan.

The camp had been deserted by the boys who had planned to spend a happy vacation there, the drowning of eleven of their companions casting a cloud over their merrymaking and the anxiety of relatives calling them home.

The flag drooped at half mast. The long grey war canoe was tied up at the pier. Scattered everywhere was the dunnage and camp equipment abandoned by the survivors in their rush to get home after the tragedy. And in the mosquito-infested clearing near the lake gathered scores of men and youths comparing notes on their fruitless search.

Allan's baggage was taken back to Peterborough last night by his grandfather, but the blankets, sleeping bags and clothing of the other victims, are still in the tents, just as they left them when they started out so happily to cross the lake on Tuesday night. On the rough board tables under the trees there still remained last night the cooking equipment. Camp life was arrested at the moment when the weary and torn survivors returned with their terrible tale.

S. J. Manley's Story.

S. J. Manley, secretary-treasurer of the camp, told The Examiner the story of the accident as he had reconstructed it from the survivors. "The boys started out in good spirits at half past seven on Tuesday night," he said. "They were going to Coboconk for some canoes that had been promised them. After padding for an hour they reached the narrows near Grand Island, when a sudden squall came up and tipped the boat, throwing the fifteen boys into the water. Shea-Butcher, the director of the camp, was with the boys, and after the accident he made every effort to cheer them up and encourage them to hold on to the canoe. Although he could not swim he managed to grasp the boat and was heard saying a prayer for the

Canoe Was Trustworthy Owner Assures Examiner

The war canoe in which the boys were sailing at the time of the drowning tragedy in Balsam Lake was quite trustworthy and safe, its owner told The Examiner to-day. The craft was loaned to the boys by John Patte.

Nine of the boys camped at Mr. Patte's cottage at Chemong from Friday until Sunday, and then paddled the canoe to Balsam Lake. The fact that the fifty-mile trip was made comfortably by nine boys indicates there was nothing wrong with the canoe: It seated fifteen, Mr. Patte said.

WEST AWAITS RIVAL LEADERS

Meighen To Open Manitoba Campaign on August 7.

KING UNCERTAIN.

WINNIPEG, Man., July 22 (Canadian Press). — Premier Meighen will spend seven days in Manitoba on his western campaign tour, which will open on August 7, it was announced yesterday. His first Manitoba meeting will probably be in the constituency of Marquette.

The Prime Minister will spend four days in the province on his way west and three days on his return. His meetings will include one in Winnipeg.

Officials of the Liberal executive were unable to state yesterday when Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King would open his Western campaign. Tentative arrangements were made for the first week in August, but these are not certain, and the final dates will depend upon Mr. King's engagements in the East.

Supposed To Be Buried Man Insists He Is Alive

LONDON, July 22. — Mr. J. Varney, of Aylesbury, officially informed by the Imperial War Graves Commission that his grave has been found in France, insists that he is quite well, and up to the present has had no need of a grave.

"I was wounded near Pozieres ten years ago," he stated, "and was discharged. My mother was informed that I was missing, when I was actually in a London hospital. But I am still alive and kicking. The number on the grave is the same as I had when in the Bucks battalion."

An officjal of the Imperial War Graves Commision said cases of mistaken identity were frequent.

THE WEATHER.

The highest temperature reached yesterday was 89 degrees. It was the warmest day of the year. The lowest point the thermometer went last night was 68 degrees. A little shower passed over shortly after six this morning and had a tendency to moderate the heat for a time. A number of farmers have told me that crop conditions look surprisingly well after the backward and cold spring, and that they look forward with confidence to good returns from an unpromising beginning.—W. P.

DEAD PLUNDERED.

PARIS, July 21.—Investigation has been opened in the case of two Portuguese workmen who are alleged to have plundered the corpses of 14 British soldiers found near La Bassee. Most of the stolen objects have been recovered. The bodies, which have been identified, will be placed in the British military cemetery at Loos.

Calls Committee Meeting To Consider Recognition

Acting-Mayor Nagle E. Phelan this afternoon told The Examiner he will call a special meeting of the Committee of the Whole Council to consider the form the city's recognition of the heroism of Raymond Allan shall take.

A survivor of the tragedy tells how young Allan left the canoe to seek help for his comrades, although the task of reaching land in the darkness seemed, as indeed it proved to be, impossible. As he left the comparatively safe vicinity of the canoe he said, "I'll try to get help." ....

In the opinion of Acting-Mayor Phelan, some recognition should be given.

GOVERNMENT IS AIDING SEARCH

Scow Harwood Moored Near Scene of Drowning With Supplies.

MANY SEARCHERS.

FENELON Falls, July 22. Canadian Press. — The Dominion Government has come to the aid of the scores of searchers who to-day are scouring Balsam Lake for traces of the bodies of the eleven young campers at Long Point who lost their lives yesterday when their war canoe capsized somewhere north of Grand Island.

The scow "Harwood" which has been working on the Trent Valley Canal at Kirkfield, is now on the scene of operations, and with it a plentiful supply of grappling irons supplied by the Federal authorities.

This afternoon there was still no trace of any of the bodies of the unfortunate victims of the tragedy. Search parties from Coboconk, Fenelon Falls, Victoria Road and neighboring villages and settlements are engaged in the work. They are receiving assistance from every available source and expected the cream of the life savers connected with the Toronto harbor with all necessary equipment to arrive here to-day or to-morrow.

TORONTO STRICKEN

questions poured at them came an almost incoherent account of the hours when the lads, clinging to the canoe in the cold, numbing water, waited for the slowly drifting barque to reach the shore of the island. One story, however, upon which all were agreed was the tale of the heroism of the director, Shea-Butcher, who faced the almost impossible task of swimming for the shore in order to lighten the canoe and, if possible, save the others.

"The rest of us did what we could," added Leonard O'Hara, telling his story quietly but with an occasional break in his voice, "but one by one they seemed to just give up. There wasn't any excitement. When they broke loose from the canoe we'd try to get them back, but it was hard."

The party had started, O'Hara said, at about 7.30 in the evening to paddle to Coboconk to get canoes and supplies. He did not think it had been particularly rough, but just as they had been passing to windward of Grand Island, two of the boys missing their stroke had started the great canoe swaying. She had tipped to right, shipping water, and all attempts to right it had been impossible. One boy, he didn't know which, seemed to disappear at once, but the others had come up clinging to the sides of the canoe. After this had come the time when the director had said good-bye with a cheery word of encouragement and had struck for the shore. Then the long hours of waiting in the dark while the life gradually went out of their weary limbs. On reaching the shore the little party had flung themselves down and lain there exhausted for some time. Mr. Lambton and one of the other boys had finally struggled to a farmhouse, where they had obtained sustenance for the party. In the morning, with one lad still barely able to walk, they had started back, but, with a rising wind, had to turn in once to shore. Finally, however, the trip had been made, and the depleted party had made the mainland.

Leaves Widowed Mother.

Oliver Mardall, whose widowed mother resides at 1016 Mount Pleasant Boulevard, was about 18 years of age and employed by the Wrigley Manufacturing Company. His mother is on her way to Port Arthur, and as far as was known last night, had not heard of the death of her son. Mrs. Mardall's husband was a victim of the Empress of Ireland disaster some years ago. Another son, Jack, aged 14, who was also at the same camp with his brother, was not in the canoe.

Hoped For the Best.

The home of Frank Burkitt, at 12 Wilmot avenue, did not abandon hope until confirmation of the dreaded report came with the despatches to the newspapers.

"Frank was a good swimmer. He could stay under water for a long time," Mrs. Burkitt would assure those who were with her out of sympathy while the tidings were unconfirmed.

Mr. Burkitt, however, returned home shortly after half-past nine from his visit to the St. James' Cathedral rectory, where he had been endeavoring to secure some information. Despatches to the newspapers had told him that his son was listed amongst the dead.

The Burkitt boy was in his 16th year. He had five brothers and sisters. For the past two years he had been employed at the Decalcomania plant on King street. He was well known in his home locality and generally liked for his bright and cheerful disposition.

C. Waller's Story.

"We clung to the canoe all night, and gosh! it was cold. Oh, it's still all mixed up in my head," said George Waller, one of the four survivors, who returned to Toronto last night. He was far more anxious to get home than he was to tell about his harrowing experience.

"They were slipping off one by one beside me," he said, and then, in his excitement, "I was sunburned and it was pretty sore. It feels like raw beefsteak now." George was not quite clear as to how the canoe tipped. He said that it was not very rough, and guessed that the paddling had become uneven, and that had turned the canoe over.

He managed to get out a few more disjointed sentences about the time they had started, about three of them pushing the fourth up onto the canoe, and about it being an awful time. Then he arrived home where his mother was waiting for him on the porch, and anything more he had to tell that night was for her ears alone.

Well-Known In Galt.

GALT, July 22.—This city was shocked last night when the news came through of the drowning tragedy in Balsam Lake yesterday, since one of Galt's most popular young men, Harry Mills, was among the victims. Deceased, with Arthur Lambden, a fellow employee of the Babcock, Wilcox, Goldie and McCulloch Company, left last Sunday for a two weeks' vacation at the Long Point Camp, at which Lambden is one of the officials. It was Mills' first visit to the camp. Deceased was the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Mills of 183 St. Andrew's Street. He was an exceptionally popular young man, a good swimmer, and all round athlete, prominent in Y.M.C.A. circles and Trinity Church. He was a member of the track team of the works where he was employed, and only recently took part in an athletic meet at Beaver Falls, Penna.

TWO CARS COLLIDE.

Met on Hill on the Selwyn Road—One Peterborough Car.

Two cars collided on the Selwyn road last night, fortunately without injury to the occupants of either car.

One of the cars was from Peterborough and was driven by James Dutton, but the name of the owner of the other car has not been ascertained as he is said to have given two different names when asked. The authorities, however, are tracing the car through its license number.

At the time of the crash the Peterborough car was going down hill, while the other car was going up. As far as could be learned, the car driven by Mr. Dutton was crowded over to the one side of the road by the unknown driver.

The Peterborough car was badly damaged in the resulting collision.

More than 1,000 passengers, 236,000 letters and 12,000 pounds of freight were carried by a civil air line between Perth and Derby, Australia, in the past year.

To arouse interest in the science of health, prominent educators and business men of the Netherlands East Indies will conduct a hygenic exhibition at Bandoneg, Java, this year.

SHOP IN PETERBOROUGH.

The Suburban Sale which is being conducted by Peterborough merchants, and will be continued on Friday and Saturday, is designed as a demonstration of the fact that localstores are the logical shopping centres for the people of this district.

The merchants are asking their friends in the surrounding country to visit Peterborough during this Sale, look over the goods that are offered in the city's stores, study the prices, and having investigated these things to ask themselves whether or not it would pay them to shop in Peterboro regularly.

The advantages offered by this city's stores are available, thanks to the motor car and to better roads, to many people who a few years ago did not dream of shopping here, and The Examiner hopes that a large number of these citizens of the district will take advantage of the present opportunity.

A motor trip to Peterborough at the present time should amply recompense visitors in more ways than one.

PETERBOROUGH'S EXHIBITION.

The fact that the Federal election takes place during the week of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition and that the final details of the Exhibition will have to be planned during the heat of the political campaign will not be allowed to interfere with the success of the big annual event.

The Exhibition has so firmly established itself in the confidence of the people of the whole district and its reputation as one of the finest fairs in the country is so well appreciated that even a Federal campaign will not in the least endanger this year's programme.

The directors will go confidently ahead, planning for the biggest Exhibition Peterborough has ever known.

Extending over a whole week, with a huge midway already booked and a list of special attractions superior to anything yet shown here the Peterborough Industrial looks for a new attendance record and an exhibition that will be hailed by everybody as a record-breaker in every respect.

The membership campaign brought many new members, but more will be welcomed.

Citizens who have not yet allied themselves with the Exhibition should do so without delay, in order to give the directors the benefit of their support.

FLAG INCIDENTS.

Flag incidents, precipitated by the action of a certain type of American visitors to flaunt the Stars and Stripes on their automobiles, are still being reported from various parts of Ontario.

At Port Hope the other day a citizen of that town took two Ameican flags from the car of a visitor who had four flags on display and advised him to add a British flag, which the tourist after remonstrating for some time eventually did.

It is unfortunate that such incidents as this should arise.

The advice of the American Automobile Association, to the people of the United States, to refrain from flying their flag away from home, unless they at the same time flew the flag of the country they were visiting, would put an end to all these unpleasant complications.

Unfortunately, however, there are some tourists who either have not read this excellent advice or have ignored it and their conduct in flying the Stars and Stripes, unaccompanied by the Union Jack is resented by Canadians who know that an attempt to fly the British flag across the border, unless accompanied by the American ensign, would be disastrous.

The Parry Sound Star takes another view of the matter when it says:

"All this hubbub about U.S. tourists arriving in this country flying the Stars and Stripes without a sign of the Union Jack is small stuff. A look at some of these people who deck their cars out with the U.S. flag will suffice. They are not worth bothering with. The real U.S. citizens shows no such ignorance."

A BOYS' REFERENDUM.

A World's Committee of the Y.M.C.A. has been asking questions of boys and youths all around the planet for the purpose of disclosing "the true aspirations and real problems of the younger generation." What is any "question" without a questionnaire? Is modern youth radical and full of revolt? Does it hate traditions? It is irreligious? Has it discovered new truths? Or does it heel meekly after the elder generation? The last interogation was superflous and insulting; but these and other queries were popped at our young masters, of wide geographical distribution. We haven't seen the report, issued some two weeks ago, of the results of the inquiry, but such few replies as we have been privileged to read make us long for more.

Especially gratifying is the disposition to put the old folks in their place, if there is any left for them. A lad from Denmark says sententiously that "adults hinder youth by not leaving them in peace to grow." Such hindrance is to be expected from curmudgeons who have ceased to grow themselves. A stripling of England finds that "conditions of life have changed"; but he is restrained in his critcism of the eldery culprits; "Older people are sometimes old fashioned and childish.' Why not tell the whole truth? They all are. Hence the proverb: "Teach your grandmother to suck eggs." Some budding Aldous Huxley pierces the "problem" through the heart: "Something might happen if adults did the work and youth the directing." But that, unless, as Professor A. Ward says, "our eyes deceive our earsight," is practicaly the case now.

So there is no "revolt,' but a de facto as well as as a de jure government ofyouth, by youth and for youth. Old age begins before birth. We don't know where the present old-age limit begins; probably at 25 or sooner. Yet it is pleasant to know that "the old" are not cucumbers of the ground. Somebody must work, at least until the no-hour day of labor dawns. Let the old do it. Youthful direction they will never lack. They are not complaining of any lack of it now. One regrets to notice, in Switzerland, a jarring not of conservation: "What is the most effective punishment for boys?" First Swiss boy: "Send him to be with nothing to eat." Second Swiss boy: "A good spanking." A hundred years ago Bronson Alcott showed the perfect form of school discipline. If a pupil was "naughty", Amos smote his own hand with a ferule, "Spank teacher!" Send teacher supperless to bed!" The backwardnes: of these Helvetian younglings is deplorable.

From South Africa speeds the golden and final word about girls: "Don't worry much about them, but take them as a matter of course." O Paris of Troy! O Don Juan Tenorio of Seville!—New York Times.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, July 22 (Canadian Press).—Failure of foreign buyers to respond to the prices asked by local exporters curtailed the export trade in Canadian grain on the Montreal market yesterday. The volume of business was small consisting of an odd load of oats for nearby shipment. The only business of importance transacted in domestic market was a sale of ten loads of No. 1 northern wheat at 29 1-4 cents per bushel over the Winnipeg October option, c.i.f. Montreal. The market for car lots was moderately active and firm.

Owing to the continued weakness in the cash wheat situation at Winnipeg, an easier feeling developed in the market for spring wheat grades of flour here, and prices were reduced 10 cents per barrel. Prices for winter wheat grades were well maintained under a quiet demand.

Considerable business was transacted in most lines of millfeed and prices were unchanged.

The demand for potatoes was steady and American No. 1 grades were sold at $6 per barrel.

A moderate amount of business was worked in top grade eggs and the undertone was steady. The receipts were 1,197 cases.

The movement of butter was small but the feeling to the market was firm. No. 1 pasteurzied was offered at 32c to 32 1-4c per pound. The receipts were 1,251 packages.

Extreme dullness marked the cheese trade, with western grades selling at 16 3-4c to 17c per pound. The receipts were 6,832 boxes.

The tone of the market for beans was firm, but the volume of business was small. Car lots of choice white hand-picked were quoted at $2.25 per bushel, and broken lots at $2.35 to $2.45 per bushel.

CHICAGO GRAINS

CHICAGO, July 22 (Canadian Press).—Showers, cooling weather northwest and big receipts southwest combined to turn wheat values downward yesterday. Meanwhile, with considerable corn here reported as out of condition, the corn market underwent a decided drop. Wheat closed nervous, 1-8 to 1 1-8 net lower, corn showing 1 1-4 to 4 3-8 loss, oats unchanged to 1-8 off, and provisions varying from 25c decline to 12c advance.

Although at times the wheat market displayed unusual power to rally, selling which became of broader volume on the upturns was a noticeable burden at the last. A good deal of the buying originated in the northwest and tended to emphasize reports that much of the crop damage done of late by heat and drought is beyond repair. It was pointed out also that 5 cents a bushel decline from Monday's top quotations amounted to half the advance scored since the recent big reduction of the official estimate of the 1926 Canadian yield on wheat.

Huge receipts of wheat at Kansas City yesterday, drew special attention, inasmuch as primary arrivals in the country as a whole aggregated 2,800,000 bushels against 1,800,000 bushels a year ago. Railroads at Hutchinson and Salina, Kas., were said to be jammed with wheat and mills there full to the roof. Besides, a liberal increase of wheat at Chicago is looked for before the end of the week. On the other hand, receipts here so far have not been as heavy as have been expected and mills have readily absorbed the new supplies up to this time. Export demand though for North American wheat yesterday was of little or no consequence.

Beneficial mosture in parts of the corn belt with less trying temperatures looked for did a good deal to add to the weakness of corn values. Unfavorable crop reports steadied the oats market.

Provisions were in slow cash demand, and were inclined to be responsive to a downward swing of the hog market.

HOW DO YOU SAY IT?

(By C. N. Lurie.)

Common Errors in English and How To Avoid Them.

"HAND AND EYE IS"

"The Indian wild boar is no mean opponent, and his pursuit on horseback is fraught with considerable danger unless the huntsman's heart is in the right place and his hand and eye quick and true."

In this sentence, taken from a recent newspaper article, there is a word left out, that should be used, to make the sentence grammatical. It is the verb "are," and it should be used after "eye," making the sentence read, "unless the huntsman's heart is in the right place and his hand and eye are quick and true."

The noun "heart," being singular, governs properly the verb "is," which is also singular. But hand and eye being two things and consequently plural, must take a plural verb; in this case, "are."

ST. JOHN'S CENTENARY.

Editor Examiner, Peterborough:

Dear Sir: In the course of a few months St. John's Church will have accomplished its hundred years of service to the Anglicans of Peterborough. Amongst the various projects set on foot to celebrate the event is the production of a booklet recounting the history of the parish. In order to make this as comprehensive as possible the Committee in charge of the work are desirous of obtaining information from every available quarter.

There are, happily, still living in our midst many descendants of the early settlers of this district, and also many whose memories date back to days when Peterborough was little more than a prosperous village. There must, therefore, be objects of interest in many homes, in the shape of old letters and pictures which would throw light on facts connected with the early history of St. John's church.

The committee would deeply appreciate any help tendered to them, and, in the case of documents or letters would undertake to take the greatest care of them, and return them as soon as possible to the lenders.

It is hoped that this appeal will be the means of bringing to light much information which will enable the committee to compile a really valuable account of a church which has, for so long a period of time been an important unit in the religious and social life of Peterborough.

Information or documents forwarded to Dr. Blagrave, Vicar of St. John's, or to the undersigned, will be gratefully acknowledged. Yours, etc.,

F. M. DELAFOSSE.

WISE AND OTHERWISE

The man criticizing justice usually has a kick coming because it was to blame for his downfall.

Days seem warmer now since Congress adjourned and left us only the weather to cuss.

Our ambition is to find a garage wrecker in a ditch and charge him $10 for towing it half a mile.

Lyrics Of Life

(By Douglas Malloch.)

TRAVEL.

The lady across is sick of novels:
And what's outside but the hills and hovels?
She is travel worn and is travel weary,
And the journey's long, and the day is dreary—
But the grass is green on the rolling ridges,
There are little brooks under little bridges,
And they bubble over the yellow gravel,
But the lady across just hates to travel.

Yet here is the world in all its glory,
Like an open book, like a running story,
And, oh, the joy if her eyes could read it,
And the beauty there, if her heart could heed it.
For the children wave, and the switches rattle,
There are flying birds, there are knee-deep cattle,
Yet she pities folks far away from cities,
But, after all, it's herself she pities.

There are trees I would like to picnic under,
And where does that highway lead, I wonder?
There's a tiny house that the men are building,
There's a little church that the sun is gilding,
There's a flaming forge, and its sparks are flying,
But the lady across is sadly sighing,
While the hills unroll, while the roads unravel,
For the lady across just hates to travel.

DR. FRANK CRANE'S DAILY EDITORIAL.

THE POPULATION OF THE WORLD

(By Dr. Frank Crane)

The statement that the world is being populated too fast has been often made since the days of Malthus, who thought he proved that while population was going forward at geometrical ratio, the food supply was advancing only by arithmetical ratio. In this case it would not be long before there would be more people to feed than food to feed them.

And now comes Dr. Victor E. Levine of Creighton University, Omaha, addressing the Nebraska Academy of Sciences at Bethany, and says that within three generations there will be a population of seven billion, or two million more than the earth can support.

The trouble with this scientific crepe hanger is that he does not realize the immense resources of food on our planet. Professor Smith of Columbia in his "World's Food Resources," alludes to the vast supply of food that is still untapped in the sea, and also to the fact that the successful cultivation of bananas has but rarely begun, and that the banana contains most of the substances necessary for human nourishment.

The peanut is also an ideal food, containing carbohydrates, proteins and fats in abundant supply, and the area possible for peanut cultivation has hardly yet been invaded.

There are millions of acres of land in the civilized world yet uncultivated. Land enough in the United States could be made arable by the completion of the Boulder Dam, a project in the West, to feed the population of the country.

Besides this there are many food ingredients in common air and water which only await the devices of science for their release.

Altogether it is a race not between population and sustenance, but between science and food supply.

As mankind progresses it learns more and more how to find sustenance in the elements about it.

HEAR OF KOREA.

Interesting Talk on Korea Delivered To the Women.

WELCOME, July 22.—A very interesting meeting of the W.M.S. was held at the home of Mrs. J. Staples on Thursday afternoon. There were over 40 members and visitors present.

After the opening exercises and business Mrs. Kellogg read the devotional leaflet. Misses Gertrude Lewis and Elva Pearce gave a leaflet on tithing. Mrs. S. Sculthorpe and Miss Hazel Bamsay sang a duet.

Mrs. Avison, a returned missionary from Korea, was the speaker of the afternoon. She gave a simple little talk on her first experiences in Korea and a description of life there. She said there were 16,000,000 people in Korea, 350,000 of these were Christian. Her husband's father was one of the first missionary doctors in Korea. Her husband was born there, and five years ago returned as a medical missionary. Her first impressions were how dirty the coolies were. ... all wear white, but it soon becomes a dirty white. A second impression was the bareness of the country. They first lived in Seoul where they attended language school. Mrs. Avison told of her difficulties in learning the first words of the language. Her first missionary work was to gather the babies and little children into a room and entertain them while their parents attended church. Then she described some of the customs of the country. They live in mud houses, usually of three rooms, one behind the other. They are heated by a hot flue under the floor. The people sit and sleep on the floor and eat with chop-sticks. The women wash their clothes in the streams. They pound them clean with sticks. Then when dry, they pound them smooth with sticks. All the children play with kites at New Year's and at New Year's every one is clean. In the spring jumping boards is the amusement, while swinging follows as the fall sport. The children carry the small babies on their backs while playing. The women carry large loads on their heads and the babies on their backs.

Mrs. Avison dressed her two little daughters in the native Korean costumes and the little girls sang "Jesus Loves Me."

Later Group "A" served a dainty lunch of cake, strawberries and cream.

A vote of thanks was given Mrs. Avison for her address.

DISABILITIES OF NOVA SCOTIA ARISING FROM CONFEDERATION ARE LAID BEFORE COMMISSION

Col. Phinney Relates Events Leading Up To Signing of B. N. A. Act.

ADJUSTMENTS NEEDED.

Modern Developments Have Nullified Promises Made To Maritime Province.

HALIFAX, N.S., July 22 (By Canadian Press).—Before proceeding with Nova Scotia's case before the Royal Commission investigating the disabilities under which the Maritime Provinces labor within the Confederation, Lt.-Colonel E. C. Phinney paid tribute to Sir Andrew Rae Duncan in the following words:

"May I be permitted at the outset, Mr. Chairman, to express to you a word of welcome upon your return once again to this province."

The Chairman: "Thank you."

Lieutenant-Colonel Phinney: "The people of Nova Scotia have not forgotten, nor will they soon forget the splendid service which you rendered us not so many months ago. At that time you had a difficult task to perform, and I am not so sure that the present task is not equally as difficult, if not more so."

The Chairman: "I am quite sure, Colonel, that it is much more so."

Col. Phinney proceeded to review the historical events leading up to and developing from the signing of the British North American Act, which in 1867 was employed to unite in a political entity the widely scattered British Colonies lying north of the United States boundary. At the conclusion of Colonel Phinney's historical summary an adjournment was taken until next Monday at the request of the Provinces.

Case for Maritimes

In the course of an introductory statement this morning, Colonel Phinney declared that the Government would present its case on the basis that "Adequate adjustments can be found within the four corners of Confederation," and that "Any finding which this commission may be pleased to make (no matter how favorable it may be to the Maritimes) will not necessarily exhaust the provisions which the Parliament of Canada should take to rectify the inequities and inequalities of a half century and to prevent their recurrence."

Proceeding, he compared the situation in the two Canadas with that in the Maritime provinces prior to Confederation and contended that, which the Provinces of the interior had need of the Maritimes, the Maritimes, self-contained, prosperous and politically happy, had no need of Upper and Lower Canada.

Demands for Repeal

The afternoon's session was devoted to an examination of the events growing out of Confederation, the belief which swept the people of Nova Scotia that they had been dragged in; the repeated demands for repeal, and when these had been finally denied, the insistent endeavors made to obtain "better terms"; the granting of these with the proviso that "They shall be in full settlement of all demands on Canada by Nova Scotia"; and the further revision of 1907 with the declaration of Sir Wilfrid Laurier that Parliament alone was supreme and could revise the financial terms of Confederation from time to time as it saw fit.

Summing up, Colonel Phinney said:

"There has been no technical violation of the Confederation pact. And yet its spirit, somehow, has ceased to quicken the Dominion as a whole. The 'mutual benefit and prosperity of all the provinces,' which Cartier set forth as its esesntial motive, has failed of mutuality. While the Canadian statesmen spoke in all sincerity when they envisaged a wider sphere of commercial activity for the Maritime Provinces, modern industrial development, the large scale agriculture of the West, and the hard fact of geographical position have combined to render their promises illusory. In international relations, agreements are usually made rebussic stantibus." When essential conditions, for which and on account of which, the compact was originally contemplated, have been completely modified, the agreement is usually considered open to revision. No contracting party is understood by implication to assume obligations detrimental to its national existence.

Realization of Promises

"In much the same way it may be argued with Confederation, the Maritime Provinces entered it relying upon the realization of certain conditions which at that time would reasonably be expected to arise. Sixty years ago it was thought that the fish, coal and lumber of the East would in the natural course of trade flow to the West. But the trend of commerce has been otherwise and the condition has not been realized. It was not stipulated, nor was it understood, that all partners to the Federation pact must, willy nilly, endure its hardships without its compensation. It is just here that equity should step in to correct the balance which the strict letter of Confederation past has gravely disturbed. Tariffs, freight rates, land grants, provincial subsidies, and all the apparaturs of the Federal Government must normally be applied on a uniformed basis according to certain legal rules. But the application may be stern and rigid, or may fail to provide adequate redress where it works a hardship. In such case equitable remedies should be devised. It should not prove beyond the resources of statemanship so as to distribute the genefits of the Canadian Confederation that all the partners may have a share. To express in economic terms the problem of Canadian prosperity is one of distribution, not production. There is enough to go around if certain adjustments and compromises are made."

LAKE MONSTER APPEARS AGAIN

Has Head Like Sheep and Has Dark Colored Body.

SEEN BY MOTORISTS.

VERNON, B.C., July 22. — Canadian Press. — The strange monster which inhabits Okanagan Lake, and which has been reported several times recently, raced a motor car being driven along the shore road for several hundred yards yesterday, said J. L. Logie, manager of a local land company.

Mr. Logie describes the monster as having a head like a sheep, a dark-colored body showing about five feet above the water, and about fifteen feet long. Three other persons in the car with Mr. Logie said the monster raised a swell about a foot high, and made the spray fly ahead of it as it cut through the water at approximately the same speed as the auto.

Another auto party coming along noticed the commotion in the water although otherwise the lake was calm.

His shrieks attracted others to the cage, and he was saved from more serious injuries. It is believed he will recover with no ill-effects from his near escape from death. PLAN TO LESSEN DEPENDENCE ON UNITED STATES

Britain Contemplates Developing Trade Resources of Empire.

SERIES OF LOANS.

Vast Annual Excess of Imports From America Causes Uneasiness.

LONDON, July 22 (Canadian Press).—Great Britain's commercial dependence upon the United States' was emphasized in the House of Commons by L. M. S. Amery, secretary for the Dominions, in urging the flotation of a series of loans for developing the trade resources of the Empire.

Col. Amery pointed out that Great Britain's trade with Europe since the war had materially changed, and declared the need for an alternative and expanding market, particularly for manufacturers, was obvious.

"It is hardly necessary in this connection," he said, "to point out the extent of our dependence upon the United States to-day. There was a time when our excess of imports from the United States largely represented the annual return of our immense investments. Those investments were sacrificed in order to help us win the war. To-day we buy £220,000,000 more annually from the United States than the United States buys from us.

"We must pay large sums annually in clearance of our honorable debt obligations, and anything that will enable us to draw upon other sources than the United States, especially sources linked with our financial system, will ease that position. By the sale of our manufactured goods we could pay the United States with raw materials and other produce from the Empire itself."

The Government's plan calls for guaranteeing a loan of £4,500,000 for Palestine and £10,000,000 for the East African territories.

PRESIDENT CALLS

mained and police reserves were summoned, in thesfear that some of the deputies might meet with harsh treatment on leaving the Chamber.

Defeated on Policy.

The Herriot Ministry was defeated on the question of his declaration of policy. This dealt entirely with the salvation of the franc and the general financial situation. Immediately after the vote M. Herriot went to Elysee Palace and presented the resignation of his Ministry to President Doumergue.

The general opinion last evening was that M. Doumergue will have to call on M. Poincare to form a Cabinet. Poincare unquestionably is the choice of the moderate elements of Parliament and a considerable number of deputies of the old coalition of the Left.

M. Poincare is thought to be ready to accept the task, and is disposed to make collaboration of all the former Premiers the basis of his combination. If he undertakes the task it is believed that M. Briand will return to the Foreign Office, while M. Poincare or M. Caillaux will take the Ministry of Finance.

There is a general demand for such a Cabinet, and the temper of the Chamber indicates that a large majority will be found for such a Ministry.

To End Manoeuvring.

There seemed to be little doubt when the lower house met yesterday afternoon that the time for political manoeuvring around the financial question was ended. M. Herriot, who for two years has been a commanding figure in Parliament, came to the Government bench for the first time without a single greeting from the assembly.

After enunciating the Government's policy, Premier Herriot begged the House to take quick action. The Finance Minister, M. De Monzie, who had worked throughout the night on his financial programme then made his statement. He alluded to the small balance in the Bank of France and introduced a bill seeking authority for the Government to turn over to the Bank of France the available balance of the $100,000,000 Morgan loan, amounting to a little over $25,000,000, or 1,200,000,000 francs.

Minister's Threat.

"Should the Chamber refuse to pass this bill," he said, "I myself will instruct the Bank of France to realize on the Morgan loan dollars in the open exchange market to meet the pressing needs of the Treasury. I have a right to do this. Even if I have not, you may send me to the high court."

M. De Monzie went on to say: "The Government will not make the bill a question of confidence, because, if authority is refused, the Minister would just the same exercise the right conferred by the agreement of 1924 concerning the Morgan loan in order to avoid closing the cash windows."

This statement created much excitement and was interpreted as meaning the "cash windows" where redemption of national defence bonds is made by the bank as the Government's agent.

M. De Monzie temporarily retains his post as head of the Finance Ministry for the purpose of appearing at a special session of Parliament to force through his bill, which was referred to the Finance Committee of the Chamber.

Calls on Poincare.

President Doumergue last night asked M. Poincare to form a new Ministry. Poincare accepted in principle and will begin his consultations this morning.

Words Misconstrued.

M. De Monzie, the French Finance Minister, was greatly shocked at the misconstruction placed on his words in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday afternoon by an American news agency.

He authorized the Associated Press to deny emphatically that he ever said the Bank of France would suspend payments. He thought he had made it clear that unless the Bank of France was provided with funds by the sale of the remains of the Morgan loan, it would be obliged to stop payments in behalf of the treasury at all its branches in France.

TWO REGINA MEN FACE 13 CHARGES

Infractions of Customs and Liquor Laws Are Offences Listed.

OUT ON BAIL.

REGINA, Sask., July 22. Canadian Press. — Though refused bail and held prisoners all Tuesday night at the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Barracks, Z. Natanson, David Gallaman and Jack Jampolsky, Regina men, who face a total of thirteen charges, were liberated on bail yesterday shortly after they had been arraigned before Assistant Commissioner A. S. Knight.

Of the 13 charges, 10 are laid under the Liquor Act of 1925, and all charge illegal sale of liquor at various dates and all ten are against Jampolsky and Gallaman, eight against the former and two against the latter.

Natanson faces charges relating to alleged infractions of the Customs Act, false declarations in respect to the importation of 118 dresses, alleged attempt to bribe a customs officer $200 is mentioned as a bribe alleged to have been offered) and defrauding the customs.

Commissioner Knight admitted all three to bail and adjourned his court until Thursday after listening to D. A. McNiven, who with D. C. Kliman, appeared as defence counsel for all three accused. Mr. McNiven attacked the jurisdiction of the court.

ONT. GOVERNMENT ESTABLISHES LARGE FARM NEAR BOWMANVILLE TO TRAIN UNMANAGEABLE BOYS

Various Clubs Expected To Help in the Upkeep and Extension.

34 BOYS THERE.

Boys Are Fully Supervised Under No Spirit of Antagonism.

MILLBROOK, July 22. — The Boys' Training School about one mile north-east of Bowmanville, had its formal opening in August 1925, when 18 boys from the camp at Weston, under the auspices of the Toronto Rotary Club, were received as the nucleus of the 300 boys it is hoped sometime to accomodate.

The age limit is from 10 to 15 years, though in exceptional cases one under ten, or over sixteen, may on rare occasion be accepted.

The Training Shool is maintained for under-privileged, unmanageable boys who need a controlled environment, coupled with proper training and opportunity for self-development, to give them a fair chance in life. The school at Bowmanville is based somewhat on the pattern of the one previously established at Shawbridge, Quebec, the two being unique in Canada.

Dr. G. Raeman is Superintendent of the school and is devoted heart and soul to its interests. He has an able staff, which will have to be increased as the work grows, as his assistants, including H. Hill, Bursar; G. Dickinson, Principal of the public school; Mr. Cunningham, physical director; G. Brad, farm superintendent; D. Hyslop, engineer; Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Cairns, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Brown, who are "House Fathers and Mothers", Mr. Cairns also being wood-working instructor, and Mr. Brown storekeeper.

The problem of dealing intelligently with delinquent boys who might be saved from a career of actual crime had been given considerable concern to leaders in this work for some time, and two years ago Premier Ferguson and his cabinet decided to take some definite steps in the matter, the opportunity of a beginning in Ontario being hastened through the generosity of Mr. J. H. Jury, of Bowmanville, who purchased and donated the "Darch" farm of 150 acres; later the government bought an adjoining farm of equal area, so there is now a total of 300 acres. The site and natural surroundings could hardly be improved upon, and the stream of fresh water which flows through the grounds, offering facilities for swimming, wading an,d fishing, makes a strong appeal to the boys, and completes the suitability of the location for such an enterprise.

Practical assistance from the various service clubs of the province such as the Kiwanis, Rotary, Lions', has been promised and is counted upon to aid in the extension and upkeep of the buildings and other phases of the work.

There are thirty-four boys now at the school, fifty being expected by September, and an ultimate objective of 300. In order to create and foster an esprit de corps the boys have their own school colors, blue and gold, exemplified in caps and sweaters, their school "yell", baseball, hockey, and other teams the Faculty having the ideal in view that anything of the institutional or punitive idea may be eliminated, and a boy may speak with pride of his connection with the Boys' Training School at Bowmanville.

man is nearing completion, the original farm house being used, at present, as an administration building. All buildings on the grounds are fire-proof, and have been planned to admit a maximum of light and air. The plan for laying out the grounds as tastefully as possible includes a main driveway, oval in shape, about three-quarters of a mile in actual length, round which the various buildings will eventually be grouped.

The boys are not really sub-normal an eighty per cent standard of mental efficiency being set for those accepted, some of whom are sent down by Judge Mott from the Juvenile Court, without commitment, to make trial of what may be accomplished through proper surroundings, understanding, and discipline, with a fair chance to make good. While there is no time left idle, and the boys live a fully supervised life, yet this is done in as unobtrusive a manner as possible so no spirit of antagonism may be unduly aroused. A careful study of the case history is made in each instance to determine how the varying personalities should be dealt with.

Prince Henry, third son of the king, who was thrown from his horse at Aldershot when a dog frightened his mount, which reared. His royal highness proclaimed himself unhurt. Later he gained the prize for officers' hunters.

Approximately twenty-five per cent of the boys have something paid toward their upkeep by their parents, and ultimately it is thought a charge of $2.00 per week for juniors ,and $3.00 for seniors may be made. There is no uniform standard of clothing, a custom which savors of institutional or prison regulations, the very thing the Training School aims to avoid. The clothes worn are provded by the parents, or failing these, by the authorities. The School is under the office of the Provincial Secretary, the building part of the undertaking being under the Department of Public Works. All supplies are obtained by requisition through the Parliament Buildings, Toronto.

A home atmosphere is created by the cottage plan of residence, with a House Father and Mother, carefully selected, in charge. So far only two cottages have been erected, though ttn is the number ultimately in view. Each is a one-story building, 74 feet by 64, and contains the apartments of the Father and Mother consisting of a sun-living room, two bed rooms, and a kitchenette There is also a cosy little room where interviews with parents are held, or where the boys may receive their parents, under superyision, on occasional visits. A large and airy dormitory, containing thirty beds, four separate rooms for "head" boys, two dressing rooms to be fitted in the immediate future with individual lockers for personal belongings, shower baths and all necessary sanitary conveniences, are in each cottage.

There is also a double room, now used for the weekly chapel service, and for the daily family worship conducted by the House Father; when the folding-doors are closed the section with piano and fireplace will aid in further carrying out the home idea, as before the open fire the House Mother tells the bedtime story leaving a last impression upon the consciousness of some needed moral truth.

Each boy makes his own bed and visitors will find the white spreads quite smoothly arranged, pillow in place, and floors washed and polished as a part of the daily tasks. A sowing-room for the House Mother, with plenty of shelving for clothing supplies, is in each cottage as her busy fingers must do the mending for her big family of boys, though some of the latter give assistance with the darning of socks.

A small frame cottage, once used by the workmen, has been renovated, and will probably be turned to hospital purposes though the school has a unique record in that not a single case of sickness developed all winter, even colds being a thing unknown.

The dining hall is 86 feet by 86, and here again, to impress the home atmosphere, there are separate sections for the boys with the Father and mother from each cottage, separate entrances, white tablecloths, serviettes, suitable china, and a correct supply of knives, forks and spoons. All are served from a common kitchen where a chef is in charge, some of the boys giving assistance in preparing the food, while others act as waiters. For such chores, and help with the farm work, poultry, milking, etc., the boys are paid 10 cents an hour, the money thus earned being placed to their credit and providing Sunday collection, or some treasure coveted such as a fountain pen, mouth organ, skates and boots, and occasional trip home, sweets at the tuck shop, etc. This makes plenty of book-keeping at the office, but develops an independent spirit in the boys, teaches the necessity of doing steady and efficient work, and gives an understanding of banking, a system of which has been worked out in connection with the school curriculum. Each boy must use a cheque, properly made out and endorsed, when drawing money from his individual account.

There are two electric ranges in the big kitchen, with auxiliary coal ranges should the power fail; a large electric bake oven, recently installed; a compete cold storage system though the use of the frigidaire has been discontinued owing to an insufficient water supply; the new well now in course of construction will correct this lack, however.

The Manual Arts building is as yet incomplete as to equipment. The upper floor is intended for a carpenter shop, and the boys, under Mr. Cairns' supervision, have already made their own benches. The lower floor may be equipped for garage work, and other practical instruction, having in mind a view to future positions when earning a livelihood.

A school building is a need of the immediate future, two rooms in the dining-hall being utilized at present for this purpose. The public school curriculum is followed, but for boys of this type, most of whom have been confirmed truants, some variation is necessary. Dr. Raeman's plan includes having different members of the staff give periods of instruction each week on topics connected with their individual departments, illustrating, where possible, by use of blackboard drawings.

A rink is provided for the boys in winter, and ample athletic grounds are set apart at the farm, but a gymnasium and swimming-pool is a want that must soon be met. These lads have no understanding of clean, fair sportsmanship, and the physical director, Mr. Cunningham, has hikes, and nature study, as part of his out of school instruction for, being city boys, their ignorance of even the common varieties of birds and flowers, is practically complete.

Corporal punishment for any misdemeanor has been almost altogether abandoned; offenders are deprived of certain privileges, given added tasks, and in extreme cases a prolonged stay in bed has been found effective. A weekly court is held the boys themselves appointing a jury, crown attorney, and counsel for the defence. Mr. Brown, one of the House Fathers, acts as judge and decides which of the three or more punishments suggested shall be imposed as sentence upon the offender against the school regulations.

Dr. Raeman has worked out a "merit" system whereby a boy may make 400 marks per week, which is proving satisfactory. Sixty merit marks a day are possible divided as follows: 10 for morals and deportment; 10 for work; 10 for school; 10 for play and sportsmanship; 10 for care of person; and 10 for care of clothing. A boy who secures 300 marks is on the "Honor" list, but less than 300 deprives him of his recreation period on Saturday; 25 over the 300 and he is free at 3 o'clock when the moving-pictures begin; those who have from 325 to 350 are free at noon, and over 350 no duties are imposed other than the daily house tasks.

An average of 350 marks for one month gives standing as a "head" boy, with separate bedroom in the cottage, permission to go down town on Saturday evening with 35 cents to spend, and without supervision; the position is retained so long as an average of 375 marks a month is maintained. A "head" boy is responsible for the behaviour of a certain group of boys at certain times, and for upholding the school standards at all itmes, but particularly before the new boys.

An "Honor" cottage for "head" boys is what Dr. Raeman has in mind, and when it has been occupied for a specified time with no supervision except in an advisory way, the boy will be judged ready for community life again. It is hoped soon to have an "After Care" officer who will keep in touch with any boy deemed fit for life in the outside world once more.

The boys are encouraged to have pets, and on the farm there is a pair of pure-bred Angora goats, guinea pigs, rabbits, prize ducks, and other fowl, the pens and hutches being built by the boys under Mr. Cairns' supervision.

A school board of thirty members, appointed by the province, in affiliation with the Boys' Work Board, acts in an advisory capacity with the Faculty in administering the affairs of the School.

Some complaint has been heard that too much is being done, and on too fine a scale, in some respects, for the boys, but the officials consider that these are under-privileged lads who have been robbed of most of the advantages which are a normal boy's right. Encouragement is found in the fact that a decided improvement is noted, more particularly in some cases than others, when the boys have been for a time at the Training School.

Each building on the grounds has its own heating plant, the radiators in the boys' sleeping apartments being well up on the wall, eliminating any danger of being dust catchers, aiding ventiation, and not permitting any articles to be thrown, boy-like, behind them and forgotten.

Easy to Gain With Yeast and Iron

New Combination of Yeast with Vegetable Iron Quick Way to Build Up Weight

This new combination of yeast vitamines with vegetable iron, renews the action of sluggish blood cells, drives out dangerous body poisons, increases energy and endurance and supplies the system with vitamines that build up weight.

For years yeast has been known as a rich vitamine food but not until we perfected 'ironized yeast'—which comes in concentrated tablet form was it possible to take yeast and iron in the right proportions to build up weight.

Vegetable "Iron" when combined with yeast is quite easy to digest, therefore better for the system. And "yeast" when ironized, becomes just twice as beneficial as ordinary fresh or cake yeast.

Ironized Yeast Tablets are composed of concentrated food elements, therefore, they are pleasant to take and free from drug-like effects. If you are under weight, do not enjoy good health, lacking in energy and force, "ironized yeast" tablets will pick you right up, and if they fail, you get your money back.

Sold by druggists at $1.00 for a large 60-tablet package or sent direct from laboratory on receipt of price. Ironized Yeast Co., Fort Erie, Ontario, Canada.

DIVORCED BY PRAYER.

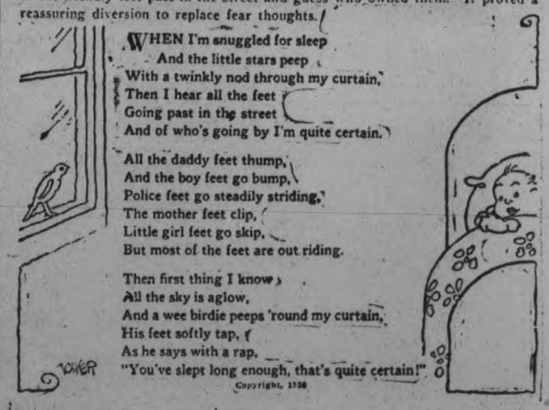
Feet in the Street

By SHIRLEY RODMAN WILLIAMS

WHEN a child is prompted to be fearsome about going to bed alone by the games he plays and the things he hears in the daytime it is a wise course to treat the fears lightly, or as non-existent, and carefully suggest other thoughts to take their place. Ruth played robber, burglar and bear with the children daytimes. Then at night all those high strung reactions and suggestions came crowding back and made her panicky. There wasn't any use discussing robbers and bears, so her mother calmly reassured her, and then suggested that she listen to the friendly feet pass in the street and guess who owned them. It proved a reassuring diversion to replace fear thoughts.



WHEN I'm snuggled for sleep
And the little stars peep
With a twinkly nod through my curtain,
Then I hear all the feet
Going past in the street
And of who's going by I'm quite certain.

All the daddy feet thump,
And the boy feet go bump,
Police feet go steadily striding,
The mother feet clip,
Little girl feet go skip,
But most of the feet are out riding.

Then first thing I know
All the sky is aglow,
And a wee birdie peeps 'round my curtain,
His feet softly tap,
As he says with a rap,
"You've slept long enough, that's quite certain!"

UNCLE WIGGILY

Today's Bedtime Story

By Howard R. Garis

UNCLE WIGGILY'S STRAWBERRIES.

Copyright, 1926, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

(By Howard R. Garis.)

"Will you please make me a strawberry shortcake?" asked Uncle Wiggily of his wife one morning.

"Right gladly would I do that," answered the rabbit lady, talking like an old moving picture, "but I must go shopping now to buy a new diamond dish pan at the three and four-cent store. Ask Nurse Jane."

So the rabbit gentleman asked Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy, the muskrat lady housekeeper.

"Will you right gladly make me a strawberry shortcake or have you to go shopping at the ten and eleven-cent store for a gold coal shovel?"

"No, indeed I haven't!" laughed Nurse Jane. "And I will make you a shortcake if you get me the strawberries."

"That will I do, and right speedily, an' it please you!" spoke the rabbit gentleman, talking like Ivanhoe. So off he hopped toward the field where amid the green vines, nested the red berries which make such wonderful shortcake, though some people would rather have a longcake on account.

While Uncle Wiggily was hopping down the lane, he heard some little squeaky voices calling to him.

"Where are you going, Uncle Wiggily, and may we come with you?"

"I am going after strawberries, my dears," answered the bunny gentleman, for well he knew such little gentle voices could not belong to any bad chaps. And Uncle Wiggily was right, for, turning, he saw Jollie and Jillie Longtail, the mice children, with Squeakie Eekie, the cousin mouse.

"Will you please take us with you strawberrying?" asked Jillie.

"We'll be very good!" promised Jollie.

"And if any bad chaps come I'll nibble them!" offered Squeakie Eekie, the cousin mouse. But as she was only about as large as a small spool of thread, I think she would not do much harm nibbling, except, perhaps, to a piece of cheese.

"Yes, come along!" invited Uncle Wiggily swinging his basket on his paw. "I'll make you three mice children some baskets of big grape leaves, so you can put your strawberries in them."

Squeaking with delight, the three mice children scurried along after the rabbit gentleman, who hopped slowly so he would not run away from them. Reaching the field, Mr. Longears made a grape leaf basket for Jollie, one for

"Where are you going, Uncle Wiggily?"

Jillie and one for the cousin mouse.

"Now you go over there and pick the red strawberries," directed the bunny to Jollie, pointing to one side of the field. "You go over there," he said to Jillie, pointing to another side of the field, "and you, Squeakie Eekie, you come with me," and he led the cousin mouse to still another part of the fielde where, he, himself, intended to pick berries. "I want you with me in case any bad chaps happen to pop out!" said Uncle Wiggily with a laugh, for well he knew there were none in this field.

"If they come I'll nibble them!" promised SqueakieEekie.

Well, there were many red strawberries where Uncle Wiggily and the cousin mouse were picking, and soon their baskets were filled. Then Mr. Longears called

"How many berries have you, Jillie?"

"I can't find a single one!" answered Jillie.

"Why, there ought to be lots of berries where you are," said the rabbit. "I'll come and show you." And, hopping over, he pointed to the red berries nestling in the green grass.

"Oh, those!" squeaked Jillie. "Why I thought strawberries grew on straw, and I was looking for a straw bush to pick them off. I didn't know strawberries grew on the ground!"

"And I didn't, either!" said Jollie, who hopped back with not a berry in his leaf basket. "Only I thought you said hayberries,and I was looking for a hay bush to pick some off. I was looking for hayberries."

"Oh, dear me! My goodness! Let me laugh!" chuckled the bunny. "This is too funny—hayberies—and berries growing on a straw bush! Oh, Ha! Ha! Ha!" and he laughed until his pink nose twinkled.

Then he showed Jollie and Jillie how to pick the red berries from the green vines tangled in the grass, and soon all the baskets were filled and Nurse Jane made a wonderful cake. And if pussy cat doesn't use her tongue to wipe all the red paint off the wooden soldier's coat, I'll tell you next about Uncle Wiggily's radio.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

(By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.)

That in fairness and justice to the home city, every citizen should patronize the home merchants.

That some salespeople should cultivate a more courteous and friendly manner toward customers: it helps to sell goods and helps the salespeople to keep their jobs.

That the salespeople who acquire an indifferent, crabbed, snobbish and "don't give a whoop" air, lose sales and some of them lose their jobs.

That a store's customers expect courteous treatment. If they don't get it, they trade where they do get it or buy from mail order houses.

That for some years the newspapers of the smaller towns and cities have been fighting the mail order houses, and in most instances fighting them without assistance.

That if the merchants really wish to keep home business in the home city, they should co-operate with the home papers.

That the best way to do is to advertise their goods in the home papers.

The merchants who fail to advertise ultimately have to pay good and plenty for their lack of business sense.

ALL DISEASES TREATED

The ORACLE

This day we fashion Destiny, our web of Fate we spin —Whittier.

Fixed fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute. —Milton.

C. R.—You have a great deal of ability along mental and scientific lines, and should make an excellent teacher. In any enterprise, however, in which you engage, you must not try to play the lone wolf. Always associate yourself with others and do not try to stand alone. You are generous, affectionate, kindhearted and very magnetic, orderly and methodical in all you undertake. You are fond of your family and a great believer in blue blood. You are secretive about your own affairs and those of your friends as well. You are fond of chemistry. You are inclined to become selfish and critical, expecting in others the same good qualities possessed by yourself. You are extremely exacting in matters of commerce or money, and are fond of accumulating money, having a good time as you go along through life, however, while laying by for a "rainy day." You will be most successful and happiest when your surroundings are neat, tidy and comfortable and when married to a bright, cheery mate, who will not find fault or flaws in you or in others. You are quite strong and healthy, and will have the happy faculty of appearing younger, instead of older, as the years advance. You were born on Tuesday. Your colors are tan and buff.

Prudence.—You are quite self-satisfied and possess a good deal of poise, although at times you are inwardly restless and rebellous against fate and the way in which it has entangled you. But it has been a mesh partly of your own choosing, as you were not always willing to come out of your shell and mingle with others, as you have done of late. There was always an element in your makeup which was decidedly unfavorable to new efforts of enterprises of any sort. You have with this, however, another element that should be cultivated, the quality of bringing joy and happiness to the lives of those about you. You might have done well, and even yet might do so, in a business of your own, something connected with millinery or design or affairs in which your fine sense of color and good taste could be utilized. You have much ability, both of head and hands, and much along the musical line. You are adaptable and fit easily into any society or occasion. You are fond of good things to eat and drink; and live much in the physical enjoyment of life. You have always been capricious, an unfortunate trait in anyone, particularly in a woman. May and July are your good months, Friday your lucky day. You were born on Friday. Your colors are steel, purple and brick, your lucky stones a moss agate, emerald or lapis lazuli.

Winnie.—You have much liking for the fine arts, particularly singing, dancing and painting, and are very fond of pleasure and good cheer. With this is combined an aptitude also for mentality, science and business achievement, so that you should have quite a well-rounded life, with these varying characteristics. You are frank, energetic and progressive, always in a hurry and disliking to await results. You are easily annoyed and have a quick temper, but you do not harbor resentment for any length of time. You are very honest and conscientious and a promise with you is very sacred. You are strong in your likes and dislikes, and are apt to despise what you cannot comprehend. You are usually optimistic, and are possessed of excellent health, with the exception of a tendency toward nervous trouble, which may be helped by a cultivation of calmness and repose. You have the happy faculty of minding your own business and keeping your own secrets. You are apt to be misunderstood, as you think and act so quickly that it is difficult for others to follow your ideas. You should try to overlook the faults you see in others and don't depend on gratitude and appreciation, which will often fail you. Remember that it is the specialist that the world needs nowadays. You were born on Thursday. Your color is black.

R. S. T.—You have a highly-developed nature, or will have, as you grow older, with great possibilities which will perhaps not mean overmuch material success for yo , although you should succeed fairly well in business enterprises of any sort, but will enable you to make the most of opportunities for service to others. You have an aptitude for commercial life. It is hard to say whether the particular instrument you mention is the one in which you will shine most, but you have a high degree of musical ability, and should be able, if you practise hard enough, to get into an orchestra. There is no royal road to success in any line, you know. Hard work—elbow grease and concentration—are the requisites for attainment anywhere. You are likely to be always in a hurry and cannot endure to await results. You are practical and executive, easily annoyed, but easily restored to good humour. You are very honest and a promise with you will always be sacred. You mind your own business and keep your own secrets. Try to cultivate the acquaintance of worthwhile people, those who will be true to you and whom you will not annoy by your own individual way of doing things. Have few intimate friends, and do not offend those few. Marry a girl born in April, August or November. Never worry. You were born on Thursday. Your colors are red and brown.

Pudge.—You have a good deal of poise and self-satisfaction in your makeup, with an inclination toward conservatism in mos things and an unfavorable attitude toward new enterprises. You are fond of the study of religion and like delving into occult matters also. With all this, you have a distinct aptitude for matters connected with business, commerce and finance, and you should be able to do well in any endeavor in business life. You have also a leaning toward educational work of any sort, and would make an excellent teacher. You have ability also along musical lines and in nursing. You have quite a variety of occupations to choose from, as you see, in fact, you have the type of character that is able to do almost anything—and knows it. Your difficulty will be in trying not to look down on less favored mortels, as snobbishness and self-superiority are indicated trongly in your reading. You are fond of accumulating money and are sometimes intemperate in eating and drinking. You are apt to be fault-finding at times. Cultivate individuality and self-reliance and check criticism of others and super-sensitiveness. Marry a man born in March, May or August. You were born on Friday. Your colors are steel, purple and brick.

P. N. G.—You have a nice type of character, marred to a small extent by a tendency toward materialism which you can check by cultivating the spiritual side of your nature as much as possible. You have much ability to cope with the circumstances of daily life, and have a good deal of love for your fellow-mortals in your makeup. This is well, as other elements in your character tend to selfishness and self-seeking. You will find your best way of success in life alone the avenue of service to others. You would make a good nurse, but should also make a good wife, if you try always to control a quantity of fickleness and change that does not make for happiness, especially in married life. You are original and have a fine sense of color and good taste, particularly in the execution of fine embroidery work. You do not like housework, and should make this plain before marriage, otherwise it may entail trouble for you later on. If you must do your own work, try to make it as light and easy as possible. You should try to acquire the habit of tolerance of the faults you see in others and learn to control your temper, which is violent when aroused. Be yourself at all times. Manly men admire frankness. Marry a man born in January, September and October, and never flirt after marriage. You were born on Thursday. Your colors are red and brown.

K. A. S.—You have a great deal of physical power, indicating creative power and tenacity, which, if undeveloped, is apt to be pugnacious, coarse and material. You have an inclination toward marriage, and should marry while young—a girl born in July, May, February or November. You have a great regard for the intellect and are a natural leader and thinker. You should do well in any commercial enterprise, but would also make a good agent or teacher. You like moving about and travel, and are a fine worker, but work better for yourself than when harnessed to others. You are kind and have a good disposition. When jolly, you are very jolly, and when miserable you are absolutely wretched, without any real reason. You are kind-hearted, loyal and secretive, making an admirable friend. You are not easily cast down by discouragement and are bound to rise. You draw people to you by a natural law, but dislike any special demonstration of affection. You will be most successful and happiest when you gain self poise and learn to control your temper. Self-reliance and originality in following out your own ideas should be your watchwords. Be careful of falls and accidents to legs, hips and feet. Pay more attention to the arrangement of your hair. You were born on Saturday. Your colors are cream and silver.

Kettle.—You were born with a great liking for pleasure and good cheer, and circumstances point to a career along the lines of business, commerce and finance, in which you should be able to attain much. It is quite an interesting combination, but you have certain weak qualities that will not develop these traits to any great extent, unless you resolve to be self-reliant and study hard how to concentrate. Learn to know opportunity and to improve upon it. Study yourself, select a line that you wish to follow, and then never swerve from it, as you will be inclined to do. You must always remember that perfect honesty and truthfulness are absolutely necessary to the formation of the characters of great men and women. Do not allow materialism and indolence to buy your higher self. You are a natural home builder. Take great care to dress warmly, to guard against rheumatic and gouty tendencies. You have a good memory. You Aere. born on Friday. Your color is black

W. C. B.—You have a good deal of creative power and tenacity, which, if undeveloped, may be coarse and material, but you have also a great aptitude for things relating to business and commerce. The combination of mental and physical qualities of this sort should make you quite successful. You are kind-hearted, generous and magnetic, with noble ideals and a great love for your own people. You like to do things your own way, and are good at planning for others, but do not like detail work. You are fond of rich, highly-seasoned foods and should guard against this liking, as it will cause trouble with your digestion. You are emotional, and, if you are not careful, will blunder in marrying. It would be better for you to wait until you are able to judge unemotionally and then choose a mate who was born in September, October or December. Try to learn unselfishness and patience, for you have a fiery temper which will work you much harm. Avoid having care or worry outside of your business, as divided interest will spell failure for you. Take responsibility as soon as possible, as it will broaden and develop your nature. You were born on Wednesday. Your colors are blue and cream. The day you enquire about, a Tuesday, is one for real personal freedom. Be individual in thought and action on this day, and do not allow others to hamper you in any way.

HER OWN WAY
by a Girl of Today

JOAN GETS A SHOCK.

I realized, however, that I had no time to moralize. I must get out of that office immediately. I must not only see Joan but Lela.

Hastily taking the bottle with its red skull and crossbones from my pocket I put it on the bundle of papers and made my way out through the outer room to the elevator and out of the store.

Going to a telephone booth, I called up Joan on her own private wire, the number of which she had given me the night before. Her maid answered.

"Miss Meredith is still sleeping. May I take the message?"

"Yes," I answered. "Wake her and say that Miss Dean is waiting on the phone for her."

"I cannot give her that message now, miss, I have strict orders not to enter her bedroom in the morning until her bell rings."

"But she must be up by this time of day. It is nearly noon!"

"Yes, miss," answered the maid phlegmatically. "I thought I heard her walking about."

"Then knock at the door and give her my message."

"I couldn't possibly do that until she rings," she informed me again.

"All right," I answered. "You may give her the message any time today or next week, whenever it comes easy for you."

Before I had time to hang up, I heard the words in a frightened voice, "Wait. Wait, here comes Miss Meredith."

"Hello, hello, is that you, Judy?"

It was Joan's voice, and I drew a long sigh of relief.

She might have been answering a girl she expected to ask to the matinee for all the anxiety her tone conveyed.

"Yes, Joan, it's Judy," I answered. "I want you to come down town immediately."

"You want me to come to the store, Judy? Have you got the money?"

"No."

"What do you mean? Can't you get it?"

There was a sudden change in the voice. As I had expected, Joan last night had put all her troubles on my shoulders. She was so used to being protected and helped that by merely telling me her troubles she has become sure that I would take care of her.

Now, however, her voice was full of anguish and I hastened, as I thought, to relieve her mind as soon as possible by telling her that Barry Cornwall was dead.

Before I could get any further I heard a queer sound as though the receiver was dropped and I was shut off.

"Central, central," I fairly shouted, "I have been cut off."

LOVE LETTERS THAT MADE HISTORY

(By Joseph Kaye.)

MARTIN LUTHER AND KATHERINE LUTHER.

The great reformer Martin Luther can hardly be expected to go into rhapsodies of love. But even so he expresses himself in fair language regarding his heart sentiments, particularly when a combination may be made with the wine cellar.

"July 29, 1534.

"Grace and peace, dear Kathie! I do not know what to write you, for Herr Philip and the others are returning home. I must remain longer here on account of the pious Prince.

"You must wonder how long I am likely to stay, or rather, how long you will get quit of me. I fancy Franciscus will set me free, even as I have set him free, but not so speedily. Yesterday I had to take a nasty drink, and I do not like what is not good. I keep thinking of what good wine and beer I have at home, as well as a beautiful wife—or shall I say lord? And you would do well to send me over my whole cellar of wine and a bottle of thy beer, or else I shall not be back until the new beer is ready.

"I herewith commit you to God, along with our young folks and all the servants. Amen. Thy loving Martin Luther."

GAINING CONTROL OF B. C. FOREST FIRES

VANCOUVER, July 22.—(Canadian Press.) — Though several fires were still burning fiercely along the British Columbia coast this morning, conditions are believed to be gradually improving, and with the continued high humidity, several hundred men employed in fire fighting will be considerably aided in gaining control.

Still-water fire is being held inside all lines and is slowly burning itself out in the green timber. Fire at Powell River is being fought vigorously by 200 men and is burning between the town and the Indian village of Sliaman.

STRUCK BY AUTO.

Four Year Old Boy Runs From Behind Truck and is Killed.

OWEN SOUND, Ont., July 22.—Struck by a motor car as he darted across the street, ahead of his mother, four-year-old Arthur McFaul, son of Mr. and Mrs. William John McFaul, was so seriously injured that he died a few hours later in the General and Marine Hospital here. The lad ran from behind a standing car, and was struck by a car driven by Rex Wiggins, moving slowly at the time, as he had just pulled out from a gasoline station. Wiggins was not held.

Alonzo Nelles, aged 87, died in the hospital early yesterday morning from the injuries he sustained on Monday when he was run down in a local blacksmith shop by a motor car.

The Lower Part Is the Brilliant Better Half of a Sleeve

BUTTERICK 6933

Summer sleeves in frocks of the more formal type have to justify their own existence, since the sleeveless or short-sleeved mode is just as correct and infinitely more comfortable in hot weather. Outside of city-street clothes for which the long sleeve is almost obligatory, sleeves in afternoon dresses must furnish their quota of softness and decoration if they expect to be elected. Between elbow and narrow cuff they are the field for contrasting color, embroidery, or an undersleeve effect of eyelet-embroidered batiste, organdy or lace. The frock illustrated, of ashes-of-roses crêpe de Chine, is tucked at the shoulder, shirred at the hip and embroidered with dull Brittany blue above the wrist.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

(By Mildred Marshall.)

Facts about your name, its history; its meaning; whence it was derived; its significance; your lucky day, and lucky jewel.

SARAH.

Sarah,—lately by fashionable consent spelt Sara—is derived from a good old Biblical name and received its right to sturdy religious significance since it was first attached to the wife of the patriarch Abraham.

It is derived originally from a verb meaning to fight or to rule and furnished both the names of Abraham's spouse: Sarai (quarrelsome) was thus converted into Sarah (the princess). If we may judge from the example of the bride of Tobias, the daughters of Sarah were occasionally called by her name and Zare is used as an Eastern name. Similarity of sound has led etymologists to derive the term Saracen from the assumption that this race was descended from Sarah, but their belief is not substantiated.

Sara Beauchamp was one of the first famous women to bear the name. Sarrota de Multon who lived much earlier, was really Sarah, given an Italian translation. Sarah was not popular in England until after the Reformation when the contraction Sally had enormous vogue. At the same time it was adopted as an equivalent for no less than three Irish names, Sadhbh, Sorcha, and Saraid.

France quickly adopted Sarah but insisted on omitting the final H that Biblical translation gave it, evolving from it equally popular form—Sarotte. Sally and Sallie have greater vogue today in this country than any other derivative; in fact they outweigh the more formal and uncompromising Sarah in a country which favors contractions and diminutives.

Sarah has never had great vogue among the poets, who have favored the more approachable Sallie and written graceful little ditties to the fluffy young person we all visualize as a typical Sallie.

Sarah's gem is the beryl, which is considered a talisman against misfortune. Ancient lore has it that the beryl has power to make its wearer unconquerable and increases amiability; it also reawakens love in married people. Saturday is Sarah's lucky day and 5 her lucky number.

ONCE UPON A TIME — THE DWARF'S HILL—VIII — by W. J. ENRIGHT.

ONCE UPON A TIME — THE DWARF'S HILL—IX — by W. J. ENRIGHT.

Did you ever notice that the finest inventions are the most simple?

Not long ago I saw a movie which showed how various things came to be invented, and in every case it was just a crude attempt to do what nature has always been doing.

I will not waste time telling what I saw, but will dwell on some ideas that came to me as I watched the pictures.

Now, you sit down and try this: have your wrists and arms bare. Hold the palm of one hand facing up, and the palm of the other facing down, with the hands one above the other. Now close the fingers, thus locking them in a grip. Now, holding your fingers locked, steady but not strained just watch your wrists and arms as you jerk and pull one against the other, as though you wanted to disconnect. Your fingers are hooked together in a firm grip that will not allow things to disconnect, and with every pull or jerk, you will notice that your wrist takes the first little shock, and that your stronger arm muscles take the greater ones, and that it is all done so smoothly that there is no jolting. This is the way in which all our trains are connected up. The couplers are inventions of iron and steel. They are shaped just like your closed fingers locked together. Now, when the jerk or pull comes, these steel wrists and arms work with an action similar to your own, thus making the smooth action of starting a train of coupled cars. Nature told us how to do it.

The aeroplane starts into the air just as the bird called the roadrunner speeds along. This bird makes wonderful speed along the ground, spreading its wings and tail and using its powerful legs: it is a close connecting link between the perfect bird and the ancient creatures which first learned to fly by such running.

At present, our air machines are away back with the ancient first flying creatures, and have just reached the point where they actually leave the ground. Even the hydroplanes imitate the loons, as they speed over the water, gathering lightness against the wind, until they are finally in the air. Inventions imitate nature.

SAVE YOUR TEETH

Prepared by the Oral Hygiene Committee of Canada, with which the Peterborough Dental Society is Collaborating.

TEETH AND MENTAL BACKWARDNESS.

In their study of crime and mental backwardness, psychiatrists are more and more going beyond the mental weakness to discover the physical frailties responsible for this state.

And among the physical defects, diseases associated with the teeth are found to play no insignificant part.

From the Toronto City Court comes the recital of how a chronic offender was at length sent away for a physical examination. Four bad teeth were found and removed following which the man promptly reformed and never re-appeared on his old charge—'proving nothing of course,' but providing food for much serious thought.

Authenticated reports gathered from various sources have established beyond all doubt that mental backwardness among school children is in a large measure attributable to physical defects, of which the large proportion are from dental sources.

Nor is this altogether unlikely, for where, as in many cases of dental neglect among young children, the disease process has progressed to the abscess stage, the body fluids which nourish the tissues are polluted and poisoned for months and even years, and from these toxic sources, come other physical impairments such as defective eyesight, bad hearing, and stunted growth—defects so obviously causative of mental backwardness in many cases as to need no elaboration.

Further, it is not unreasonable to suppose that many little sufferers from dental diseases, through fear of the dental chair continue to put up with these discomforts which leave the child in no fit shape mentally for his school routine.

While it is true (as the pages of history will show) that many a frail body has housed an intellectual giant, yet for the great class of persons of average talents physical impairments are indeed mental hindrances.

'Mens sana in corpore sano,' continues to be the ideal of attainment for every growing child.

Daily Short Story

TRAPPER JIM

"Then you'd advise us to leave at once?" asked John Brinsmade, his gaze wandering to the cabin windows outside which the snow was falling steadily.

"Not at all," said Trapper Jim quietly, smiling inwardly at their entire misunderstanding of what he really hoped they would do.

"As I see it," spoke up Caryl Brinsmade, "this storm will not amount to anything, and when it's over, the tracking will be wonderful."

"Exactly," said the woodsman. "But there's no reason, if you wish, you shouldn't make Joe's Crossing by to-night, if we start at once. Being cooped up here all day ain't going to be any fun."

He puffed away at his pipe, watching each one of them narrowly. John Brinsmade, crusty old novelist, who had been coming to the North Woods for thirty years. Caryl, his daughter. Ford Evans, his secretary. And Martin James, a friend of Caryl and her father's.

In the past few weeks during which they had hunted together Jim had figured out several things, among which was the fact that both young men were in love with Caryl. He could not see that she favored either, but Jim jolly well knew which man he thought would make the better husband. And it wasn't Martin James. Now Jim, as a rule, refrained from attempting the role of deus ex machina, yet he fancied he now saw a way in which to help the girl make up her mind.

"If you do decide to stay on one more day," he remarked, "I'll take Mr. Evans over to that beaver dam he was hankering to see."

"I vote to stay," spoke up Martin, rather quickly. A whole day with Caryl and Ford Evans off with the guide—it looked good to him. Old Brinsmade, once he got his nose over his manuscript, would be oblivious to the most violent lovemaking.

And it was Brinsmade who cast the vote to stay. "Think I can get in another chapter," he declared. "But won't need you, Evans, until this evening."

Evans was the only one who appeared crestfallen. True, he did want to see the beaver dam, but not at the expense of leaving Caryl at home with his rival. However, he saw nothing else for it but acquiescence.

What with one thing and another, it was later than might have been expected when they returned to the cabin. Jim had mixed up the trails so that they had gone several miles out of their way. Ford, itching to discover just what had heppened during their absence, several times consigned old Jim to various undesirable regions.

The snow ceased to fall in the latter part of the afternoon and a little new moon shone near the horizon.

"Ought to get a moose tonight," said Jim cheerfully. But Ford, running on ahead, had not heard him.

Everything within the cabin appeared as usual, Brinsmade, his chapter ready to be typed, was in great spirits. Caryl sat curled up on the divan, her brown eyes gazing into the fire. Martin was reading.

They greeted the two men vociferously, as if they had been gone for several weeks instead of rather less than twelve hours.

Ford, eyeing Caryl keenly, could not see that she was different than usual, except, perhaps, for a certain happy light which seemed to dance in her eyes and which troubled him a little. Had anything occurred to make her especially happy?

Afterwards, Brinsmade waived the typing of his chapter in order to go deer stalking. As they set forth, Martin fell into place beside Jim, making no effort, as he usually did, to walk with Caryl. And Ford was only too glad to avail himself of an opportunity to talk with her.

The woods were very still—so still that Ford, laying a hand on her arm, fancied he could hear his own heart beating.

"Oh, Caryl," he whispered, "tomorrow we return to civilization. This may be my very last chance to—to tell you how I love you. Oh, my darling little girl, could you possibly learn to care?"

Caryl slipped her hand into his. "I—I care already," she said. "I found that out today, when I knew that I wouldn't mind being snowbound with you for—oh, for hundreds of years together!"

When Trapper Jim knew of it, he just nodded his head and remarked casually, "Good enough! Good enough!"

But later, puffing away at his pipe, he chuckled once again and his thoughts, could one have read them, would have run like this.

"Good thing to let a rival get his proposal out of his system, providing you pick the time and the place for him to do it. Twelve hours cooped up in a cabin—well, it gives a girl an idea of what it would mean to be married for life to him!"

And Ford and Caryl, their hearts light and happy, were dreaming of the morning when they would see each other again.

GOOD NIGHT STORIES

BETTY VISITS A BEAUTIFUL COUNTRY.

"Oh, dear!" Betty sighed as she picked up the broom and started to sweep, "I wish I could go somewhere today."

"Where would you like to go?" whispered a tiny voice, and Betty turned around to find a wee little elfin standing behind her.

"Oh, just any place, Gocomeback," she replied. "Where were you going when you heard me wish?"

"To visit Switzerland," answered the elfin. "It's a wonderful country, you know."

"Our lesson for Monday is on Switzerland," Betty cried. "Please take me with you."

Before Betty had time to think she was sailing over land and sea beside the wee elfin.

"All I can remember about Switzerland is that it's a small country east of France," laughed Betty.

"And a very famous country, too," added Gocomeback as they floated over the tall peaks of a glorious mountain. "Now this is Switzerland and this is the Alps. These are the highest mountains in Europe and the most beautiful in all the world. They fill the whole southern part of Switzerland and separate it from Italy."

Thousands of bright little streams dashed and tumbled down the mountain sides. Its tallest peaks were covered with sparkling snow. Gocomeback told Betty that here was where the great glaciers were formed. They hovered over a river of ice that was moving so slowly Betty couldn't see it moving at all, but Gocomeback told her that some day the cakes of ice would reach the valleys and there they would melt.

"Do you mean it's that warm right now down in the valleys?" asked Betty.

For answer Gocomeback led Betty down the mountain side into great forests of pine and walnut trees. Down they clambered until they came to the lovely vineyards, orchards and wheat fields with quaint little villages scattered everywhere.

Great crowds of merry-making natives were gathered everywhere and when Gocomeback asked the occasion of the merriment, he was told that the peasants, who had their small farms on the mountain sides, were taking their cows and goats up into the pastures on the mountain sides.

"That is a merry time in Switzerland," laughed the elfin. "While up there they will make cheese so they can bring it down and sell it in the villages. Another thing to remember about Switzerland is that it's the home of wonderful watchmakers. Geneva is the greatest market of the watchmakers. Do you know where Geneva is, Betty?"

Betty shook her head.

"Why, on Lake Geneva, one of the largest lakes in the country," continued Gocomeback. "It's a very beautiful town. If we had more time, we'd visit there today, but I hear Mama calling you." Then, like a puff of smoke, Switzerland, with all its beautiful mountains, lakes and villages, all vanished, and Betty stood on her own back porch with her broom in her hand. She thanked the elfin and ran into the house to answer her Mama.

A Fashion Model's Diary

By Grace Thorncliffe

SHE DESCRIBES A LOVELY FROCK FOR THE BRIDESMAID.

Yesterday Gaby and I had quite a bit of excitement. As soon as we reached Madame's shop in the morning there was a telephone call, asking for either one of us.

Gaby answered the phone and soon she burst in upon me with the news that it was an old friend of ours, Madge Brown, who announced that she was to be quietly married in the chapel of a certain church that afternoon, and she wanted both of us to come.

Now Madge's home is in the South, and there were dozens of questions I wanted to have answered, but Gaby had learned little.

"Her mother and sister are with her and she and the groom are going abroad to-morrow. That's all I learned," Gaby informed me. We asked Madame for the afternoon, off and rushed to our respective homes to dress in something a bit festive.

There were not many guests, just the immediate family and friends, and Gaby and I decided it was an awfully good way to have a simple and very nice wedding.

Madge's sister was the bridesmaid, and she looked so very lovely in her frock that I am saving a sketch of it here in my diary.

It is a very simple but very smart, affair of cream georgette, with twin bands of gold tissue ribbon marking the waistline and two big tea roses at the centre. The pleated flounce at the bottom extended up the front to the waistline.

Here I am almost forgetting the bride! Maybe it's because I expect to be many times a bridesmaid! Anyway, she wore a lovely white silk serge suit with a tiny white Bangkok hat, and carried a corsage of lilies-of-the-valley and white orchids.

Cream Georgette Trimmed with Tea Roses Makes This Charming Dress.

Gaby and I went on to the informal reception afterward, and the unexpected thrill of finding ourselves at a wedding we hadn't even heard of the day before added much to our excitement.

We took in every detail so we could tell the girls at Madame's this morning, for all of us always take a profound interest in what the rest of us do.

THREE-MINUTE JOURNEYS

Temple Manning

WHERE CAVEMAN METHODS OF COURTSHIP PREVAIL.

There are few places where women are less valued than among the aborigine tribes in Australia. For there women are looked upon as slaves and are often cruelly beaten. Indeed, woman's sphere seems to be that of beast of burden. It is nothing to see a woman carrying from one home to another a burden consisting of: "a sack containing a flat stone for crushing roots; pieces of quartz for knives and spearheads; stones for axes; cakes of gum from the grasstree for mending old weapons; kangaroo sinews for thread, and needles of kangaroo bone; opossum hair to make girdles; pieces of kangaroo skin for polishing spears; sharp shells serving as knives; yellow and red ochre for painting; a piece of bark for making ropes, ornaments, tinder for making fires; some fat and quartz revered as a relic, and fruits and roots." Besides this she may carry a set of undressed hides and a staff five or six feet long. And, added to all this, she often carries her husband's spears!

She Is Knocked Unconscious.

Before she can make her "debut," or, in other words, before she can be considered as having reached the age of maturity, and therefore be marriageable, she must undergo a fearful ordeal. This consists of cutting great gashes horizontally across her back with a sharp stone. The blood resulting from the wounds is wiped off with large bunches of grass and green twigs that have been warmed near the fire. While the operation is performed, the girl's female friends and relatives make a great to-do, crying and lamenting, to show their sympathy for her sufferings. However, after her wounds have healed, her scars are considered very beautiful by the opposite sex.

Now she is in the marriage market! And she is either purchased from her father or brother or carried off by main force. The latter case is the simple procedure of knocking the girl unconscious by a blow on her head with some heavy weapon, and dragging her off to her future home.

In some of the tribes, however, a girl is betrothed at birth, and woe betide the one who breaks her father's promise. She will be hunted down and will suffer a rather horrible death.

If a woman is considered particularly attractive, she cannot expect to long remain the property of her husband, for some fine day one of her admirers will come and take her off. She will henceforthward be known as his wife until she is again carried off by another aspirant for her favors.

MAN AND BOAT LOST.

Believed To Be Drifting, as Oars Were Found Floating.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., July 22.—Chief of Police Hugh Graham was advised yesterday that a man named J. Scudder had disappeared in a small boat from Desbarats at 11 o'clock Tuesday night and cannot be located. Scudder is a married man, but it is not known whether he is a resident of Desbarats or a tourist, quite a number of whom are camping there.

The missing man went out into the channel, it is believed, as the oars of the boat were found floating down the channel. No trace of the boat can be found, which leads to the belief that he man lost his oars in some way and is now drifting down the channel. Several boats went out from Desbarats in an endeavor to locate the man or his craft, but the search was unsuccessful.

Chief Graham is taking the matter up with the provincial air force here, in an endeavor to secure a plane with which to continue the search.

PILE SUFFERERS

Can You Answer These Questions?

Do you know why ointments do not give you quick and lasting relief?

Why cutting and operations fail?

Do you know the cause of piles is internal?

That there is a stagnation of blood in the lower bowel?

Do you know that there is a harmless internal remedy discovered by Dr. Leonhardt and known as HEMROID, now sold by McDermid & Jury and druggists everywhere, that is guaranteed?

HEM-ROID banishes piles by removing the cause, by freeing blood circulation in the lower bowel. This simple home treatment has an almost unbelievabe record for sure, safe and lasting relief to thousands of piles sufferers, and save the needless pain and expense of an operation. Don't delay. Try HEM-ROID today. It will do the same for you.

SEVERS FINGER.

Another Woman Looking on Expires From Shock—Died in Few Minutes.

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C., July 22 (Canadian Press).—The shock of seeing another woman sever her finger while cutting meat, is believed to have caused the death yesterday of Ella Carmichael, of Queen Charlotte, British Columbia.

Miss Carmichael was standing near Mrs. McLean, her employer, when the latter was preparing the mid-day meal. In her hurry to slice some meat, Mrs. McLean cut off one of her fingers. The Carmichael girl was overcome by shock and died a few minutes later.

Sensational Extra-Innings Fight At Belleville

Petes And Belleville Battle Nineteen Innings To 3-3 Draw All League Records Smashed

Longest Game in Which Any Peterboro Ball Team Has Ever Participated Called on Account of Darkness, After Sensational Pitching Duel Between Heckman and Ouellet—Both Give Wonderful Performance.

ONE UNEARNED RUN OFF EACH PITCHER ONLY SCORE IN LAST TWELVE FRAMES

Both Teams Play Brilliant Ball in the Field and Game is One of the Most Remarkable in History of the Central Ontario League—Hap Harrison's Mammoth Home Run Gets Petes Away To An Early Lead.

By F. D. C.

The Petes and Belleville made baseball history for these parts yesterday at Belleville when they battled nineteen hectic innings to a 3-3 tie, the game being called at 7.25 o'clock on account of darkness, after the teams had fought each other for over four hours of the hottest weather of the summer.

What a ball game!

For nineteen innings Al. Heckman and Johnny Ouellet toiled on the hill top, matching their cunning against that of the batters, and when hits meant runs relentlessly refusing to allow a safety.

The two right-handers, Heckman with the prestige of an unbeaten record this season and Ouellet back in form after a bad start, gave a wonderful exhibition of pitching.

The box score favors Ouellet inasumch as the Belleville twirler allowed but ten hits as against fourteen, only hit or passed two men as against seven, and struck out eleven while Heckman was whiffing ten.

But the box score does not do justice to the wonderful effectiveness of Heckman in the pinches. When Belleville had runners on the bases and a hit would have meant the ball game the Petes' ace rose to his greatest heights. Once he found himself faced with the bases full and none out but he blew his fast ball and broke his curve past the next two batters for strikeouts, and forced the third batter, a pinch-hitter, to pop a harmless fly to Holyman.

It was a great performance by Heckman and an equally sensational feat by Ouellet, who showed his old time speed, a sharp breaking curve and excellent control.

A tie score was after all the most satisfactory outcome of the long-drawn out struggle, for it would have been a pity to see either pitcher have to lower his flag after such a consummate display of pitching cleverness and courage.

Fine Fielding Too.

And back of this superb twirling was great fielding by both teams, and by practically all the players in both line ups. The box score tells its own tale of great defensive work by the two clubs. The rival first basemen each handled twenty-two chances without a skip while the rest of the infield played great ball, Meagher with twelve chances, Holyman with several beautiful plays to his credit and Weir and Helson, the two third basemen, always being prominent. The same story can be told of the outfield, Peterboro's gardeners killing fourteen flies with Wolfe responsible for half of these, while twelve were clutched by Belleville outfielders.

It was an all round display, worthy of the best traditions of the Central Ontario League, and was not only the longest game in the history of the League or in which any Peterboro ball club ever participated, but was in many respects one of the most sensational diamond battles ever staged in Eastern Ontario.

The Petes took the lead in the third when Hap Harrison drove one of Ouellet's fast ones to the fence in deep right, for a home run. He slowed up going into third but still had plenty of time to jog home before the ball came back to the infield.

Peency Mills almost duplicated this feat in the next frame when he rolled one to deep right for three bases, and came home on Blakely's single.

They fought along at 1-1 until the seventh when the Petes scored on an error, two sacrifices and a wild pitch, only to have Belleville tie it up again on Palmer's triple and Ouellet's single.

That should have been the last run of the game so far as the pitchers were concerned for ten scoreless innings followed before the teams each scored an unearned run in the eighteenth, the Petes on an error, two stolen bases and a scratch hit, and Belleville on two errors and a passed ball.

In addition to all this baseball the Belleville fans had the enjoyment of seeing Manager Shiner Johnston ejected from the field by Umpire Woodley at the end of the fifth inning. For fourteen innings the Petes' pilot watched the hot struggle from the grandstand.

The Petes got little help from the umpires and there was much crabbing over decisions, both on the bases and on balls and strikes.

Both Heckman and Ouellet went the full route in great shape, as is shown by the fact that Belleville got but two ingles off Heckman in the last seven innings while the Petes in the same time collected only three off Ouellet.

The Start of the Marathon.

In the first Wolfe was tossed out by Ouellet and Rose and Swanston grounded to Meagher, two close plays.

Weir rolled to Holyman, Rose tossed out Meagher and H. Mills flied to Wolfe.

Weir, in the Petes second, threw out Heckman and Jimmy and Jack Hall.

For Belleville W. Mills bounded to Heckman. Blakely singled over second. Blatchford flied to Jack Hall and Holyman's throw beat Hagerman to first.

Helson, first up for the Petes in the third, fanned. Harrison drove one to the fence in right field for an easy home run. Holyman rolled to Meagher and Wolfe to Weir.

In Belleville's half Palmer bunted to Heckman and was out. Ouellet fanned. Weir doubled to left centre. Meagher drifted an easy one to Jimmy Hall.

Meagher threw out Rose and Swanston in the fourth and after Heckman was hit and Jimmy Hall had punched a single to left, the Belleville second baseman also tossed out Jack Hall.

Belleville tied the score in their half. Harry Mills grounded to Helson but Peeney Mills laced a triple to deep right and scored when Blakely shot a single over second. Blakely stole second and after Latchford was passed the pair pulled off a double steal. Heckman, however, got out of the corner by fanning Hagerman and Palmer.

In the fifth Helson fanned and Harrison was called out on strikes. Holyman was safe on Weir's low throw. Wolfe hit to Weir and Holyman was called out at second. The Petes put up a vigorous howl over the decision and Manager Johnston's protest was so vehement that he was chased to the bench and then off into the grandstand.

In Belleville's half Ouellet flied to Wolfe. Weir singled past third but Meagher lifted a short one to Wolfe and Rose threw Harry Mills out.

Rose opened the sixth by grounding to Meagher. Swanston walked and went to second while Ouellet was throwing out Heckman. Jimmy Hall fouled to Weir.

W. Milis walked. Harrison made a fine stop of Blakely's hard smash and tossed W. Mills out at second. Blakely stole second and continued to third on Swanston's low throw, but Heckman fanned Latchford and caught Hagerman's pop fly.

The Petes took the lead for a moment in the seventh. Jack Hall got a life when Palmer dropped his fly to centre. Helson sacrificed him to second and he went to third after Palmer had caught Harrison's mammoth fly in deep centre. With Holyman up Ouellet uncorked a wild pitch, allowing Hall to score after which Holyman fanned.

Belleville promptly tied it up. Palmer cracked a triple to deep right and scored on Ouellet's single to the same field on which Jack Hall nearly made a shoe string catch. Weir cracked a liner into Heckman's hands and Ouellet was doubled off first. Meagher lifted one to Jimmy Hall.

In the eighth Wolfe rolled to Meagher. Rose singled to right. Swanston's hot shot between first and second hit Rose and he was out, Swanston of course going to first on the play. Heckman struck out.

Harry Mills walked giving Belleville a good start but W. Mills hit to Holyman who stepped on second and then threw the batter out; a fast double play. Blakely also rolled to Holyman, Harrison making a barehanded catch of a low throw.

Starting the ninth Jimmy Hall popped to Ouellet. Jack Hall dropped a single into centre. Helson fanned and Palmer took Harrison's long and high fly in deep centre.

Belleville had a chance. Helson threw out Latchford on a fast play and Hagerman fanned but Palmer doubled to left and Ouellet walked. Weir's best was an easy fly to JimmyHall and the game went extra innings.

Both teams had an opening in the tenth. Holyman fanned but Blakely fumbled Wolfe's roller long enough to lose the speedy centre fielder. Rose fouled to Hagerman. Swanston singled to left centre sending Wolfe to third and taking second on the throw to the difficult corner. It was up to Heckman but with the count 3 and 2 on him he was called out on strikes and the Petes howled strenuously at the decision.

Great Pitching

Belleville had an even better chance but Heckman rose to the occasion. When Meagher walked and Harry and Peeney Mills both singled to centre filling the bases with nobody out the Belleville fans rose en masse Heckman showed his class in the pinch by striking out Blakely and Latchford and getting Goyer who batted for Hagerman on a pop fly to Holyman. The attack subsided for a while after that hectic frame.

For the Petes in the eleventh Jim Hall flied to Palmer, Jack Hall fouled to W. Mills who had replaced Hagerman behind the bat and Helson struck out.

Belleville were just as easy. Palmer popped to Harrison. Holyman tossed out Ouellet and Weir was thrown out by Heckman,

In the twelfth after Harrison had fouled to Harry Mills and Holyman had been thrown out by Ouellet on a bunt Wolfe doubled but was stranded when Rose flied to Goyer in right field.

For Belleville Meagher singled to centre and was sacrificed to second by Harry Mills. Peeney Mills singled to left Meagher being held at second by Jimmy Hall's good attempt. Blakely fouled to Helson. Meagher in attempting to steal third got away too soon and Heckman tossed him out.

Swanston cracked one to left centre in the thirteenth and Latchford after nearly misjudging the drive dived and came up with the ball. The Petes claimed it was a pick up and not a catch but Swanston was called out. Heckman struck out. Jimmy Hall singled to centre but was out stealing, Mills to Blakely.

The Nationals went down in order. Latchford was thrown out by Helson. Wolfe made a nice catch of Goyer's smash and Heckman threw out Palmer.

In the fourteenth Jack Hall flied to Palmer, Helson rolled to Meagher and Harrison drove a long one to Goyer.

For Belleville Ouellet walked and Weir sacrificed, but Meagher flied to Wolfe and Swanston made a fine running catch of Harry Mills' foul.

Holyman, first up in the fifteenth, rolled to Blakely. Wolfe flied to Latchford, and Rose to Palmer.

In Belleville's half W. Mills flied to Wolfe, Rose took Blakely's fly back of second, and Jimmy Hall took care of Latchford's drive to left.

In the sixteenth Swanston flied to Palmer, Heckman was thrown out by Weir and Jim Hall drove one which Harry Mills nailed with one hand.

Goyer gave Belleville a start by singling past Rose, but Palmer bunted a fly to Heckman. Ouellet flied to Wolfe and Weir struck out.

In the seventeenth Jack Hall flied to Meagher, Helson bunted a fly to Ouellet, and Harrison was thrown out by Blakely.

Meagher rolled to Rose. H. Mills drew a walk. W. Mills lined to Rose and H. Mills was nearly doubled off first. Holyman made a running gloved hand pick-up of Blakely's hot roller to force H. Mills at second.

Ahead and Tied Again.

Daring base running by Herb Wolfe gave the Petes the lead in the eighteenth. With Holyman out on a foul to Mills, Wolfe was safe on Blakely's wide toss to first. He stole second and then third, and carried the run in when Rose singled off Harry Mills' knee. Swanston flied to Latchford, and Rose was out stealing second.

And Belleville promptly tied it up again. Latchford got a life on Holyman's fumble. Rose made a good stop of Goyer's smash, and then, mistaking the Belleville coacher for Harrison, threw the ball into the Peterboro dug-out. That put runners on second and third with nobody out. Heckman, however, struck out Palmer, and Ouellet flied to Jack Hall, whose good throw to the plate gave Latchford no chance to score. Then one of Heckman's high ones got away from Swanston, Latchford scoring the tieing run. The winning run was on third, but Heckman fanned Weir.

Heckman started the nineteenth with a single over Blakely's head. Jim Hall popped to Ouellet. Jack Hall flied to Latchford, and Helson struck out.

Meagher opened Belleville's half with a single between short and third and went to second on H. Mills' sacrifice. W. Mills lifted a high one to Harrison back of first, Meagher going to third after the catch. It was up to Blakely, but his best was an easy fly to Jimmy Hall, and Umpire Colling decided it was time to quit, calling the game on account of darkness.

C.G.E. CONQUERS SECORD LADIES

Local Battery Proves Too Strong For Visiting Team.

SNAPPY BALL.

The C. G. E. Ladies' Soft Ball Team, laid away another victory to their credit when they defeated the Secord, Toronto team, to the tune of 17 to 4 at the James Stevenson Park last night. The local battery proved too strong for the visitors. Miss Vincent of the C.G.E. team, held the opposing team in tow, having six strike-outs, assisting in 12 put-outs, and allowing four hits; altogether the C.G.E. girls played snappy ball except for a few misthrows on the part of the infield in the first and the sixth.

The Secord team, although they proved no match for the local girls, did themselves credit in the fine clean sportsmanlike way in which they played. The battery composed of Miss Manual as pitcher, and Miss Marsh as catcher kept their heads throughout from what seemed to be a losing game from the first couple of innings, and only by dint of hard work, kept the C.G.E. from piling up a still larger score. In the infield, Miss Farley, who played leftfield for the Secords, made a fine catch in the deep field, retiring the side in the last of the eighth. The Secords' pitcher had three strike-outs assisted at five put outs and allowed twelve hits.

The line-ups were as follows:

C.G.E.: Taylor 2b; Langton 1f; White 3b; Mortimer c; Greenhalgh ss; Vincent p; Plunkett 1b; Logan cf; Nixon rf.

Secords: Miller 3b; Adams 1b; Campbell ss; Farley lf; Manual p; Cook rf; Graig 2b; L. Miller cf.

CINCINNATI WINS FIRST OF SERIES

Gather 13 Off Hearn and Smith in Free Hitting Affair.

DOUBLE HEADER SPLIT.

NEW YORK, July 22 (Canadian Press).—The Cincinnati Reds annexed the first of their series with Boston at Cincinnati yesterday, 6 to 4. It was a free hitting affair with the Reds gathering 13 off Hearn and R. Smith. Roush, Red centre fielder, gathered in an automobile as his share of the day's proceedings, the gift coming in recognition of a decade's work with the Cincinnati team.

Meanwhile in the Smoky City, the Pirates and the Robins split a double bill. Brooklyn lost the opener, 1 to , and took the second with a verdict of 6 to 2. Petty allowed the Pirates but four hits in the opener, but these were good enough. Songer yielded five. In the second, Vance held the Pirates to six hits.

These were the only National games scheduled yesterday.

RUTH'S HOMER FAILS TO WIN

But Yankees Take Second End of Double Header With Chicago.

RED SOX LOSE TWO.

NEW YORK, July 22 (Canadian Press).—Babe Ruth knocked out his 29th homer of the season yesterday and brought in three runs which were one short of the necessary to give the Yanks the opener with the Chicago White Sox. The Yanks won the second half of a double-header by chasing Edwards off the slab in the eighth. The score was 5 to 4. Koenig knocked a homer in the first.

St. Louis hit heavily at Boston yesterday and the Red Sox found themselves on the short ends of 11 to 1 and 7 to 4 scores. The Sox used three pitchers in each game, but could not stop the assault led by Rice, Williams and Sisler. Jacobson knocked one over the left field bleachers for four bags.

Cleveland blasted Howard Ehmke off the peak in the ninth with six hits and won the combat waged in a heat of one hundred degrees Fahrenheit, 6 to 0. Ehmke had evened affairs with Levsen until the fatal ninth.

Washington and Detroit divided their double header at the capital. The Senators took the second contest 10 to 7 after dropping the first, 7 to 6. Both were swatfests.

BLACK CATS WIN GAME OFF LEAFS

Five Errors of Toronto Figured in Visitors' Score.

INTERNATIONAL.

TORONTO, July 22 (Canadian Press).—Toronto hit the ball hard yesterday, but weak defensive play offset the strong attack and the Leafs lost the second game of the series to Jersey City 9 to 7. All five errors made by the Leafs figured in the visitors' scoring, while a passed ball eased in a run and Jess Doyle forced in another in the ninth when he walked a batter with the bases full. A one-hand catch while on the dead run by Moore of the Skeeters robbed Lena Styles of a home run in the seventh inning. Score:

Jersey City ....202001103— 9 10 0
Toronto ....010022110— 7 15 5

Moss, Parks and Freitag; Faulkner, Doyle and Styles.

Lefty Proffitt gave a swell exhibition of how to pitch a baseball game at Buffalo, and his fellow Bisons played gilt-edged stuff behind him. The Reading Aces were the victims 4 to 1.

The visitors won 18-13, scoring 11 runs in the second inning and sending two twirlers to the showers.

Baltimore and Syracuse played a double header and retired from the Syracuse field with honors even. The Orioles lost the first contest 4 to 3 and won the second 7 to 4.

ZION WINS GAME.

ZION, July 22.—A fast game of softball was played on Tuesday night between Zion and Drummond's Station, the former winning by the score 5 to 4. John Thompson for the losers was the star of the game scoring two runs and also driving in two runners.

DELORO WINS OUT OVER POINT ANNE

Four Runs in Seventh Hands Another Victory To Deloro.

BONAR LAW, Ont., July 22.—At Deloro on Wednesday, with two runs in arrears at the end of the sixth, the homesters forged ahead with four runs in the seventh and won a splendid game by 11 runs to 8. Bert Brown, the Smelters left fielder, played his best all round game for his team, scoring one-half of the eight hits and bringing off neat catches in the field. His consistent walloping was a source of delight to the home crowd. The game was played in intense heat, and it told on the opposing pitcher, who opened it. Ralph, who opened for Deloro, was replaced in the seventh by Shea, and Strachan, who took the mound for the cement lads, gave way to Sonny Green in the same frame. Point Anne scored through Gaulin in the first innings, Deloro going out in order. In the second innings the visitors were given no chances, retiring without score.

In their half Deloro scored thrice. Boudreau flied out to left field. Brown singled. J. Quinn hit, advancing Brown to second as the ball was dropped there by Fielder Hughes walked, filling the bases. Regan reached first on an error, Brown scoring. Ralph's hit brought in Quinn and Hughes. Good hitting in the third by the visiting batsmen, coupled with errors in the field, saw five runs added to their score. Jack added a run for Deloro in their half, following a neat triple from his bat. Point Anne retired in order. Deloro obtained another run in their half. Ralph doubled. Shultz hit to short stop, who threw to third, but dropped the ball by some neat strategy on Shultz's part whilst he ran between first and second, Ralph got home. In the next frame M. Green singled.

Goyer tripled bringing in Green. Maracle grounded out. Bradshaw singled, bringing in Goyer, side later retiring. In Deloro's half, Brown made a lovely three-bagger and came home on an error. J. Quinn grounded out. Hughes hit safely. Regan flied out to shortstop, Ralph reaching first on an error, Shultz fouled out, ending the innings. Neither side scored in the sixth. In the seventh the homsters secured four runs, in which a neat two-bagger from Hughes featured. In the eighth, Brown doubled. Quinn singled, advancing Brown to third, the latter coming home on a sacrifice hit by Regan. It was a game which took many interesting turns and was worthy of being witnessed by a larger crowd than the moderate crowd on hand. Umpires were: McKay at pate, Kerr on bases.

HOW TO SWIM

by Lillian Cannon

THE WAY TO START

When one has learned to remain afloat by moving arms and legs, one has learned to swim in rudimentary manner.

Being able to keep afloat is a confidence breeder which is the biggest thing in swimming.

Now, having attained the upright position and maintained it until one is sure of being able to keep afloat, let the body go forward and the legs go up until the body is at an angle of 45 degrees with the bottom. Then paddle the hands much after the manner used in the upright position but with the arms parallel with the neck and stretched forward.

That is the basic position for almost all strokes and is the starting point of stroke learning.

HISTORY OF WAR MORE ALLURING IN BOOKS THAN STORY OF PEACE

Private Peat Gives a Wonderful Discourse on War at Chautauqua.

BENEFIT OF YOUTH.

Text Books, Home and Church May Abolish Future Wars.

It is doubtful if any more drastic type of speaker has ever addressed an audience in Peterborough than the one who appeared on the Chautauqua platform last night, in the person of Private Harold R. Peat, giving a lecture based on the same subject as his latest book, "The Inexcusable Lie." It is seldom that attendants at a lecture have the opportunity or hearing a man who has all the resources of dramatic delivery, wide education and a deep personal experience of that of which he speaks, pour out his soul in a sincere effort to prevent a recurrence of tragic happenings. It was for the benefit of the growing youth of the nation that Private Peat spoke last night, but it was the seniors of the audience that sat spellbound throughout his discourse, quivering under the lash of a sarcastic tongue, and reacting to the thrill of wonderfully portrayed word pictures.

"I believe it is just as natural for your little boy, be he English or German, American or Canadian, and your girl, to grow up to hate war, if the real truth of war were revealed to him, as it is for him to hate snakes. That is, if he were told the truth and all the truth about it, and not the glorious, romantic bunk that is handed out to him now."

It was a crowd of ove r 500 people who listened to Private Peat last evening, in a lecture which tore the veil of glorious adventure from the face of war, and revealed the brutal, terrible face beneath.

"I am not going to speak much of the last war. I think people of the world to-day are more profoundly interested in the next war. How can we prevent this war? It is not going to be done by resolutions of the Rotary or Kiwanis Clubs or by Women's Clubs or by Great Britain. The only way in which we can prevent it is by an organized public opinion, and that will never transpire as long as little children are taught in their text books that war is a glorious, romantic adventure, and as long as they realize that monuments are erected to soldiers, and not to great teachers or preachers or great artisans or artists."

Wars Always Justified

"You can search any of the text books of the world, and I defy you to find one reference in any of them to where the country of which the books treats was ever the aggressor. Your country has always been on the right side. Histories do not give any idea of war. They are usually written by men who are over fifty years of age, which is a splendid time for a man to begin to write history. But the true story cannot be written save by the man who has lived it.'

"As I read the dynamic story in the text books of how Germany crushed Austria, I can readily understand how the little Kaiser must have perused it with delight, and exclaimed, "Gee, wasn't it great!" The child who dreams of a Croix de Guerre or a D.C.M. or a V.C. medal, knows well that he will never obtain it by studying to be a great teacher, or preacher, or carpenter or artist. He knows that he will get it by disobeying one of the commandments of God: "Thou shalt not kill." When we make the story of peace read to the child's mind as just as alluring, as attractive, and romantic as we now make the story of war, then we shall have done with war. As it is now, we have a war every school generation, just about every fifteen years. The growing generation knows that peace and its avocations make a humdrum and thankless business. It is only when we are killing by the wholesale that we are applauded.

"No country was ever on the wrong side in any war, according to the text books of that country. No country ever provoked or fought an offensive war in the history of the world. As far as it was concerned, the wars just happened, like spontaneous combustion. And they always minimize the defeats and elaborate the victories of their wars. You will find in the German text books ninety pages descriptive of the glorious victory of their land in the War of 1870, while the French text books devote one and one-half pages to it. The American text books give forty-six pages to a recital of the victory of 1776, while the English books of eight grades give a third of a page to it, and the account relates how the colonies were not required at that time, and how the trouble started through "King George, the Hanoverian." Canadian text books give forty-two pages to the description of the victory over the Yankees in 1812, and, by the way, we were the only people in the world who ever whipped the Yankees, but, out of sixty-seven American text books used in the schools, only seven even refer to these engagements in which the Canadians were victorious.

"Whether you are talking about God or the devil, about peace or war, about evolution or the growing of weeds, you will never know more than you have been taught about any of these things, plus your experience in any of them. I would say boldly that war, as war really is, has not been taught to the children of the world. We speak of it as a glorious, romantic adventure, but we do not tell our children of its horror and disease, of the hell it really is of filth and immorality and vileness. They hear of one Glory Cross, but not of the ten thousand little wooden crosses that are its price.

"Nothing can cause war until the world is ready for war, until the heart and the mind are filled with the thoughts of war. We have causes of war every day, but we do not go to war about them because we are not yet ready for another war. We have in this world what we want, either consciously or unconsciously. It takes about one school generation, just about fifteen years, to forget the horrors of war, and then, whether it be an economic, a dynastic, an imperialistic or a national fuse that will light it, then we have a war.

The "Blooming" Archduke

"Sometimes the most asinine thing provokes a war," said the lecturer, going on to describe the occurrence in 1855 when one Englishman, murdered in Russia, followed by an insult to the flag and lurid headlines in the paper, caused 25,000 young men shouting "Hurrah!" and demanding war, to march through the streets of London. 'Was it because they hated Russia?" asked the speaker. 'No; they did not hate the Russians. They were ready for war, and it only took the spark to ignite the fuse. Over in Russia there were probably the same number of men marching and shouting "Hurrah!" in the same way. The happiest days in the history of any war are the first and last days; the first, when the men know nothing about what they are going into, and the last when everyone is happy that it is over.

"The average young man in the Dominion of Canada, or in England, or in Germany, or in Russia, or in Australia, was as much concerned with international politics in the year 1914 as a grasshopper is with the boll weevil. He know nothing about it. He was ready for war, that was all, and the murder of one blooming archduke and his wife, away over in Sarajevo, was the spark that ignited the fuse.

"Were we eager to go because we were patriots? No, we didn't hate the Germans. We had nothing against them. We do not go to fight because we hate. That comes later. One learns to hate what one fights with. In 1861 Abraham Lincoln asked for 75,000 men in ninety days, and he got 484,000 men in the first four days. But two years later the Draft Act was necessary, to make them go to fight. In 1914, Sir Sam Hughes asked for 10,000 men. He got 122,000 offers, of which 33,000 were accepted and the men sent to Valcartier. But in 1916, they had to pass the Draft Act. "When I volunteered, I did not know that a gun could shoot two miles. I knew less about real fighting than a jack rabbit. I went because I thought I was going to have a good time, because they said we couldn't lose, and because I knew that my side was always right. I had been taught these things in the text books. And every boy in Germany and Russia and all the other countries that fought went for exactly the same reasons.

'If an archduke were kil'led tonight, do you think the world would go to war tomorrow? No. But still we are the same people, and we have more economic reasons for going to war today than we had then. We know, too, that we have made such strides in armaments that where we killed fifteen men in 1914, we could today kill 10,000 of them. And we have more soldiers in the world today than we had in 1914, Can you imagine Mussolini pulling the stuff he is doing today in 1914 and getting away with it without a war, or Mustapha Kemal Pasha, or the Americans with their Japanese Exclusion act. No, the stage is set, the soldiers are waiting, and the mannikins are ready. But we lack the spontaneous will and spirit to have a war, so we don't have one. But the desire will revive again, the philosophy of Jesus Christ will be forgotten, and the idea that we are always right will rule again.

"How many French boys in the last four years have gone to war with the Riffs? Of course, they have the Draft Act in force in France, but there are 200,000 men in addition to the drafted soldiers who went to war in 1914. Today, there are only 1,600 additional who have volunteered for the Riffian war, and eleven Americans and two Canadians.

"Abolish armaments and you will not abolish war. Men fought with clubs and pickaxes when they could not get anything else to war with.

"The text books of the nation, the home and the church are the three elements that will abolish war. The abolition of military camps will do no good. There places are good for the discipline they inculcate in the young. But war is in the first place in the hearts and souls of men. We can only abolish war when we come to hate it as much as we hate snakes. Our Egyptian forefathers did not hate snakes. They kept them to wrap around their bodies to keep them cool, because they hadn't brains enough to invent ice. And the East Indians of today regard snakes as sacred. But the most popular statesman in Canada wouldn't even get to first base if he demanded that each citizen of the Dominion should have a personal snake as a pet, and I believe it is just as natural for boys and girls to learn to hate war, if they knew the truth of it, as they have learned to hate snakes."

The Vileness of War

Speaking of the 272,000 maniacs that the late war created, to dwell for the rest of their days in asylums, Private Peat said: 'It was not a war against Hans and Fritz that our boys waged, but a war between the beautiful and the dammed. I hate war for its vileness, and because it is the most stupid and the most asinine thing that the mind of men ever invented as a sin against himself. When we were fighting, we cussed a lot. The war was the greatest university of swears that the world ever saw, and every man graduated with honors But when you murder, you do it in the language of murderers. It was the greatest black eye to christianity that the world ever saw within the past two thousand years. I have travelled in thirty-six countries since the war ended, and I must say, in passing, that some nation must keep the Sabbath day holy among the lot. You here in Canada are the only ones that seem to do it—(applause)—at least on the surface, anyway. But you see the people everywhere going out on Sunday, not to listen to the Word of God, but to frequent the jazz halls. There is apathy toward religion, engendered by the war. They say the boys prayed in the war. I only saw three men praying during the time I spent in fighting. You do not pray when you know that you have killed a man. We cannot say truthfully we are sorry for having broken God's commandment, "Thou shalt not kill," because we are there to kill. My captain had been my Sunday School teacher away back in Edmonton in the Methodist Church on Grace Street, but the day I killed my first man I saw him blow out the brains of five Germans who were shrieking "Kamerad" at him. When I started writing home to my mother, I stopped to think of the mothers of the men I had killed, and to wonder if they loved their sons like she did her boy.

"I tried to imagine Jesus killing Germans, and I couldn't do it. I tried to imagine Him as a German captain, and it wouldn't do either. Tonight, they are going to jazz emporiums, not because they doubt God, but because they have reason to doubt the things that represent God.

"What is the biggest thing in the world and in your life? Is it God or England, God or Germany, God or Canada? That is the question to answer. We cannot say that we believe in God and promise to love Him and then go out to kill other Christians. You can't say that you love God when you don't do it. If the same language of insult that is used constantly to God were used in connection with the Stars and Stripes or the Union Jack, the men who committed the offence would be taken out and shot."

Private Peat went on to tell the story of his friend Jim, a Canadian like himself, who went mad in the trenches, and is now in an asylum at Ponoka, Alberta. It was a dramatic recital, vividly told, with sincerity and terrible fervor.

The conclusion of the lecture was greeted with an outburst of prolonged, enthusiastic applause.

Programme of Entertainment

In the morning, the children's entertainment was provided by Visocchi, the Accordionist, whose music was much enjoyed by the juniors, and the afternoon programme, with the prelude to the evening lecture, was given by the Herrick Entertainers, Mr. Herrick and Miss Andreas presenting a pleasing and varied entertainment of songs and music.

In the afternoon, they gave some humorous selections from "Pinafore," Miss Andreas sang "Maybe" and the charming little "Birthday Song," also "Smile a Little Bit," the latter getting much applause, and Mr. Herrick was greeted with much enthusiasm in his renditions of "Minnie," the shop girl, and "Maggie, Come Right Upstairs." The two gave a duett in unison, singing separately "By the Waters of Minnetonka" and "Dinah."

Miss Andreas sang the "Happy" song from "No, No, Nanette," and Mr. Herrick brought down the house with his burlesque in falsetto and bass voices, of two grand opera pupils, in "Ah, Che le Morte." This last number was repeated, by request, for the evening programme, which opened with Miss Andreas appearing as an old fashioned girl, singing "Carry Me Back to Ole Virginny" in very swet voice. "When You and I were Young, Maggie," sung as originally intended by the lady, and ragged by the gentleman, was another burlesque feature, and Miss Andreas gave "Smilin' Through" and Mr. Herrick funny bits in "I'm Happy Go Lucky, There's Nothing on My Mind," and "Poor Papa," to much applause. The finale was another falsetto imitation of "The Mocking Bird." These entertainers were heartily applauded, and deserved much credit for the way in which they carried through their two programmes.

Tonight sees the closing of the Chautauqua programmes for this year, with a wind up in the famous Solis' Marimba Band.

GEORGE DUNCAN — HIT DOWN ON BALL.

Do you "hit the ball down?" Have a look at the shafts of your mashie and iron, and if they are bent forward, toward the face of the club, you play the push shot. Do you take turf when you play your mashie? It is essential to the proper playing of the push for if there is not a divot hole between where your ball was and the hole, you have not hit down at the ball.

Many players find it hard to believe that they will get the ball away from the ground unless they scoop the ball up therefrom. This is attempted by an upturning of the wrists, at the moment of impact, and such a stroke can only be attempted by player who has no faith in the fact that the face of his mashie is so made as to call for nothing else than the opportunity to do its own work.

The average player finds it hard to bring himself to believe that he can make a decent shot by hitting the ball down and, as a consequence, he tries to hit the ball up, utterly faithless in the shape of the mashie head or unwilling to think that the loft will do its work.

This faithlessness in that which exists, and is there to be seen, costs many a player a stroke when shots are being made from a distance of 100 yards or so.

Diamond Disputes Decided

By Billy Evans

What happens if the batsman in swinging at ball for third strike misses, but the ball strikes his person and eludes the catcher? Have runners the right to advance?

* * *

The batsman is out, if in taking a third strike he misses the ball, same coming into contact with his person.

The ball immediately becomes dead when such a thing happens and no bases can be run.

The umpire should immediately call the batsman out. If any runners advanced, due to the fact the ball eluded the catcher, he should send them back to their original bases.

In such a play, the batsman is always out and no bases can be run.

BOY LOSES LIFE CATCHING MINNOWS

Three Year Old Boy Overbalances and Falls Into Bay.

TORONTO, July 22—While catching dead minnows floating on the water on the bay side of Ward's Island, near the Eastern Gap, yesterday afternoon, three-year-old Douglas Elder, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Elder, 13 Channel Avenue, Ward's Island, overbalanced and fell into the bay and was drowned. The body of the unfortunate boy was recovered by Officer Hughes and his crew, of the Toronto Live-Saving Department, in twelve feet of water, after about ten minutes' dragging, and taken to the Morgue. No inquest will be held. No one witnessed the tragedy.

The boy had left home as was his wont to play on the beach. With him on this occasion was his cousin, Johnny Harris, aged seven, who was visiting the Elder home for the day. It was not until the lad had been absent from home for almost two hours that his parents, seeing young Harris alone, began to get worried. They asked the Harris lad where Douglas was, and Johnny answered that the last he had seen of Douglas was when they were playing together near the wharf. Douglas, he said, had been with him catching minnows, but had wandered away.

This led to the belief that the missing boy had wandered to another part of the island. The life-savers were notified. Superintendent Lang sent out Officer Hughes and a crew in a speed boat, and on arriving there a search of the island was made. This proved futile. But on learning young Harris' story of how the Elder boy had been with him at the wharf, the life-savers came to the conclusion that the missing lad had fallen into the water. They grappled and the body was recovered. Drs. Chambers and Breslin of 17 Adelaide Street East, and 308 Lake Shore, Centre Island, respectively, were called, and, assisted by the life-savers, worked over the unconscious lad for over two hours, but in vain.

The spot where the body was recovered was one of several patches of deep water used by boaters to reach the shore. Generally the water along the bay side of Ward's Island is shallow.

The tragedy has cast a shadow over the Ward's Island community. The Elders are popular, and have been in the habit of taking the lead in arranging all kinds of entertainment among the residents there. Several events had been scheduled for last night, but when the news of the lad's death was received, the whole programme was postponed.

HOLLYWOOD.—For years theatergoers have been amused by slap-stick, pie-throwing comedies of the silver sheet. But these farcical films have been given an unimportant place on the theater program.

A new comedy era is now ready to be offered movie lovers—an age which is Hal Roach's "brain child." Roach often dreamed of the time when comedies would an equal place with feature pictures. Through his own ceaseless efforts, his dream is about to be realized.

Hal Roach's present prominence is due largely to his "Our Gang" two-reelers. While other producers stuck to custard pie as a means of drawing laughs, Roach rounded up his "gang" and started making kid comedies. As a tribute to his success, practically all comedy producers are now making some child pictures.

"I believe theater managers do not appreciate the drawing power of comedies," says Roach. "When a movie fan picks up a paper to help him decide what show to attend, the only information he can find is the name of the feature picture and its star. If he doesn't like that particular luminary, he probably will go to some other theater.

"My plan is to make comedies that will be advertised by theaters as an aid in drawing patrons. For this reason I have picked some of the best known stars for our two reelers. Lionel Barrymore, Theda Bara, Mabel Normand and Charley Chase have all played in comedies which will soon be released."

Roach plans to make 40 pictures during 1926, In many of these will be seen some of the leading film players. The young producer believes that his pictures will be funnier than ever because he has discovered that some of Hollywood's most dramatic actors and actresses can be equally as good comedians if given an opportunity.

THEATRE

AT THE REGENT

A MADLY MERRY MYSTERY COMEDY.

Marie Prevost romps gaily through a madly merry photoplay in "Seven Sinners," the Warner Bros. Classic of the Screen, which opened yesterday at the Regent Theatre for a run of two days.

The seven sinners of the title are seven crooks who get themselves imprisoned by a burglar-alarm system in a Long Island mansion. And Miss Prevost is at her best as one of the amusing gang of criminals. The others include Clive Brook, John Patrick, Mathilde Brundage, Claude Gillingwater and Heinie Conklin.

Lewis Milstone, who wrote the scenario for Miss Prevost's last success, "Bobbed Hair," has written the new story, in collaboration with Darryl Francis Zanuck, and has likewise directed. He has turned "Seven Sinners" into thrilling, hilarious entertainment.

SECRETS OF STARS INSIDE BASEBALL

By Billy Evans

BY TY COBB.

World's Greatest Ball Player.

All great batters in a sense conform their swing to the style of pitching the opposition offers.

It is rather foolish to try to pull any so-called brainy stuff at the bat with a star pitcher working who has lots of stuff.

It is foolhardy to try to pull or place hits when Walter Johnson is the opposing pitcher and going at top speed. It just can't be done with any degree of certainty. When Johnson was in his prime it was practically a physical impossibility.

When an opposing pitcher has a world of stuff, simply hit straight away. In other words, make an effort so to time your swing that the ball will be driven directly through the pitcher's box.

After all, under most conditions, the greatest open space on the infield is the vacant territory between the positions assumed by the shortstop and second baseman.

Great batters, also noted for their speed, have a distinct advantage in piling up base hits. My speed enabled me to turn in many a base hit that otherwise would have been an ordinary out.

The batsman who has speed can fake a bunt and then, after pulling in the third baseman on the fake, can hit through him.

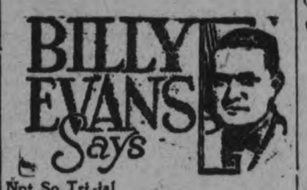
Pick the ball you like best to hit. I often refuse to swing at a ball which I realize is going to be called a strike, simply because it is practically impossible for me to carry out my batting intent when swinging at such a ball.

When you get a pitcher in the hole, never fail to take advantage of the situation. I am strong for hitting the "cripple." That is the baseball slang for the next ball pitched with the count two balls and no strikes.

The pitcher being in the hole, he must come over with the next ball. Most pitchers have a habit of cutting down on their stuff at such a time. In other words, the two and nothing ball, should be easier to hit because it isn't quite up to the pitcher's standard.

Batters who take the next ball, if it is over the plate, when the count stands two balls and no strikes, seldom achieve much of a reputation as batsmen. In so doing, they let the pitcher crawl out of the hole his wildness has dug for him.

BILLY EVANS Says



Not So Tri-al

A piece of adhesive tape once threatened to upset the inner workings of the American League.

This is simply offered in rebuttal to those who believe the importance of the legalizing of resin is being overplayed.

While it is to be hoped that nothing unpleasant will result because of the difference of opinion in the majors over resin, there is always that possibility.

The rules say that it is legal for a pitcher to use resin. Four of the five larger leagues have already gone on record against it.

Already it has been shown how it would be possible to create some very embarrassing situations, if a pitcher chose to demand his rights, since the final ruling by the powers-that-be says the use of resin is optional with the pitcher, not the league.

But to get back to the adhesive tape problem.

* * *

Unusual Protest

For a number of years Pitcher Tom Zachary of the Washington club then, but now with the St. Louis Browns, always had a small piece of tape, inch wide, wrapped around the first joint of the second finger of his pitching hand.

For a time no one paid any attention to the tape, the impression being that Zachary had an injured finger and was merely protecting the cut or abrasion.

One day Ty Cobb decided that Zachary was using the tape in order to get a better break on his knuckle ball. Cobb insisted the knuckle made rough by the tape caused the ball to break more deceptively.

Zachary claimed he was using it merely to protect his finger that had a tendency to split at the knuckle about the third inning of every game.

* * *

Umpire Fussed

Cobb's rather unusual pleas had the umpire up a tree. He had to reach a decision as to whether the use of tape on the pitching hand was illegal or not.

Manager Harris insisted that the finger was injured, that Zachary was using the tape to protect it. At the time Harris happened to have an injured finger that was bound up with twice the amount of tape Zachary was using.

He contended that if Zachary was refused permission he likewise should not be allowed to use.

The umpire in charge of the game caused Zachary to remove tape, since the finger seemed in no way injured, refused to allow him to pitch with the tape on the second finger.

The game was resumed after a long protest. Whether it was the delay that caused it or the lack of tape, Zachary gave something like four bases on balls before being taken off the rubber and Detroit won the game in the first inning.

* * *

Tape Is Barred

Washington was in the thick of the 1924 pennant fight at the time and made a loud howl to President Johnson. Detroit did likewise.

The Washington club contended that since the umpires had permitted Zachary to use adhesive tape for several years without any objection, it was unfair to deprive him of it in the home stretch of the American League race.

Arguments and pressure were brought to bear by both sides. President Johnson, always against anything that savored of trick pitching, decided Zachary or any other pitcher could not use tape. It might make for cheating.

* * *

Pitching Suffers.

Zachary at the time contended it didn't help his pitching, other than to keep his finger from breaking open because of continued use of the knuckle ball.

His real complaint was that it was unfair to ban its use at so important a spot, the thick of the pennant fight, the crisis of the race. For a time the ruling handicapped his pitching.

Zachary's great work later on, particularly in the world series, proved his contention, but for a time a two-inch piece of adhesive tape threatened to make plenty of trouble in the American League.

There is no telling what the resin will do.

THREE BANDITS CAUGHT IN MESH OF POLICE NET

Two Said To Have Robbed Milwaukee Bank of $300,000.

PAWN BROKERS.

Others Charged With Being Head of Gang of Model Robbers.

NEW YORK, July 22 (Canadian Press.—The police net holds securely in its mesh three alleged big time criminals from the Middle West, where combined depredations were said to approximate $1,000,000.

Two of the men who were arrested yesterday were said to have operated a gigantic system whereby loot from banks and brokerage houses was palmed off on country banks as collateral for loans. They were held for the police of Milwaukee, where it was said they had robbed a bank of $300,000.

The other man was charged with being the head of a gang modelled after the notorious Whittemore band and was said to have directed robberies which totalled $400,000 in the past six months. He asked to be sent back to Chicago, where he said he had shipped a trunk full of jewels yesterday, and where he said he could give the District Attorney valuable inofrmation about a bootleg ring.

The Milwaukee men were Joseph Sternfeldt alias Arthur Kassin, and Setrnfeldt alias Arthur Kassin, and George Cohen was the Chicago man.

deliverance of the boys. The sentences of the prayer were the last he was heard to utter before he dropped off.

"Ray Allan, who was known as an exceptionally good swimmer, started to swim for the shore in an attempt to save the lives of the remainder of the party," Mr. Manley told The Examiner. "He disappeared from sight in the darkness, and is listed with the missing."

Disappeared at Once.

Some of the boys disappeared from the canoe at once after being plunged into the water, one of the survivors said, and the others dropped off one by one as the chilly water sapped their energy. All four who came back from the depths are agreed that Shea-Butcher and Mardall sacrificed themselves for their companions. Mardall's father was drowned in the sinking of the Empress of Ireland.

Survivor's Story.

W. Wigginton, fifteen year old Toronto boy, who was with the ill-fated party, and miraculously reached shore, told a story of almost unprecedented horror. There have been many drowning tragedies in the lakes in Peterborough district, but the widespread sorrow caused by Tuesday's terrible accident has never been equalled.

Wigginton could not tell why the canoe upset. "It just turned over," he said. "The water was rough and it became almost impossible to hold on to the canoe. Some of the fellows were shaken off by the waves, and after swimming a little piece they sank. None of them yelled....they just let go and sank. Shea-Butcher and Mardall saw there wasn't room for everyone to get on the canoe, so they jumped off and sank."

Edwards was unable to swim, Wigginton said, or was not a good swimmer, and evidently missed his hold on the canoe. He was one of the first to disappear, though Waller made a heroic attempt to drag him near. The weight of the remaining fourteen seemed to pull the canoe down until it seemed it would sink. "It was not very dark at first," Wigginton continued, "but then it got very dark until the moon came up. We did not talk much to each other."

Search Party Formed.

Provincial Constable Hayston Storey left camp last night after a strenuous day leading search parties along the shores and in dragging the water. The lake at the place of the tragedy is about forty feet deep, and only systematic dragging can be expected to recover the bodies. An appeal is being made to-day to Peterborough and Toronto to assist the Lindsay authorities. Coroner Dr. Logan, of Lindsay, assumed charge of the search parties, assisted by town and county police and the fire department. It is thought that some days may elapse before the bodies are recovered.

Arthur Bacon Safe.

Arthur Bacon, 202 Edinburgh street, who was at the camp, did not go out in the canoe. He helped to keep the fire going to guide the canoe party back to the pier. It was not until The Examiner reporter telephoned his mother at one o'clock this morning that she was assured of his safety.

QUEBEC, July 22. — Noranda's position in regard to ore being developed is improving every day. This will materially assist Noranda as such a high-grade vein will help a lot in sweetening up some of the lower-grade ore. With the railroad well on the way in we will see intensive activity at this property in the line of smelter construction and increased underground operations. The importance of the arrival of the railroad must not be overlooked by those who are investing in Quebec gold properties. Some issues which are selling now at a very low price will undoubtedly take a considerable jump. This will be due to the fact that many visitors will go in and if they get a look at Noranda, Amulet, Waite Montgomery, Alderson McKay, the public interest in the district is going to increase rapidly.

Amulet.

Ore is now being developed rapidly at this property and the first estimate as to tonnage and value is being shot to pieces. Plans for the concentrator are well under way and we would not be surprised to see this property producing very early in the coming year. With production so close, and considering the way the proneryty is developing, it looks to us like an attractive speculation at present prices. Just recently an important ore body, showing widths up to 18 feet, has been located by diamond drilling. This is an entirely new ore body for Amulet.

Recent drilling has located an important ore body. We have not the details on this as yet. Now that surface work can be intelligently carried on, we look for much better results from drilling. This is undoubtedly turning out to be the case.

Waite Montgomery.

Have men working on surface, stripping and trenching and bounding the already known huge deposits on this property. No intensive mining or construction programme will likely be carried on before the railroad comes in.

Duprat.

Stadacona.

Have several crews of men doing considerable work on their various holdings and have uncovered some rather promising showings.

Laval-Quebec.

Continuing surface explorations and preparing to diamond drill. Interesting showings have been uncovered recently and diamond drilling has a fairly good chance of locating ore of importance.

General Note on Quebec.

The most interesting developments recently have been the discovery of a large and important looking deposit of copper on the Halliwell group. This, along with other finds mentioned above, is causing Quebec district to take on a very important aspect. The possibilities are showing more and more to be great and there is no question now but that a very important copper producing area has already been shown to exist and is constantly being extended.

Short Selling On Market Forces Prices Downward

NEW YORK, July 22 (Canadian Press).—A sudden outburst of short selling turned the course of prices downward this afternoon after an early display of strength. In the absence of any definite news to account for the decline, it was attributed in some quarters to revived rumors that the New York Federal Reserve Bank would increase the rediscount rate at its meeting late today, but call money remained unchanged at 6 per cent., with "outside loans" reported as low as 3 3-4.

Selling was strong on steels, equipment and high-priced industrial specialties. United States Cast Iron Pipe quickly lost its early 6½ points gain and dropped two points below yesterday's final quotation. Sloss Sheffield Steel, Hudson Motors, Atlantic Coast Line, Woolworth and Westinghouse Air Brake were carried down two to four points.

NEW SUPERINTENDENT OF THE EXAMINER PLANT

Mr. H. E. Mounstephen, of Los Angeles and Toronto, Has Been Appointed.

Mr. H. E. Mounstephen, who has been in Los Angeles for the past two years, has come East to join the Examiner organization as mechanical superintendent.

Mr. Mounstephen has had a great deal of practical experience in the job printing and newspaper business, both in Canada and the United States.

He learned the job business thoroughly in Toronto, with such well-known firms as Douglas Ford and Co., Byrant Press, Limited, and Mills-Bingham Printing Company, producers of fine printing.

In 1910 he went West, holding various positions in news and job departments of several large plants, subsequently becoming mechanical superintendent of the Vancouver Sun.

This experience, together with that gained as Ontario representative of the Lanston Monotype Company of Philadelphia, and as Southern California representative of the same company, and more recently as associate of the Graphic Arts Appraisal Company of Los Angeles, has given him a thorough and varied knowledge of the printing business in all its departments, and he brings with him many new ideas which will be of service here.

Mr. Mounstephen, with his wife and little son, Jack, have taken up residence for the summer months on Walton Street.

HEAT WAVE HITS EASTERN STATES

New Yorkers Have One of the Hottest Days on Record.

NEW YORK, July 22 (Canadian Press).—All the relief the Easterners could get from the heat to-day was in reading about rain and increasing cool weather in the West. The Weather Bureau again predicted showers for night, but as the same prediction had been made yesterday and failed to materize small comfort was derived from it.

Through almost all the Eastern States the heat started on an upward rush this morning which bade fair to pass yesterday's records.

In New York City the mercury leaped up 10 degrees between 10 and 11 o'clock, touching 91. Prostrations were reported with increasing frequency.

CONTINUED CLAMOR OCCASIONS WORRY

Afraid It Will Lead To Ill Feeling Between States and Britain.

LONDON, July 22 (Canadian Press)))—The debate in the House of Commons on Monday regarding the British debt settlement and despatches from the United States reoprting irritation there at the continued clamor of a section of the British and French press with regard to the attitude of the United States on the situation has led to an extended editorial discussion of the matters here. It is clear that there is uneasiness in some quarters lest what is considered continual carping over the position of the United States will lead to a widespread ill feeling in Great Britain and that country.

POINCARE CABINET BOOSTS CURRENCY

Confidence Being Restored in France as Result of His Acceptance.

PARIS, July 22 (United Press).—National and international confidence apparently was being restored to the franc to-day as a result of Raymond Poincare's acceptance of President Doumergue's invitation to form a Cabinet of national union to lead France in her financial verdun.

The franc opened at 215 to the pound sterling and 44.20 to the dollar, quickly rising by 10 a.m. to 210 and 43.8.

It frequently has been predicted that Poincare's return to power would have such an effect, although neither politicians nor the public is aware of his financial programme. Poincare's acceptance of President Doumergue's invitation to form a Cabinet apparently has restored some of the confidence which rapidly slipped away from the franc during Herriot's brief appearance.

Tonight sees the ending of the Chautauqua programmes in the big tent. The artists on this circuit have been busy since April 27th, when they opened in Georgia, and will close within three weeks' time, at Watertown, Indiana. The electrical gentleman, Mr. R. B. Ambrose, who gave "The Science Story" of the first night, and whose visit here was coincident with a severe electrical storm, received a telegram wishing him good luck from Canadian friends before his visit to Canada. Near the border, he was held up by bandits and relieved of $4 in cash, his purse being fortunately stowed away in a corner overlooked by the thieves. An attribute of the staff in charge of the programmes given by the Chautauqua here this year, is their politeness.
